Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. The request made for this money was not accompanied by information which would enable the committee to grant it. Some of the vessels that are utilized up in Alaskan waters a portion of the year must be laid up for repairs when they come back. They can not be utilized the entire year. Various estimates have been presented as to the cost of certain things, but the entire information furnished the committee was so unsatisfactory that we could not justify an increase of this appropriation at this time, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FALCONER. Did not the Commerce Department present an argument showing that these boats used up in Alaskan waters in the summer months could be used on the California and Oregon coasts?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The unfortunate part of that is that two years ago the committee went into the matter very fully, and after these vessels have finished their work in Alaskan waters and returned to the Pacific coast it is necessary to overhaul them and they are laid up and can not be used on other parts of the Pacific coast during the winter months. The thought of using them on the southern coast of California was an afterthought. It is not possible to take those vessels from Alaska, overhaul them, and send them away south to work during the winter months and then bring them back and send them up to Alaska. It would be a very unprofitable undertaking, and they can not work on the north Pacific coast in the winter months any more than they can in the Alaskan waters.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. FALCONER. By what methods are you going to survey these coasts?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are being surveyed. It has been carried on satisfactorily for some years. We appropriate $165,000 a year for this particular work. Of course I know that all of these departments wish to enlarge their activities very much and ask for an increase of almost 50 per cent on this particular appropriation. If that rate were retained throughout all this service the result would be that the cost to the Government would be so great that it would not be justified.

Mr. FALCONER. The United States Coast and Geodetic Survey shows that in 12½ fathoms (75 feet) of water the California struck and went down; in 111 fathoms (666 feet) of water the Mariposa struck, and the whole bottom of the ship was torn out. The ship California had been over that direct route some 16 times. Of course it was a little out of the way. There was nothing there to indicate shallow water.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no guarantee that if more extensive surveys had been made in that particular direction they would have discovered these pinnacle rocks at those points. The committee went very exhaustively into the manner in which these surveys are made, and even with the utmost care they are not always likely to discover these pinnacle rocks in the water. But this work is being carried on as expeditiously as it can be justified, in my opinion.

Mr. FALCONER. The dragnet theory suggested by the department would certainly catch these pinnacles. On a stretch of 500 feet of net they will survey something like, if I remember, 3,000 square miles a season.

Mr. FITZGERALD. By the time they cover the Alaska coast in that survey a great many years will go by. We have been working on the Atlantic coast and Gulf coast a great many years. And the result is that we have fairly good results, but no guaranty at all that there are not pinnacle rocks in places that are unknown. Of course, the formation of the coast makes it somewhat dangerous even with a sandy shore and beach, but there is a likelihood of these pinnacle rocks on the shores where there is a rock formation of volcanic origin.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no necessity for increasing the appropriation. I hope it will not be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I sometimes think that all of us ought to at least occasionally remember that no money can be paid out by the General Government until it has first been paid in, and that while we are making special pleas for the expenditures of money it is very seldom any of them make a special plea in behalf of the fellow who has to pay the bill.

Here is a proposition where we are now appropriating for the Coast and Geodetic Survey along the entire Atlantic and Gulf coasts, including the Panama Canal, $65,000 a year, and we appropriate for the Pacific coast $165,000 a year. And yet our enthusiastic friends from the Pacific coast are not satisfied. They want to make the world over in a minute. We now appropriate in one year more money for the Pacific coast than we had appropriated altogether for these purposes up to 100 years ago. And we had sailors on the sea and ships on the sea in much greater numbers and importance than we now have them on the Pacific coast. They were real sailors and real ships and did a real business. If they could have heard my distinguished friend from Washington, I think if they had stopped at the gentleman's port they would have been afraid to sail out for fear of going to the bottom. We are doing prettty well for the Pacific coast now with $165,000 for those purposes as against $65,000 for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. I do not think that the constant complaints that come to us about the care of Alaska are well founded. We are doing more for Alaska than any other nation of the world does for any territory which it possesses, and we are doing more for Alaska than this country has ever done at any time for any other Territory that it ever possessed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska Service: Pribilof Islands—2 agents and caretakers at $2,000 each, janitor service $480, 2 physicians at $1,500 each, 3 school-teachers at $1,200 each (1 formerly paid from the appropriation "Protecting sea and salmon fisheries of Alaska"), storekeeper $1,800; agent, $2,500; assistant agents—1, $2,000; 1, $1,800; inspector, $1,800; wardens—1, $1,200; 6 at $900 each; in all, $27,580.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

On page 138, after line 6, insert the following:

"For the purchase or construction of such vessels and boats as are necessary for use in connection with the enforcement of the laws and regulations for the protection of the fisheries and fur-bearing animals of Alaska, including 1 seagoing vessel, 1 light-draft tug, and 6 motor boats, $100,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order against that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, this item was called to my attention by the Secretary of Commerce. He regards it as a very necessary appropriation. It was estimated, as I understand, by the Treasury Department, and is included in the estimates submitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Secretary of Commerce is charged, under section 14 of the act of June 26, 1906, an act entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska," and under section 5 of the act of June 14, 1906, entitled "An act to prohibit aliens from fishing in the waters of Alaska," with the duty of enforcing the provisions of those acts. It is also the duty of the Secretary of Commerce to carry out the provisions of the act of April 21, 1910, for the protection of the fur seals and all other fur-bearing animals of Alaska.

The Secretary of Commerce states:

The salmon, halibut, cod, herring, and other fisheries of Alaska yield an annual product valued at more than $18,000,000. The fur industry of Alaska, exclusive of the fur seal, yields more than half a million dollars annually, and is susceptible of great development. A few details of the salmon fishery of Alaska for the year 1912 illustrate the importance of the industry.

Capital invested	$33,759,295
Persons employed	17,705
Salmon canneries operated	87
Salmon caught	60,938,945
Cases canned (48 1-pound tins to the case)	4,056,021
Initial value of pack	$16,295,420

The tax on the output of the Alaska fisheries in 1912 under the present law yielded $168,888.86. Under the schedule contained in a draft of a proposed law based on hearings recently held by the Senate Committee on Fisheries, these same products, together with a proposed tax on fishing apparatus, would have yielded $218,130.87 in revenue to the Government.

The 87 salmon canneries and the hundreds of fisheries upon which they depend are distributed along several thousand miles of coast from Dixon Entrance on the south to Kotzebue Sound, in the Arctic Ocean, on the north. The fishing season covers a period of two to six months, depending on locality and species.

To enforce the laws and regulations regarding the fisheries the law provides only four fishery agents to cover over 15,000 miles of coast. There are no regular means of transportation or travel in the region where most of the canneries and fisheries are, and for that reason the salmon agents are compelled to use the cannery boats in getting from one cannery or fishery to another. That is to say, when a Government official has to visit any cannery or fishery to see that the law is being properly observed, his only means of transportation is a boat owned and run by the very company or person that may be violating the law. This is clearly wrong, for it places the department under the necessity of asking favors from those against whom it is called upon to enforce the law. I feel sure Congress will recognize that it is improper for either the department or the fishing companies to be subjected to this embarrassment or to the criticism which such a course will certainly call forth and, in fact, has already elicited.

Moreover, the department has no vessel which it can use in patrolling the coasts for the enforcement of the alien fishing law. Recently there has been much complaint of alien halibut fishermen invading the Territorial waters of southeast Alaska, and the Legislature of Alaska has already memorialized Congress on this matter.

The inadequacy of the personnel provided to enable the department to comply with the laws which Congress has enacted for the protection and conservation of the fisheries and fur-bearing animals of Alaska has been long realized. In the report of the Alaska Salmon Commission (H. Doc. No. 477, 58th Cong., 2d sess.) this matter was discussed, and a specific recommendation was made not only for a material increase in the personnel, but also for vessels to be provided for the agents so that their inspection of the fisheries, canneries, and hatcheries might be effective.

An adequate patrol, inspection, and enforcement of the law in all the vast extent of fishery waters in Alaska from a force of only four men, with no regular means of transportation, or without vessels under their control, is impossible. At best the department can now cover only a limited portion of the field; the majority of the fisheries can either not be visited at all or only for a brief period in any one season.

Without going into details, the coast line of Alaska is about 5,000 miles, and these canneries are scattered along the coast. The inspectors provided for by law are expected to inspect those canneries. There is no provision made by law by which the inspectors can go from place to place. They have no boats. They have no means of transportation. They are dependent upon the canneries for the means of transportation from one to the other, and under existing conditions the enforcement of the law is little more than a farce, because if these inspectors are intended to enforce the law they can not depend upon those who may violate the law for the facilities to go from one place to another. If it is their duty—and it is—to inspect these canneries, they should go by Government conveyance, and without notice to the canneries.

They are also required to do certain work in the Pribilof Islands in connection with our seal fisheries there.

The Secretary of Commerce wants Congress to understand that he fully appreciates his duties under the law and the necessity for efficient service, but it will be impossible for him to render this service under existing conditions unless he is provided with the facilities for getting from the mainland to the Pribilof Islands and from point to point on the coast of Alaska.

On yesterday I received a telegram from Dr. E. Lester Jones, Deputy Commissioner of Fisheries, who is now at Juneau, Alaska, on his way to the Pribilof Islands and on an inspection tour in Alaska, as follows:

Hon. J. W. ALEXANDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The inadequate personnel and lack of transportation facilities for the Alaska fisheries service is forcibly brought home to me. Conditions surprise me, and there is no need more evident than for the new boats and the new men to help protect this vast industry, which to-day is being neglected almost entirely on this account.

E. LESTER JONES.

Now, I should think that this amendment is in order. The law provides that this service shall be performed, and it is necessary for the Secretary of Commerce to be provided with these facilities in order to perform the service.

This matter was called to my attention perhaps because I am chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and it was called to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations by the Secretary of Commerce and also by myself at his request. I have given it careful investigation, and I feel that this is an appropriation that ought to be made. Provision ought to be made by the Congress for the efficient discharge of the duties enjoined on the Secretary by the law. The fishery and game laws are to be enforced under his supervision. The deputy commissioner of the Bureau of Fisheries is now on his way to the Pribilof Islands, as I have stated, and to get there he must charter a boat to take him from the mainland to the Pribilof Islands. I think we will all agree that the present conditions are not such as should obtain if the Secretary of Commerce is expected to enforce the law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in the investigations made by the Committee on Appropriations it frequently happens that information is disclosed which furnishes reason for the belief that much legislation if enacted would be very desirable. That committee, however, has jurisdiction only to recommend appropriations in accordance with existing law. The Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction to authorize vessels for Government service. It can not recommend that a fleet of vessels be provided for some service in order that it may more adequately perform its duties than if it had no fleet at all. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries may have jurisdiction to report legislation to provide facilities for the Bureau of Fisheries. Very likely, if the Committee on Appropriations undertook to assume to recommend appropriations for vessels not authorized, the members of the committee having jurisdiction over that subject would severely criticize the Committee on Appropriations for intruding on their jurisdiction.

I believe that best results are obtained by the Committee on Appropriations not encroaching upon the jurisdiction of other committees. Frequently the committee recommends legislation designed to protect the Treasury, to prevent expenditures of money, to safeguard the public interest against loose methods of expenditure. It rarely recommends, and it should rarely recommend, legislation designed to open up the channels through which money is more expeditiously sent from the Treasury. Very little consideration was given to this estimate, because the Secretary was informed that if these vessels were not authorized the Committee on Appropriations had no authority to recommend appropriations for them. For this reason they made no inquiry as to the various vessels desired or their cost, or the cost of their operation after they were acquired, or the necessity for the number and character of vessels contemplated in the expenditure of $100,000.

The heads of many departments press upon this committee for appropriations for the extension of services or the enlargement of activities for which there is no authority; and if this committee were to attempt to assume jurisdiction to pass upon all of those questions it would very quickly be engaged in controlling and recommending most of the legislation that could come before Congress. I believe that it is not desirable; and so far as I am able, I do my part to prevent these appropriation bills being made the vehicles for legislation that should originate with some other committee and be enacted upon proper and mature consideration by the House. For that reason I am compelled to insist upon the point of order, on the ground that there is no authority for the acquisition of the vessels proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] anything to say on the point of order?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No more than this: The law expressly enjoins on the Secretary of Commerce the duty to make these inspections; and I assume that, this being true, the Committee on Appropriations have ample authority to make provision for that service. To say that the Department of Commerce shall inspect the fisheries in Alaska, shall protect the wild game in Alaska, shall protect the seals on the Pribilof Islands, shall provide food for them and transport supplies, and at the same time shall be denied the means by which to discharge that duty without some express authority of law, is something which I can not understand. I think the authority is ample under the existing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose the Committee on Appropriations decided that some of these investigations could best be made by means of an aeroplane; does the committee think we could authorize the acquisition and maintenance of an aeroplane?

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman and his committee thought that was the better means, I think they would.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that rule were to be adopted, then the Committee on Appropriations would have power that nobody ever contemplated when the rules of this House were prepared. For instance, the customs service must collect the customs revenue; yet a revenue cutter can not be built unless it is specifically authorized. The Department of Commerce has control of the Lighthouse Service, yet a lighthouse tender can not be built or acquired unless it be specifically authorized.

Mr. MANN. How about a customhouse?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under what plea can it be said that under the rules of the House the Bureau of Fisheries could have an appropriation incorporated in this bill for a vessel to enable the functions of that bureau to be performed if it were not authorized?

The gentleman spoke about telegrams from the deputy commissioner of fisheries. I do not know just how he got up to Juneau, but within a week or two a vessel, chartered by the Department of Commerce to carry supplies to the Pribilof Islands, left Seattle. He probably went on that vessel, and if he did not he was guilty of gross extravagance in engaging passage on some more preferable vessel. If he had gone on that vessel he would have gone directly to the Pribilof Islands with the other employees of the department and have been able to make whatever inspection he believed necessary at that point, and he could return on that vessel when he came back. We are paying about $9,000 or $10,000——

Mr. ALEXANDER. About $20,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; we got this particular vessel for about $9,000 or $10,000. We used to pay $20,000, but we got that one for $9,000 or $10,000.

Mr. ALEXANDER. My information is to the effect that this vessel was chartered at an expense of $20,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. They used to pay $20,000, but they made a special arrangement this year and they got it for $9,000 or $10,000.

There can hardly be any justification for this deputy commissioner of fisheries to go to Alaska for the purpose of going to the Pribilof Islands at this particular time, unless he went on that vessel. If he has gone on some other vessel and paid first-class passage, the department is more careless in the expenditure of some of its appropriations than I believe it to be.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman has no authority for saying that the deputy commissioner went to Juneau in any other vessel.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not. I understood the gentleman to say that he found the need there now in going to the Pribilof Islands. This vessel is chartered to carry supplies to the Pribilof Islands.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not know the usual route from Seattle to the Pribilof Islands—whether they would touch at Juneau or not. The telegram was received at Juneau, Alaska, and he is on his way to the Pribilof Islands, and in this chartered vessel, as I understand. I further understand that it was chartered at an expense of $20,000, and that only emphasizes the need of a vessel for the inspection service, without having to charter vessels at such a price.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. If this amendment which is offered by the gentleman from Missouri were held in order, it would throw the appropriation bills open to amendment that would be startling almost in their character. The Chair does not think it is in order under the rules of the House, and the Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Edenton (N. C.) Station: Superintendent, $1,500; fish-culturist, $900; two laborers, at $600 each; in all, $3,600.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Page 140, line 3, after the figures "$3,600," insert "for construction and repair of buildings, to be available until expended, $3,500."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order to that. I suggest that such amendments as this properly come in on page 148. If the gentleman is going to offer it, I ask him to offer it there.

Mr. SMALL. Very well; Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Propagation of food fishes: For maintenance, equipment, and operations of the fish-cultural stations of the bureau, the general propagation of food fishes and their distribution, including the movement, maintenance, and repairs of cars, purchase of equipment and apparatus, contingent expenses, temporary labor, and for the propagation and distribution of fresh-water mussels, and the necessary expenses connected therewith, not to exceed $10,000, $350,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I wish to inquire whether the Government has heretofore been engaged in the propagation of mussels.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; this is authorized. It is to take care of the situation at Fairport, Iowa, where these fresh-water mussels are utilized.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says there is present authorization for this character of work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. There was a bill reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Sixtieth Congress, under which this work is being done.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall that there was some inquiry in regard to that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is to propagate the fresh-water mussels which are used in the button industry.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

None of the foregoing amount shall be expended for hatching or planting fish or eggs in any State in which, in the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce, there are not adequate laws for the protection of the fishes, nor in any State in which the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents are not accorded full and free right to conduct fish-cultural operations, and all fishing and other operations necessary therefor, in such manner and at such times as is considered necessary and proper by the said commissioner or his agents: And provided further, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of any fish-cultural stations that may hereafter be established by Congress, the respective States, through appropriate legislative action, shall accord the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct the fish-cultural operations and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by them be considered necessary and proper, any fishery laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the paragraph. Is not this a new provision?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is; it is legislation.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I expect to make a point of order against this provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not do it now?

Mr. HOWARD. This provision will turn over the supervision of the water, game, and fish laws, especially the fish laws, to the Federal Government, and no matter what disposition Congress might have toward the distribution of fish throughout the country, we have to delegate the power to the Department of Commerce to say whether or not our laws are sufficient for them to go down and deposit a few fish or bullfrog eggs in a lake or stream in our States. Therefore I make a point of order against it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say this to the gentleman from Georgia: This has no reference to any existing situation. There have been times when the Department of Commerce, in attempting to carry on the fish-culture operations, was prevented from doing so by the laws of some of the States or by inspectors. This was intended to accomplish two purposes: First, to prevent interference with the Federal officers in maintaining fish-culture stations; and, secondly, to induce States to pass laws that would result in the protection of fish.

This provision reads:

None of the foregoing amounts shall be expended for hatching or planting fish or eggs in any State in which, in the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce, there are not adequate laws for the protection of the fishes.

The first condition of the provision is a clear limitation. The second part is legislation, but I do not care to offer part of it. I do not know that it is of a great deal of importance at this time.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. I would suggest, if the gentleman will concede it, that the only part of this paragraph which is objectionable is this language:

In which, in the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce, there are not adequate laws for the protection of the fishes.

It seems to me that if that were stricken out there would be no objection to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know that it is of enough importance.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cold Spring (Ga.) Station: For purchase of land and construction of ponds, to be available until expended, $6,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 147, line 17, after line 17, insert the following:
"Fish-cultural station, Clackamas, Oreg.: For construction, equipment, and repair of buildings and increasing and improving the water supply, to be available until used, $15,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a fish-cultural station now in operation and duly authorized. It came into the possession of the Government of the United States from two sources. A private corporation turned over some 16 acres of land on which they had a station and were hatching fish, and the State of Oregon transferred to the Government for a consideration some plant they had. The original location was not well chosen. It did not have adequate water supply or other facilities, so a new location was acquired in another place on the river, and the buildings and equipment of that station were transferred to the new location. They never have had adequate money to equip the station.

At this station they rear the royal Chinook salmon, which is the best of the food fishes, I think, on the Pacific coast; at least it is one of the very best. They raise about 60,000,000 a year to the finger-length stage, which is about 3½ inches, and then turn them loose into the river. They go down the Clackamas into the Willamette and down the Willamette to the Columbia and out into the sea.

The cost of these fishes is very small to the finger-length stage. There is no cheaper food supply than fishes. It costs the Government about 2 cents a hundred to raise these fishes, and they are worth when they return, from three to five years afterwards, on the average about $1 apiece. They have been no charge on the land, no charge on the food supply raised on the land, like cattle or sheep or hogs would be, but are entirely fed and grown in the sea, and when they come back with this increased value, that has been added to them at no expense or burden to the Government or individual owners of land.

This fish-cultural station is not adequate in its present capacity to keep up the supply of these fish. The chinook salmon has a peculiar habit of life. It goes out to the sea when it reaches the stage I have stated, and is gone for from three to five years. It comes back usually to the river from which it went, on which it was hatched. They go up the river for spawning purposes. The Columbia River basin is a very large basin and the river itself is over 1,000 miles long. The fish distribute themselves along that river, seeking gravel beds on which to spawn. Most fishes after they have spawned return to the sea, but this particular fish, when it spawns, if not consumed for food, does not return to the sea and is not available as a food fish for another season, but it is extremely valuable. I think it brings the highest price of all of the food fishes on the Pacific coast. The 60,000,000 fishes raised at present, after the natural casualties they suffer after leaving the hatchery and on their way to and in the ocean, do not come in sufficient numbers to keep up the supply for canning and other purposes. The canneries are extending their operations. The product is sold all over the United States at a reasonable price.

This amount of $15,000 was in the estimate and was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and I presume it had their careful consideration. Secretary Redfield was in Oregon last year and visited this station, and in the hearings he speaks very strongly and earnestly in behalf of the station and for this appropriation. Commissioner Smith of the bureau at my request made a statement for me so that I might have it accurately from his own knowledge. He said:

The Clackamas station is one of the most important in point of output, and should be maintained at the highest point of efficiency. The buildings, which were originally constructed of old material used in one of the State hatchery buildings, are inadequate, inconvenient, and dilapidated, and require renewal or expensive repairs.

Now, the fish when they are growing are kept in long boxes as you probably have seen them, and are fed in them. They require a constant influx of fresh water. The present water supply from a spring is not adequate. It must be increased for the use even of the 60,000,000 fishes now raised in each season, and the commissioner says:

The present water supply should be supplemented by water taken from the Clackamas River.

The Clackamas River is a river of pure water coming down from the Cascade Mountains, whose waters are not contaminated and consequently is sufficiently clean and pure for the fish. He further says:

In order that facilities may be provided for raising a larger number of salmon fry to the fingerling stage before they are liberated in the open waters, in accordance with the policy which the department has adopted with reference to this branch of fish culture. It is also desired to construct a superintendent's residence, this being needed on account of the remote location of the station.

The station being about 12 miles from Portland.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAWLEY. The station is about 12 miles from Portland and about 7 or 8 miles from Oregon City and about 4 or 5 or 6 miles from the nearest little town—Gladstone, so that it requires the presence on the ground of a man in charge of the hatchery, and he ought to have suitable quarters. He further says:

The original station, located on the Clackamas River, came into the possession of the United States by a donation from the Oregon & Washington Fish Propagating Co., and the buildings and other improvements by purchase from the Oregon fish commission. The physical changes of the Clackamas River in the vicinity of this station have made it impossible to successfully operate in this locality. The old tract of land is now overgrown with brush and is of no present or prospective value to this bureau. It is therefore proposed to condemn and sell this property.

That is, the Government received a gift of the old hatchery from the private corporation, with some buildings that they possessed, with 16 acres of valuable land, which has possibilities of water power and for other purposes. Now they propose to sell that. How much it will bring I am not ready to state, but it will bring some considerable sum of money. If that money were available, it would aid in the improvement of this station, but when that is sold it will naturally go into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. We are asking now that this old dilapidated building, made out of old buildings, where such a very valuable product is being raised, be repaired and be put in condition, and that the facilities there be somewhat increased, so larger numbers of salmon fry may be hatched, and that part of the money, a little more than the old location would bring, a little larger sum, be appropriated for that purpose.

I think there is no doubt from the hearings had before the Committee on Appropriations and the statement of the commissioner and Mr. Secretary Redfield, and from the statements made to me by the men engaged in the salmon-fishing business out there, that it is a very valuable and important work and its extension necessary. Now, they catch salmon at the moment they enter the Columbia River with nets, seines, and gill nets and fish traps up the Columbia River from its mouth for 1,000 miles; and a very large number of people at the mouth of the river—about 1,000 fishermen, if I remember correctly—and thousands of fishermen and their families on the river are largely dependent on this fish and make a very good living in the catching of fish in the spring and fall run; and I appeal to the committee and to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to let this matter come before the committee on its mertis and that we may adopt it. I hope the committee will grant this very modest and very necessary request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is at the Clackamas station, according to the Secretary of Commerce, a very fine fish-hatchery station. There is an old station on the river some distance from it, and the committee was requested to authorize the sale of the old station. It was suggested that the property might bring $15,000. Regardless of what the property might bring, the request was made that $15,000 be appropriated to improve the existing station. The committee was anxious to ascertain just how much there was invested now in the present station. What was said of it is this, that it is one of the most valuable stations that the Government has, and upon inquiry it was ascertained that Congress had appropriated $5,000 for the purchase of a site.

Four thousand dollars was expended for that purpose; $1,000 reverted to the Treasury, and some of the buildings were removed and erected there, and then that station has been developed and improved and maintained as all other fish-cultural stations are maintained. We carry in this bill for maintenance, equipment, and operation of the fish-cultural stations of the bureau the sum of $350,000. We increase the appropriation in this bill $10,000 over the appropriation made for the current year. And out of this $350,000 the Bureau of Fisheries can make improvements and furnish equipments at those stations where it is deemed in the opinion of the department to be desirable to do so. Now, this year, although this appropriation is larger, the department submitted a large number of requests for special appropriations for various numbers of these stations. Now, a peculiar condition existed at one of them. At Woods Hole Station, Mass., there was a very extensive wharf, where considerable sums are expended for repairs. It was necessary to make some very extensive repairs, and so as to relieve this general appropriation of $350,000 of the very great demand that would be made upon it if the repairs necessary at Woods Hole Station were made from it, a specific appropriation of $40,000 was made to repair the wharf at that place. If the department is to continue to have this general appropriation, out of which, in its discretion, it can equip, maintain, and improve these stations, it should not ask for specific appropriations for each of the many stations that are maintained, and if it refers to specific appropriations for the improvement and equipment of the stations, then the proper thing to do would be to very materially reduce the lump appropriation of $350,000. The department has ample funds to do whatever is necessary. The committee has not attempted to curtail it. It has built up the Clackamas Station out of the general appropriation. We carry in that appropriation for the next year more than has been carried at any time in its history.

The appropriation for this year is $335,000, and the appropriation is increased $15,000. Before that it was $300,000, and in 1910 it was $275,000. So the committee has liberally increased this general fund out of which the department, with the information before it, could expend the money where most desirable.

I have no sympathy with these suggestions, where some one has a piece of property and has asked to be authorized to sell it and to spend the money for something else. This was one of those instances, and the committee did not recommend it. I do not think we should make these specific appropriations in this way, while responding so liberally to the request of the department for the fund out of which these stations are maintained and equipped. And for that reason I can not favor the amendment and am compelled to press the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York make the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oregon wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not. I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] offers a further amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Clackamas (Oreg.) Station: For equipment and repair of buildings and for increasing and improving the water supply, to be available until expended, $10,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. In reply to the gentleman's statement a moment ago, when the bill was reported I took the matter of the equipment of this station and its improvement out of the lump-fund appropriation up with the Director of the Bureau of Fisheries, supposing in that lump-fund appropriation the estimate of the Treasury Department of $15,000 had been taken care of. He informed me over the phone that the amount appropriated in the lump fund would afford him no funds at all to make the necessary improvement and the necessary extension.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What are they going to do with all that money?

Mr. HAWLEY. That I can not answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course, the gentleman knows that all of these departments will encourage Members by such information, in trying to add to the money appropriated for the departments.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not agree with the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, in impugning the good faith of the Commissioner of Fisheries.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not impugning him. I am stating what is a notorious and acknowledged fact.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not agree to it. I would not impugn his good faith.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not asking the gentleman to agree to it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no reason to believe he would misstate it to me over the phone. He says it is a valuable fish-hatchery in the work it does and the equipment is not valuable itself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why does not he equip it? That is what we give him this $350,000 for. What is he doing with that money? We give it to him to provide these fisheries with equipment, and if he does not do it, we will find out what he does with it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not answer the question; I can only state what he said to me when he wrote me the letter at my request.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order: This is an authorized station. As the chairman has just stated, the construction has been authorized, the purchase of the site has been authorized, and there is maintenance already provided for it in one way in the lump fund and in another way in the appropriation for the statutory roll at the fish-cultural stations. And to increase the expenditure of money does not make the matter subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is clearly subject to a point of order. It repeals the covering-in act.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] says it is according to existing law.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by eliminating those words "to be available until used."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by eliminating the words "to be available until expended." Without objection, it will be so modified.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let us vote.

The CHAIRMAN. In that form it is not subject to a point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon demands a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing the entire letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, April 22, 1914.

Hon. W. C. HAWLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to invite your attention to an item of $15,000 submitted to Congress with the estimates of appropriations for the Bureau of Fisheries for the fiscal year 1915. The item in question is in the estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1915 under the heading "Department of Commerce Bureau of Fisheries," page 612, and is entitled Fish-Cultural Station, Clackamas, Oreg.—For construction of buildings and improvements to water supply, to be available until used, $15,000.

It is the policy of the bureau to extend the scope and magnitude of its Pacific coast salmon operations. The Clackamas station is one of the most important in point of output, and should be maintained at the highest point of efficiency. The buildings, which were originally constructed of old material used in one of the State hatchery buildings, are inadequate, inconvenient, and dilapidated, and require renewal or extensive repairs. The present spring-water supply should be supplemented by water taken from the Clackamas River, in order that facilities may be provided for rearing a larger number of salmon fry to the fingerling stage before they are liberated in the open waters, in accordance with the policy which the department has adopted with reference to this branch of fish culture. It is also desired to construct a superintendent's residence, this being needed on account of the remote location of the station.

The original station, located on the Clackamas River, came into possession of the United States by donation from the Oregon and Washington Fish Propagating Co., and the buildings and other improvements by purchase from the Oregon fish commission. The physical changes in the Clackamas River in the vicinity of this station have made it impossible to successfully operate in this locality. The old tract of land is now overgrown with brush and is of no present or prospective value to this bureau. It is therefore proposed to condemn and sell this property.

Very truly, yours,

H. M. SMITH, Commissioner.

Mr. O'HAIR. Mr. Chairman, at this point the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has an amendment which he desires to offer. He was called away and has not yet returned, and I want to ask unanimous consent that his amendment may be offered and considered when he returns.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HAIR] asks unanimous consent that the paragraph on page 147, including lines 16 and 17, may be passed over temporarily, in order that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] may offer an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from South Carolina spoke to me about that; and if we are to have an understanding to the effect that gentlemen are to have the right to offer amendments, I want to know what they are. I do not want any such misunderstanding as we had to-day.

Mr. O'HAIR. I do not know what it is. I am doing it as a friend of his.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman from South Carolina desires to offer an amendment to the item covering lines 10 and 11, on page 148, in reference to a fish hatchery in his State.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When will the gentleman from South Carolina be back?

Mr. O'HAIR. In a short time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to the gentleman from South Carolina having the right to offer an amendment at that point.

Mr. MANN. It is not an amendment to that paragraph, but an amendment which is to be offered at that point.

Mr. O'HAIR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] may have permission to offer an amendment at the end of line 17, on page 147.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'HAIR] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina may have permission to offer an amendment at the end of line 17, on page 147. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the arsenal item. I spoke on that item this afternoon, and I neglected to ask permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in connection with the arsenal item. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. I make the same request, Mr. Chairman, with respect to the Alaska item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in connection with the debate on the Alaska item. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Louisville (Ky.) fish hatchery: The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to convey to the board of park commissioners of the city of Louisville, Ky., a right of way 120 feet wide through the property of the United States in Jefferson County, Ky., used as a fish-cultural station and hatchery: Provided, That such conveyance of right of way shall not be construed as affecting the right or title of the United States in said property or as in violation of any stipulation or condition in the conveyance of the same to the United States, and on the further condition that the land or right of way to be conveyed hereunder shall be constructed and maintained as a parkway free of any expense to the United States, and that all work thereon shall be such as not to interfere with the operations and efficiency of said fish-cultural station and in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BRYAN. There is nothing in this section to show that the land to be conveyed is to be used as a street, and there is no clause requiring it to revert to the Government again if it is not used as a street. There is nothing here that I have been able to find to show that it is a continuation of a street that is 125 feet wide, or whether it is desired to use 40 or 50 feet of it as a street and the rest of it for some other purpose.

I will state to the gentleman that this matter first came up, so far as I have knowledge of it, before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and the bill was referred to me by the committee to look into, and I saw the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. He had unfortunately been sick and he did not give me much information, but said that he intended to bring it in, perhaps on this bill. I think we ought to have a little information about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee of which the gentleman is a member reported this identical provision in a bill. They reported it after it had been referred to the Department of Commerce and after it had been favorably reported upon by the Secretary of Commerce.

The situation is this: Three years ago Congress appropriated $25,000 for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the county of Jefferson, in the State of Kentucky. The State of Kentucky donated the land upon which the station is located. The city of Louisville or the State of Kentucky is building a boulevard running along the river, and it wishes to continue this boulevard through the property donated heretofore by the State to the Federal Government for a fish-cultural station. The provision on page 148 requires, if the gentleman will notice, "that the land or right of way to be conveyed hereunder shall be constructed and maintained as a parkway free of any expense to the United States." The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] unfortunately was taken ill, and was compelled to leave the city.

It is a matter in which the people of his district are very keenly interested. The State donated the land. They wish to make this parkway. The committee believe it will improve and enhance the property that has been donated by the Government. It is to be maintained in such a way as will not interfere with the operations of the hatchery and in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of Commerce; and it was because the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, upon the favorable recommendation of the department, had reported this identical language in a bill that the Committee on Appropriations, because of the absence of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], incorporated this provision.

Mr. BRYAN. Is this the identical language of that bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my recollection.

Mr. BRYAN. Then the bill was evidently amended after I left the committee meeting. It is made better by the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is my recollection that we compared the language with the item in the bill reported from that committee.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, it seems to me this land ought to revert to the Government if it is not used as a street; but it is more safely protected in this language than it was in the bill before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. If no one else cares to make the point of order, I will withdraw it.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As a matter of fact, the provision is not mandatory, and the Secretary of Commerce can require any conditions that he believes to be desirable from the standpoint of the Government.

Mr. MANN. The language used here is—

Authorized to convey * * * a right of way 120 feet wide.

What does that mean? Does it mean to convey the land?

Mr. FITZGERALD. A right of way.

Mr. MANN. To convey an easement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To convey an easement. A right of way is an easement.

Mr. MANN. Ordinarily a right of way is a mere easement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe that is the intention. The city or county is constructing a boulevard along the river. This is be a continuation of it. Otherwise it can not go through the property, but will have to be diverted and go around it.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I have no objection to the purpose of it. Under the law of Kentucky, where the Government obtains land like this, does it not have exclusive jurisdiction over the land? Who would have the jurisdiction?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. There is a provision in the Revised Statutes which prohibits expenditure by the Government upon any property acquired for any designated purpose unless the State has ceded jurisdiction over it. Whether that applies to fish-cultural stations I am not certain.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know who would have jurisdiction of a criminal act or some other act committed on this right of way? Would it be the State or the Federal Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know.

Mr. BRYAN. Can the gentleman explain why it is that he was so particular not to invade the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, represented by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] a while ago, while he is willing to waive the question of jurisdiction on a matter of this kind? He does not mind invading the jurisdiction of this other committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] spent probably six months in the preparation of the bill from which this language is taken. He had a favorable recommendation on the bill affecting the hatchery referred to here. Unfortunately, he was taken very seriously ill, and has been compelled to absent himself from the House.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, the House could go on and pass the bill reported from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, just as the House must pass the bill reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, or else Alaska will not get the service recommended in that bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a little difference. This does not take any money out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BRYAN. It takes land.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; it does not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a difference. This land was donated to the Federal Government by the State of Kentucky. Now they wish to put a beautiful boulevard through it, and it will really be an improvement of our own property. Instead of giving up something, we probably are getting something.

Mr. BRYAN. Then there is the matter of courtesy to the very able and distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations and one whom all of us are glad to favor. That is a very imposing feature of the matter.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can understand the embarrassments of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that in line 7, page 147, the word "seasons" be changed to "season." It should be in the singular instead of in the plural.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to agree to an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 147, line 7, strike out the word "seasons" and insert the word "season."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Woods Hole (Mass.) Station: For repairs to wharfs and for retaining bulkheads, $40,000.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Edenton (S. C.) Station: For construction and repair of buildings, $3,500."

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks this small appropriation exclusively for the construction and repair of buildings at this fish station. I would not disparage other stations by saying that this is the most important station in the country, but in one respect it admittedly is. It is the most important station for the propagation of shad in the whole country. This station is located on a tributary of Albemarle Sound, which is the largest body of fresh water along the Atlantic seaboard. In fact, I think I may safely say that it is the largest body of fresh water in the United States except the Great Lakes. It has the greatest water area for the catch of shad along the Atlantic seaboard. Substantially the bulk of the shad that comes to Washington and the large northern cities during the months of February and March come from this sound and its tributaries of fresh water, and the value of the station has been amply demonstrated within the last six years.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this is the largest body of fresh water along the Atlantic seaboard? How large an area is it?

Mr. SMALL. I can not give the number of square miles, but it is 30 miles wide and 40 miles long.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Lake Okechobee, in Florida, is 40 miles wide and 60 miles long.

Mr. SMALL. Oh, yes; but that is full of stump and cypress.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. No, it is not; it is the greatest lake in the world outside of the Great Lakes.

Mr. BRYAN. Neither of them can compare with Lake Washington.

Mr. SMALL. I am speaking of navigable waters.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And it is 40 feet deep.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to raise any rivalry in regard to which is the largest body of fresh water, and if the gentleman can demonstrate that they have larger bodies of fresh water they are welcome to the honor. But I do stand by the proposition that no body of fresh water in the United States yields so abundantly of the luscious shad as does this. I stand by that and I stand by the value of this station.

About 10 years ago the quantity of shad appreciably diminished, as shown by the catch and shipments. By reason of some wise State legislation, which gave a freer ingress and egress for the migratory fish coming in and out of the ocean inlets giving them a better opportunity to reach these waters for spawning, but primarily on account of the excellent work done by this fish hatchery, the supply of fish in that great section and tributaries has just about reached normal. So that for two seasons millions and millions of shad have been shipped out. As the Commissioner of Fisheries stated in the hearings, it amounts annually to much more than $1,000,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I happen to know the conditions at this hatchery. There is only one dwelling there occupied by the superintendent and his family. During the height of the season a large temporary force is employed, and that house is converted substantially into a mess house; not only to the inconvenience of the family, but to the inconvenience of the men there employed. This station is very much in need of a plain, but substantial and commodious mess house.

Then, in addition, about four or five times during recent seasons the capacity of the hatchery has been reached, so that they had to decline eggs for hatching the young shad. In other words, their work was retarded, and this hatchery ought to be enlarged. This appropriation is for two purposes—primarily to enlarge the hatchery; and, secondly, for the construction of a mess house for the men there.

As the learned gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is absolutely conversant on the subject, says, it is an important element in the reduction of the cost of living. So that those who love shad or who want them abundant and fresh from these waters in North Carolina, which are maintained largely by this hatchery, ought to vote for this amendment carrying this trifling appropriation. The chairman of the committee can not make the argument against it that it is covered by the much-quoted paragraph in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was on objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York can not make an argument against this proposition by citing this paragraph of $350,000, because this paragraph provides for "maintenance, equipment, and operation," and I am asking for the construction of one building and for the enlargement of the fish hatchery itself which is a work of construction, so that whatever difference of opinion may exist as to the expenditure of this $350,000 between the chairman of the committee and the Commissioner of Fisheries, about which I am not able to express an opinion, there can be no question that this appropriation of $350,000 in another paragraph which has been referred to is not available for the construction of this building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. This mess hall is a part of the equipment of the hatchery. They have never found it necessary to have one as yet, but they are getting a little particular down there and want to eat under a shed.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, and I know his knowledge of the subject, I think it is quite a stretch in the interpretation of language to say that the equipment of a building includes the construction of a new building, and having such confidence in the gentleman's knowledge I still maintain that it would be a stretch of interpretation to contend that the $350,000 appropriation in another paragraph could be expended for new construction. We would like to penetrate the heretofore impenetrable armor of the chairman of this committee when an amendment is sought carrying such a modest appropriation as this, and while I can not hope to get his consent, I do hope that he will, as I know he will if he discusses it at all, discuss it upon its merits and not attempt to argue to the committee that it is covered by any lump-sum or existing appropriation already included in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I hope I have demonstrated to the satisfaction of some of the members of the committee, and I hope to a majority, that this is an important fish station, that it is located in an area which furnishes the largest supply of shad along the Atlantic seaboard, that most valuable food fish, and that any appropriation within reasonable limitation which is intended to increase the efficiency of that station is worthy of the consideration of the committee and of the approval of the Committee of the Whole. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this item is in the same situation as a number of others submitted by the commissioner. Special items are requested for Beaufort, Clackamas, Louisville, Orangeburg, Duluth, Edenton, and Fairport. The committee increased by $15,000 the general appropriation for maintenance, equipment, and operation of these stations. We left it in the discretion of the Commissioner of Fisheries as to how this money should be expended. We have between 30 and 40 fish-cultural stations in the United States. Thirty-five hundred dollars, requested specifically for this particular station, is 1 per cent of the amount placed at the disposal of the commissioner to maintain and equip and operate all of the stations. Surely much more than 1 per cent is to be expended at Edenton. It unquestionably is an important station. I have come to the conclusion that the fish-cultural stations maintained by the Government perhaps do more real valuable service for the country than anything else maintained by the Federal Government at anything like the same expense. This is merely a question as to whether we should unnecessarily increase the amount to be appropriated. We have treated the bureau very liberally in the general appropriation, and have given it all that we think is necessary. It is hardly fair to select out particular places, some half dozen of these stations, and specifically appropriate sums to be expended at them, to the discrimination of the others. I think the best administration is to treat them all alike and let the department, in the exercise of its discretion, expend the money where it is most imperatively required. For that reason I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SMALL) there were—ayes 18, noes 40.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eight Members, not a sufficient number, and tellers are denied.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 148, after line 11, insert a new paragraph as follows:
"For the purchase or construction of a vessel for the fish-cultural station at Booth Bay Harbor, Me., to be available until expended, $4,500."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment not only because of my personal knowledge of the condition of the vessel which is now in the service of the Government, but because this vessel has been absolutely condemned by the officials of our own Government.

Not only did the Secretary of Commerce absolutely condemn this vessel before the committee, but two United States inspectors from the Inspection Service have also condemned it after a special examination as being absolutely unseaworthy and unsafe. I simply want to ask the Members of this House how they can ask Government officials and employees to board a steamboat and go out to sea in it when the heads of their own department have condemned it as unseaworthy and unsafe? It seems to me to do such a thing is to be in utter disregard, almost reckless disregard, of the lives of our officials and the employees in this service. I will not take up the time in observations of my own, because this has been very clearly stated by persons in authority, so that there can be no doubt about it. Secretary Redfield appeared before the committee, and in answer to the chairman's question here is what he said about this vessel:

Secretary REDFIELD. Three years ago, or nearly so, I was invited by one of my colleagues to take a trip on the steamer Gannet from my own summer home to a point near Boothbay Harbor where this vessel is centered. I took that trip, and immediately asked the Commissioner of Fisheries to put in an estimate for the construction of a new vessel on the ground that from my knowledge of this vessel and of the waters she navigates that it was unsafe to continue her in navigation longer. I say very candidly to you that this vessel is not fit for the sea she has to navigate, and that we operate her with danger. She may be at any time caught where she ought not to be. She is an old secondhand yacht. Her former owner has now replaced her by two later vessels. She is too narrow and sharp and too small for the work and is not the type of vessel to be used for that purpose. She has to navigate waters very likely to become extremely dangerous suddenly. I know the vessel, and I can assure you that she is not safe.

Now, there were two inspectors detailed to inspect and examine this very vessel, and without reading all of their report, I will read a part of it. They say:

She has carried away her rudder frequently and on one or two occasions rudder post split down through stern timber, ripping her open, and she was forced to run through the breakers into York Harbor to escape foundering. We believe this brief account of her work may be of value to you, and when it is remembered that she is of the very lightest construction and so sharp as to be almost wedge-shaped forward and cut away aft—having been built for a yacht to be used in summer only—the fact that she is still on top of the water, after the winters spent on this coast, running as we know she has run, is not an evidence of her seaworthiness, but is rather a compliment to the seamanship of her master.

Now, that is the kind of vessel, gentlemen, that you are asking the officials and employees of this Government to go out to sea in, and every time you do it you are unnecessarily asking men to take their lives in their hands by going out in a vessel that is condemned by the heads of your own department. Is there any regard whatever for the lives of our employees in this department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the case is as bad as is made out by the gentleman from Maine. The Secretary of Commerce stated that three years ago, on the invitation of one of his colleagues, he had made a trip upon this vessel and it was that experience upon that ship that induced him to recommend the Commissioner of Fisheries at that time to immediately send in estimates for a new vessel. Well, about three years ago this vessel was completely overhauled, a new boiler was put into her, extensive repairs were made to her, and it does not appear whether the Secretary made his trip before or after this extensive overhauling of the vessel. It perhaps might be wise for me to read some more of the report of these inspectors which has been overlooked by the gentleman from Maine:

The Gannett was built in 1890 at Boston, Mass., to be used as a pleasure yacht on inland waters, being afterwards bought by the United States for the Bureau of Fisheries.

This vessel was bought by the bureau after an inspection and examination and determination that it was a suitable vessel for the work of the bureau.

She is 61 feet on the water line, 12 feet 4 inches beam, and draws, with her coal and water aboard, 6 feet 7 inches; gross tonnage 32, net 16.

So she is a fairly respectable sized secondhand yacht. [Reading:]

Her timbers are 2½ inches square, of white oak, spaced 18 inches centers; hull planking of hard pine 1¼ inches thick, copper fastened; house is a trunk, forming cabin and engine room and including pilot house, as is usual in small yachts of this type, built of ⅞-inch stuff, and it was noticed in the cabin that a waterway of tin had been tacked up over one berth to carry the leakage away, as sills and deck are so light they will not hold calking.

In 1911 she had a new boiler, and extensive repairs were made to the hull, which included new stem, and for 12 feet abaft stem was retimbered and planked. There is no question as to the soundness of her hull.

But the inspector states that he does not think she is a desirable type of vessel to use in this particular kind of work. Well, at different times people are inclined to think vessels are not very seaworthy. I remember some years ago I crossed the Bay of Fundy from Digby in Nova Scotia to St. John in New Brunswick, and after four hours I had a violent conviction that I was on an unseaworthy boat. I expected to see her founder every minute, and the first officer told me it was the worst storm they had had for 10 years. That same old, decrepit, cranky vessel I was certain would founder every minute in the four hours I was compelled to remain on it in crossing the Bay of Fundy is still making two trips daily across that bay.

This yacht, with 2-inch square white oak, copper fastened, well built, a pleasure boat, was acquired by the Bureau of Fisheries. It can not be possible that they made an investment in a vessel that was absolutely worthless for the work of the bureau. It has been going along and doing its work. Every once in a while the prediction is made that it is very unseaworthy and likely to founder. But that is possible about any boat. And while this may not be a particularly desirable boat upon which any of you gentlemen would make a trip at the invitation of one of your colleagues, the men who navigate the New England coast for a livelihood would not go upon this vessel if it were not seaworthy.

I have never seen this vessel, and I have never been upon it, and it may be it should not be utilized for the purpose for which it is utilized. The Bureau of Fisheries selected this vessel itself. The Committee on Appropriations did not pick it out for the bureau. And only three years ago they spent a very large sum putting a new boiler in it and overhauling it, so as to continue to utilize it in the service. And while I would not urge anybody to take a trip upon it, I can not withdraw the point of order I made against this proposition to appropriate $45,000 to purchase a tug to take its place. I regret it, Mr. Chairman, but in view of my position I must insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 11, on page 148, insert the following:
"For completion of the Orangeburg, S. C., Fisheries Station, including the construction of buildings and ponds, and for equipment, to remain until expended, $20,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is in order at this point.

Mr. MANN. Is this amendment being offered here the same amendment that the gentleman wished to offer at another place?

The CHAIRMAN. While the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] was out for the moment unanimous consent was given that the gentleman might have opportunity to offer the amendment after line 17.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman does not intend to return to offer the amendment at the other place?

Mr. LEVER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is offering this amendment now at this point, instead of after line 17, on page 147.

Mr. LEVER. Yes. And I would like to ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by striking out the words "to remain until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify the amendment by striking out the words "to remain until expended." Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I still reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, in 1911 an act of Congress was passed authorizing a fish hatchery in South Carolina. That hatchery was located in Orangeburg County, in my district. Twenty-five thousand dollars was appropriated for it. I learn from conversations with officials of the bureau that that $25,000 has been exhausted absolutely. They have gone to the extent of laying the pipes, constructing the drainage, constructing the superintendent's house, and have excavated a great amount of dirt. The hatchery is in condition now to be completed and to be made available for use to the people of the country. It can not be completed, however, unless sufficient money is given to complete it. The Secretary of Commerce estimates that it will cost $20,000 to complete the hatchery. The amendment that I am proposing seeks to make $20,000 available for that purpose. I do not think that this proposition rests upon the same ground as if it were a new proposition.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. I yield.

Mr. MANN. Was the limit of cost in the original act $25,000?

Mr. LEVER. I am not sure about that, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, but $25,000 was all that was appropriated, and I do not know whether there was any limit as to the cost or not. The proposition was put on in the Senate and not in the House.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that for many years we appropriated $25,000 for a fish hatchery. Does the gentleman know why they can not establish these fish hatcheries for that amount?

Mr. LEVER. I understand in conversations with gentlemen in the Bureau of Fisheries that while what the gentleman says is true, as a matter of fact they have always made their estimates on the basis of $50,000 for this purpose. They tell me that they would need $30,000 really instead of $20,000 to complete this proposition, if it were of the ordinary kind; but conditions at Orangeburg are good, labor is relatively cheap, and they hope to be able to complete it with $20,000, and they have estimated for that amount.

The bill under consideration carries an appropriation of $3,600 to provide the salaries of one fish culturist, one superintendent of buildings, and two laborers at the fish hatchery at Orangeburg. Now, it seems to me, that if you are going to provide salaries for employees to be used at the fish hatchery at Orangeburg, it would be good business and a good investment if you would complete the fish hatchery and give those people something to do. If they are permitted to stay at Orangeburg, as I presume they will be under the language of this bill, we shall be placed in the ridiculous position of providing $3,600 to pay the salaries of men to sit on the bank of a hole and watch the hole, because that is all they have there now.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I do.

Mr. HOWARD. Is there any output from this hatchery at all now?

Mr. LEVER. In what respect?

Mr. HOWARD. Are they shipping any fry from this hatchery?

Mr. LEVER. None whatever. There has been nothing done whatever except to lay the foundation of this fish hatchery, to construct the superintendent's building, to prepare the trenches, and lay pipes at the bottom of this hatchery to be covered over with water when completed.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, it seems to me that this is not a proposition for an extravagant expenditure of money. If I thought so I would not be supporting the proposition. I am supporting it in earnest, because we have appropriated $25,000. We have dug out a hole in the ground, and we shall be ready now for business if you will give us just a little bit more money to complete the work, on which we have thus far expended $25,000.

It seems to me that it can not be charged that this is out of line with our policy of economy, because I believe I can see a difference between false economy and real economy or a genuine investment. The people of the United States must be taught to eat fish. Our streams are absolutely filled with fish, and as a people we eat as little fish as any people on the face of the earth.

Now, here is a proposition to encourage this business, and I feel that the circumstances and the facts involved in the case justify the committee in allowing this small appropriation of $20,000.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. You have already expended $25,000 at this place, and unless an additional sum is appropriated this $25,000 that has been expended is absolutely useless?

Mr. LEVER. Yes. If the proposition is not completed by an appropriation now or in the future, we shall have for the $25,000 a few pipes, a few ditches, a $3,000 superintendent's house, and a hole in the ground; that is all.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Then you have another expense connected with it each year of $3,600 for employees, without having anything for them to do?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; that is what I understand from the item in the bill. This is a good proposition on its merits.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, from time to time Congress authorizes the establishment of fish hatcheries and makes appropriations of $25,000 for that purpose. This hatchery was authorized three and one-half years ago, and a fish hatchery can be established at Orangeburg or at any other place for $25,000.

This hatchery has now reached a point where they are practically ready to commence operations. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] shakes his head. He should read what the Commissioner of Fisheries says. The residence building and the workshops have been completed, tools and appliances have been bought, drains have been laid, ponds have been partly constructed, and to some extent are ready for operation. They will be ready for operation as soon as they have expended what money they have.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a moment. This was to be what is known as a pond hatchery. We were to propagate and raise fry in ponds. Now, some distance from where this hatchery was located it has occurred to the Commissioner of Fisheries to operate in connection with it this station on the Edisto River. Is that the name of it?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; Edisto River.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To operate in connection with the Orangeburg hatchery a river station, so as to have a combination station, propagating some of the fry in ponds and some of them in the river station. The Commissioner of Fisheries was somewhat embarrassed when it was suggested to him that there was no authority to start off on this new undertaking under the guise of building this station at Orangeburg, S. C., and establishing ostensibly as a part of it, but in fact independent of it, this auxiliary station on the Edisto River. That is so, whatever the name of the river is?

Mr. LEVER. It is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, if they wish to have at that place a type or character of station designed as intended originally, they can do it within the $25,000 appropriated plus such money as may be necessary to be taken from these other appropriations which are made for the benefit of the fisheries service.

Just think what happens. Congress authorizes at Orangeburg the establishment of a fish-hatchery station and appropriates $25,000. After they have been there three years and a half they ask for $20,000 more. Then we found that under the guise of operating under this original authorization they are going off to another place to establish an auxiliary station, under what they claim is their general authority. We have another station where the land was donated and $25,000 appropriated, and they ask $30,000 to complete that station. The committee treated them all alike. They were given $25,000 apiece to build these stations. In the past they always did build them for that sum, but now they have more exaggerated notions of just what is necessary. Of course, if we place the money at their disposal, they will spend all we can give them. I believe the department should finish this station at Orangeburg and commence the work of propagating fish in these ponds, and then, if it be deemed desirable to establish an auxiliary station on the Edisto River in connection with it, they can make that request. But they ought to finish one job before they start in on another.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from New York that I have seen the station, and they have three ponds connecting with each other. Now, I presume this auxiliary station to which the gentleman refers is one of these ponds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. It is on the river. It is to be used for the purpose of propagating fish that would not be propagated in these ponds at all. They said they were going to have a combination station. Well, a combination station is built sometimes, where the station is on a river.

Mr. LEVER. Linking the ponds together, as these ponds are linked together, because this station is right on the river.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They propagate some fish in the river and some in the ponds. But you might suggest that we establish a station in Washington, and as an auxiliary of that station somebody might go to Baltimore and want to make some expenditures over there under the guise that they were going to have a combination station, one part here and one part there. Now, is this not a little too much to ask the committee to do, until they finish the job they started to do three years ago?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, I will say that I have seen these three ponds to which the gentleman is evidently referring.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am talking about the river.

Mr. LEVER. The pond farthest away from the river can not be over half a mile, and I think the one nearest the river is not over a few hundred yards. So that, as far as I have been able to ascertain from a personal inspection of the station, there is not intended to be any station in connection with the river, except possibly that one right on the river, connecting up the three ponds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They ought to finish this station that has been authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; I insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from South Carolina anything to say on the point of order?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I did not consider that the amendment was subject to a point of order, for the reason that it was for the completion of a work already in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the original provision of the law?

Mr. LEVER. I have not got it in my hand. The gentleman from New York probably has.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It reads:

For the establishment of a fish-cultural station, including purchase of site, construction of buildings, ponds, and equipments, at a point in the State of South Carolina to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, $25,000.

It is for the establishment, purchase of a site, equipment, and everything else.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I submit to the committee that the language read by the gentleman from New York establishes the fact that there is no limit of cost fixed; and the amendment proposed by me is for the completion of a work in progress, already under way, and therefore not subject to the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But this is for the purpose of establishing it. It included everything—the site, construction of buildings, ponds, and equipment. I do not know of anything else——

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from New York the title of that act?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is in the sundry civil act approved March 4, 1911.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a part of the sundry civil bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes. It was one of the amendments put on this bill by the Senate from time to time, and agreed to under pressure. That is the way they get most of these things. They ought to finish this job before they go further.

Mr. LEVER. That is what I want them to do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the gentleman wants them to start in on a new project.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chemical laboratory: Toward the construction of a suitable fireproof chemical laboratory, to provide additional space, to cost not exceeding $200,000 under a contract which is hereby authorized therefor, $25,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if this is not an authorization to provide a new building for the Bureau of Standards?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a building for a chemical laboratory for the Bureau of Standards, and it has been held that buildings for this institution are in order on the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the gentleman that decision?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; but I can get it for the gentleman. Perhaps the gentleman from Illinois may recall the ruling holding a somewhat similar building in order for the Bureau of Standards. However, Mr. Chairman, I will ask that this item be passed over with the point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the item be passed over with the point of order pending. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Philadelphia, Pa.: For completion of inspection house on pier, according to plans prepared for that purpose, $15,000; for installation of elevator in detention building, including structural changes incident thereto, $4,000; for construction of sea wall on river front and dirt fill behind same, $5,500; for boring artesian well and installing necessary piping and fittings to connect with station buildings, $3,100; for disinfecting apparatus and installation thereof, $5,400; for installing laundry facilities and remodeling of plumbing and heating apparatus connected therewith, $2,700; in all, $35,700.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] if he has any particular objection to this particular appropriation going into the bill?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, replying to the inquiry of the gentleman from North Carolina, I will say that we have gone over this very carefully and find that all these items have been approved by the department, being necessary for the furtherance of the service, and that they ought to be passed. They have the indorsement of the department and have been approved by it in the regular way. Such testimony as the committee desired was heard, and I believe the committee itself found that all the items were meritorious. I should say that they have been long deferred and long hoped for, and of course those of us who are interested in this particular immigration station make our acknowledgment to the committee for its prompt and intelligent action in this matter.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I asked the question for the reason that on a previous item in the bill this afternoon the gentleman from Pennsylvania made some inquiry as to the theory that was followed by the Committee on Appropriations in allowing these buildings. He was unkind enough, in my judgment, to insinuate that there was in the committee an inclination on the part of the chairman of this committee to allow appropriations for buildings in the locality in which the gentleman from New York lives, to the exclusion of those in some other locality. I felt it my duty, Mr. Chairman, not that I think that the gentleman from New York needs anybody to come to his defense in this House, but as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I felt it was my duty to say that no man can truthfully charge the chairman of the Appropriations Committee with favoring items in the locality in which he lives to the exclusion of the district of any other gentleman in this House. [Applause.]

Further than that, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, just prior to the criticism of the gentleman from New York, had on the floor of the House insisted on placing in this bill amendments making appropriations that were not authorized or were not estimated for in the locality in which he lived. It was perfectly apparent to any man who observed the procedure at that time that there was on the floor of the House a cohesion of gentlemen for the purpose of public plunder. There was a combination that had been formed for the purpose of overriding the Committee on Appropriations and it was successful. Two gentlemen from Pennsylvania were engaged in this, and there was some rivalry, as one could see, between them as to who should occupy the most space in the Philadelphia papers to-morrow morning because of the effort to get the appropriation for the Frankford Arsenal. It was an appropriation which the committee felt was not justified.

My whole purpose, Mr. Chairman, however, was to say to this House, and to every man in it who knows the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that if other gentlemen in the House, and other gentlemen on this side of the House, had the courage to resist the effort that is brought to bear upon them when pressed for appropriations in their district, not warranted or justified, we would write appropriation bills in vastly smaller amounts than we are going to at this session of Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE]. Of course, I accept in good humor the chastisement he has just administered. I esteem him highly and know full well that his sudden coming to the rescue of his friend and colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is born of a desire to hold together the strength of that committee and to have the House and country understand that there is no division in the ranks, and that when the committee speaks it speaks effectively, speaks as one man, and as if by the unit rule. There have been several breaks, however, in the recommendations of the committee since this bill has been under consideration, and on several occasions gentlemen from various parts of the country have undertaken to question the recommendations, and even the wisdom of the committee, and have succeeded on more than one occasion in establishing a principle that the committee itself had not indorsed.

I understand the value of being upon an important committee like that on Appropriations, but I have observed that sometimes those of us on the outside have had to knock at the door of the committee for anything we may be able to obtain; that sometimes when we have struggled for years to obtain that which our people send us here to obtain, we have had to kneel a little bit as well as to knock a little bit. We have had to appeal a little bit, and we have had to yield a little bit, in order to get from the Committee on Appropriations that which we believed we deserved. While I do not say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] takes advantage of his position as chairman of this committee to obtain for his district that which he would not obtain in the open, or that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] would be guilty of any such conduct, yet I observed a little while ago an effort to break through the lines to obtain a fish hatchery for North Carolina, and I observed that a little further back, in the consideration of this bill, when we came to the appropriations respecting the rivers and harbors, without word or comment, there went to the harbor of New York for the removal of injurious deposits within the harbors and adjacent waters of New York City $94,000, an item which is not provided or considered for any other section of this country. I also observed with regard to this very matter of immigration, upon which the gentleman has raised this question, that whereas we have been striving for years and years to obtain a fair and just recognition for the increasing immigration business for the port of Philadelphia, the port of New York never has any trouble. It walks right in and takes away exactly what it wants.

I observe that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] was keen enough before he made his criticism of the gentleman from Philadelphia to see that the items concerning the immigration service in the city of New York were safely passed, and that no question was raised until the city of Philadelphia was reached.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Oh, the gentleman should be fair. I made no criticism of the appropriations made for Philadelphia.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from North Carolina was not altogether fair to me, because he just drew me over the coals in a nice roughshod way, and he dressed me down in the presence of even the galleries, who have come to listen to his eloquence. And I observe that after all of these years of effort, of appeal, of knocking at the door of the committee, we have finally been given $35,000 to properly equip the immigration station at Philadelphia, but that that was done only after we had appropriated $135,000 for the port of New York, many of the items of which would have been subject to a point of order. Nothing was said about this, but it moved along as swiftly and smoothly into this bill as if the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from North Carolina had no influence in the committee or with the membership of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

Mr. MOORE. Oh, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is not a party to this controversy. The issue is between the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] and myself, and the gentleman from New York is an innocent bystander—a spectator who has nothing to do with it at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to intrude, but if I do, I will not be the one that is licked. But for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] I will state that the items regarding Ellis Island, all of them, are within the authority of the committee on this bill. The appropriation for the immigration station at Philadelphia is subject to a point of order. It is in excess of the limit of cost specifically fixed for this station, but the committee recommended the appropriation in order to complete the station, because upon investigation it believed that this was an appropriation that should be made, and it did it, regardless of whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania would be pleased or displeased. It did not let any desire either to favor him or to antagonize him interfere with it in the discharge of its duty. There was a limit of cost fixed on the Philadelphia station. They hacked it all around and finally located it in New Jersey, at Gloucester. They could not find a suitable place in the State of Pennsylvania for the immigration station authorized [applause], and if it had not been for the efforts of the gentleman from New York to help properly provide and equip an immigration station at Philadelphia, the gentleman's constituents would have been up in arms in antagonizing his failure to get the appropriations that were thought necessary.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ventured my assistance in this matter without any hope of future reward or any guaranty of indemnity from attack from the gentleman from Pennsylvania or his associates.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman, as I say, is not a party to the controversy; it was between the gentleman from North Carolina and myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not interfering with that controversy. I am quite satisfied that the gentleman from North Carolina will effectively and completely take care of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let us read the last paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order a little while ago on the paragraph on page 148, and I desire to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order on page 148, and I desire to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph will be returned to.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been read, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in the other paragraph that has been disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina wishes to be heard for a moment, and I yield the floor.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I listened to my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] with much interest a moment ago, and I approve of all he said in commendation of the disinterested services of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], but he made one suggestion that was quite surprising, and that was that there had been a combination between two gentlemen from Pennsylvania, Mr. DONOHOE on this side and Mr. MOORE on the other side, for the purpose of unjustifiably extracting money out of the Treasury for Frankford Arsenal. Now, I do not disparage in the slightest the activities of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DONOHOE]. He has been faithful and efficient. But I do wish to commend unreservedly the moderation and the conscientious motives which actuate the service of my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Whoever heard of his asking an appropriation in any bill or for any purpose except it was meritorious? And who has not on more than one occasion observed the scrupulous care and intelligence which he has exercised in the discussion of items for the appropriation of public money? It is because he has in such large degree earned the confidence of his colleagues that he has been so successful in securing legislation for his city and the country. I wished to give an expression of commendation for the modesty and ability with which my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] approaches any effort upon his part to extract money out of the Treasury [applause] and to absolve him at any rate from any combination for that purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17041, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. AUSTIN was granted leave of absence for two days, on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 11 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, to meet to-morrow, Wednesday, June 24, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, calling attention to an item in the sundry civil appropriation act of June 23, 1913, as follows: "Swamp Lands, Fort Washington, Md.: For the purchase of about 6.6 acres of swamp land adjoining the military reservation of Fort Washington, Md., $350," and requesting that the same be included in the sundry civil appropriation bill now pending (H. Doc. No. 1075); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting for incorporation in the sundry civil appropriation bill an estimate of appropriation for the acquisition of a site for a post-office building at Andalusia, Ala. (H. Doc. No. 1076); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 5574) to amend and reenact section 113 of chapter 5 of the Judicial Code of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 891), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 24, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thy servants in this great Senate have been called in the order of Thy providence to help administer the affairs of a great nation, to seek out ways to bring properity, to establish order, to execute justice. Paths which lead to the heights where the eternal truth abides are not easy to find amid the conflict of interests. Only by Thine own guidance shall they be enabled to attain to these heights of human justice and of universal right. Grant that this day Thy blessing may abide upon these Thy servants, that they may be in thought and conscience amenable to the Divine influence, and may be led by Thy spirit into such an appreciation of the grave responsibilities and of the high honor of their position that they may find out what is best for all and that which will glorify Thy name in us as a people. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after one year after this act takes effect it shall be unlawful to manufacture, barter, sell, or give away any spirituous, vinous, malt, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind within the District of Columbia, or to import the same into said District.

SEC. 2. Any person who shall manufacture, barter, sell, give away, or import any such intoxicating liquors or otherwise violate the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not less than fifty nor more than five thousand dollars, or be imprisoned for not less than one nor more than twelve months, or be both fined and imprisoned for each offense, and for a second or subsequent offense such person shall be both fined and imprisoned, and each act of manufacturing, bartering, selling, giving away, or importing such liquors shall, for the purposes of this act, constitute a separate offense.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WORKS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 to install and maintain an outdoor exhibit at the Panama-California Exposition to be held at San Diego, Cal., in 1915, to illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government pertaining to irrigation, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. SIMMONS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

STATUE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON GLICK.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to offer a resolution, and I should like to have unanimous consent for its immediate adoption.

Mr. President, there is being placed in Statuary Hall to-day the statue of George Washington Glick. Under the law each State is entitled to place two statues of its distinguished men or women in that famous Hall. About 10 years ago Kansas selected from her citizens as one of the recipients of this honor John James Ingalls, who was formerly a celebrated Member of this body. About one year ago Kansas chose another of her citizens, George Washington Glick, the only Democratic governor the State ever had until the present administration, to receive the same high honor.

As everyone knows, Senator Ingalls was an uncompromising Republican. As is equally well known, Gov. Glick was an uncompromising Democrat. These men lived and died in the same town, Atchison, Kans., and are buried in the same cemetery. It is therefore very fitting that the statues of these eminent sons of Kansas, representing, respectively, two branches of political thought and the two great political parties of this country, should stand side by side in the Hall of Fame.

A prominent place immediately at the right of the entrance leading from Statuary Hall to the House of Representatives has been selected for the statue of Gov. Glick. A place equally important has been selected for the statue of Senator Ingalls, immediately at the left of the same entrance.

Mr. President, I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 402) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of Kansas of the statue of George Washington Glick, to-day erected in Statuary Hall in the Capitol, be made the special order for Saturday, July 18, 1914, after the conclusion of the routine business.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN & HARTFORD RAILROAD.

Mr. NORRIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 403), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the evidence taken by the Interstate Commerce Commission pursuant to Senate resolution No. 260, concerning the financial transactions of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., together with the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission thereon, be printed as a Senate document.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE—CIVIL-SERVICE LAWS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, some days ago the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], while discussing an item in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, made some rather violent criticisms of the administration of the Government Printing Office while Mr. Benedict was at the head of it. This was during the administration of Mr. Cleveland. I had a colloquy with the Senator from Ohio at that time, and I suppose by reason of that both Mr. Benedict and Mr. Albert Baker, who was his secretary, have written me commenting on the statements made by the Senator from Ohio.

The two letters are of the same general tenor and in substance the same. I wish to ask consent to have the letter of Mr. Baker printed in the RECORD. I will not take the time to read it unless some one prefers to have that course taken, but merely ask to have it printed in the RECORD. I will not ask to have the letter of Mr. Benedict printed, for it would be practically a duplication. I selected Mr. Baker's letter for the reason that he was the private secretary, and it was the memorandum book said to have been made by Mr. Baker, from which the Senator from Ohio read, and about which the colloquy I had with him occurred.

I should like to have printed the letter of Mr. Baker, together with some extracts from a speech delivered in the House of Representatives January 11, 1898, by Hon. James G. Maguire, a Representative from the State of California. The extracts are referred to in the letter of Mr. Baker, and I have marked the part I should like to have inserted immediately following Mr. Baker's letter. If there be no objection, I will be glad to have that done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK, June 19, 1914.

Hon. WILLIAM J. STONE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to remarks made by you, on page 10400 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 13, during the course of Senator BURTON'S speech. You question the accuracy of some of the statements made by the Senator from Ohio in reference to the past Democratic administration of the Government Printing Office.

I had the honor to be the private secretary to whom Mr. BURTON refers, and your characterization of his information as "trash" was well-warranted; in fact, it was the resurrection of a deliberate misrepresentation of facts and records of the Government Printing Office during the last Cleveland administration made in a speech by Congressman Landis, of Indiana, on the floor of the House January 5, 1898. It proved a boomerang for Landis at that time, and if the true facts were now known in the Senate it would show that Senator BURTON'S source of information was very inaccurate, to say the least.

At the time of the Landis speech I placed in the hands of Hon. James G. Maguire, who was a Congressman at that time from California, the data and facts, and on January 11, 1898, he having obtained the "books" from the Printing Office, replied to the attack made on the former Public Printer and me. Mr. Maguire's speech was eminently satisfactory from a Democratic standpoint, but very discomforting to Landis, who was shown to have deliberately garbled and misread memoranda purporting to have been made by me.

I am inclosing copy of Mr. Maguire's speech, and have marked that part which refers especially to the list of names read by Senator BURTON; also marked my communication, which was read on the floor of the House during the course of his speech. This letter and the books which Mr. Maguire obtained disclosed that some 15 of the persons named were reinstated by Public Printer Benedict, who had discharged them; that the notations "G. A. R.," "Veteran," "Old soldier," "Soldier's widow," etc., were for the purpose of reinstatement; and that the name, date of discharge, reason for discharge, and reason for reinstatement and date of same were all written on the same line in the books, and could not have been overlooked by Landis except for the purpose of deliberate misrepresentation to the House. All these discharges and reinstatements took place when the civil service did not apply to the Printing Office. The office was classified about one year before the close of President Cleveland's administration.

At the time of the large discharge (some 700), referred to by Senator BURTON as "Bloody Monday," the office was outside of the classified service, and the vacancies caused by this discharge were never filled by the appointment of Democrats, as Mr. Benedict found he was able to run the office and turn out more work with nearly 1,000 less employees than his Republican predecessor. These two large discharges were caused by an error of judgment on the part of President Cleveland in leaving Mr. Palmer, the Republican Public Printer, in office nearly a year and a half under his administration. Mr. Palmer, in order to hang on and curry favor with the dominant party, made during this time some 1,300 appointments when the needs of the service did not require any appointments, which was a direct violation of the law. Many Democrats were included in the large discharges, owing to the fact that the quota from some congressional districts and States was far in excess of any equitable basis.

I assert without fear of contradiction that after the office was placed in the classified service the spirit and letter of the law was strictly enforced during the remainder of the Democratic administration.

Perhaps Senator BURTON would be surprised to know that his own party is the greatest offender against the civil service. I have in my possession a list of 75 names, sent to me on October 27, 1899, by the then president of the Civil Service Commission, Mr. Proctor, with the information that all of these persons were returned to the Printing Office, from June 27, 1899, to October 25, 1899, under third proviso of rule 9, presidential order of May 29, 1899, which provided "that any person dismissed from the service upon charges of delinquency or misconduct may be reinstated * * * without regard to the one-year limit of this rule upon the certification of the proper appointing officer that he has thoroughly investigated the case and found that the charges upon which the dismissal was based were not true." In the case of each of these 75 persons the then Republican Public Printer stated in his requisition to the Civil Service Commission for reinstatement, "I have thoroughly investigated the case and found that the charges upon which the dismissal was based were not true." The facts are that several of these persons voluntarily resigned from the office in 1894 to take up other occupations or employment—in the case of one man who I note has been reduced by the present Public Printer, and which seems to aggrieve the Senator from Ohio, there could have been no inadvertence in making such certification to the Civil Service Commission, for this man voluntarily resigned to go with the retiring Public Printer, who had taken up the editorship of a Syracuse newspaper. Then when reappointed Public Printer under President McKinley's first term a deliberate falsification of the records is made in order to get this man back in the office, some four years after his resignation. In most of the remaining 75 names they were removed from the office in a necessary reduction of force and their places not filled during the succeeding years. They were not let out through any misconduct or delinquency, and there was nothing to "thoroughly investigate" along these lines. The 75 names sent me only cover a short period of time. How many in all were juggled into the classified service in this manner?

In conclusion let me state that an examination of the records of the Printing Office will show that most of the employees reduced by Public Printer Ford displaced Democrats when they were promoted, all done at a time when civil service was supposed to govern, and for no other reason than the natural desire of Republican Public Printers to give the better places to their own kind and faith.

I regret the length of this letter, but I desired that you be fully informed of the facts. You might wish to use some of the data that I have furnished, or at some future time these old lies may crop up again.

I am, with sincere respect,

Very truly, yours, ALBERT BAKER.

SOME "LUCKY HITS."

In the course of his speech, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Landis] produced a memorandum book, kept by Mr. Albert Baker as clerk under the Public Printer during Mr. Benedict's administration, and read from that, and from two other similar books kept by Mr. Baker, certain memoranda which he told the House were sample reasons for the discharge of employees by Mr. Baker and Mr. Benedict. Some of the memoranda read by the gentleman did undoubtedly represent reasons for the discharge of persons named. For example, after some of the names the word "drunk" occurs, and after some of the names memoranda of discreditable transactions on the part of the employees occur. In such cases the memoranda undoubtedly advised the Public Printer concerning the characters of the employees to whom it referred and aided him in selecting among the employees those whose services could best be spared.

The propriety of dragging such harmless memoranda, made for the advice of the Public Printer alone, from the vaults of the Government Printing Office and publishing them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as permanent and public brands of disgrace upon the unfortunate discharged employees is a question of taste and propriety that must forever rest with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Landis] and the present Public Printer, by whom the records were given to the public. I have upon my desk here the three volumes containing the memoranda to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Landis] referred in the course of his speech. I have gone over them carefully. I find that the gentleman has selected some 31 names among many hundreds in these volumes, and I find that he has selected every name after which there was any memoranda that could be, by distortion or perversion, used in this debate to discredit the former Public Printer.

Yet I find upon examination that even that portion of the record published by the gentleman from Indiana in the course of his speech bears upon its face evidence that it can not properly be construed to the meaning given it by the gentleman from Indiana. I find that the gentleman from Indiana in 11 of the cases stated by him has suppressed a part of the memoranda made by Mr. Baker after the names to which he referred and in connection with the memoranda to which he called attention of the House for the purpose of condemning Mr. Benedict. The memoranda that was suppressed shows that Mr. Benedict was extremely liberal in his treatment of old soldiers who were dismissed from the Public Printing Office, even where the cause of dismissal was bitter offensive partisanship. For example, the gentleman read the name of "W. R. Burgess, compositor, discharged June 13, 1894. Trimmer. Joined the Old Dominion Republican Club."

He read that memorandum for the purpose of showing the bitter partisanship of the Public Printer and for the purpose of winning the applause of the Republican place hunters, but it would have spoiled both of his purposes to have read the remainder of the memorandum, which is: "Reappointed June 17, 1895." He read also the name of "Richard M. Calhoun, watchman, discharged June 13, 1894. Active and offensive in politics." But he failed to read the following portion of the same memorandum: "Reinstated July 22, 1896." He read: "Mamie E. Fisher, discharged July 14, 1894. All her folks are solid Republicans." How he came to make the mistake I do not know, unless he was reading from a purported transcript made by some other person whose handwriting was not familiar to him, for in the record the memorandum, very plainly written, is: "All her folks are rabid Republicans."

He also read: "John Green, jr., discharged June 1, 1894. Bitter Republican." In all fairness to this House he should have read the remainder of the memorandum: "Reinstated March 23, 1895." He also read: "James C. Toy, wagon messenger, discharged September 17, 1894. Not willing. Causes trouble. G. A. R." By stopping at that point he elicited the enthusiastic applause of certain Republicans whose patriotism consists always in hatred of Democrats and in eagerness to fasten upon them some charge of prejudice against veteran Union soldiers. They greeted his reading of this memorandum with cries of "Ah!" He read the cabalistic letters with an intonation and expression that reminded me most forcibly of the renowned detective called Foxy Quiller.

In the suggestive manner of his reading of the memorandum I imagined I could hear the creaking voice of that renowned sleuthhound crying, "Ah, ha! says Foxy Quiller, always suspect the meaning of the letters 'G. A. R.' when written by a Democrat." He preserved the popularity of that memorandum on the Republican side by suppressing the remainder of it, namely: "Reinstated September 15, 1896. Helper."

I am not prepared to say why he omitted these words, but it does seem to me that, even at the expense of sacrificing some of the Republican applause and of dampening some of the Republican enthusiasm, he should have had the frankness to read the whole of the memorandum or none of it.

He read: "Joan W. Usilton, discharged April 1, 1895. Agitator; charges P. P. dishonest and tyrant." But he did not read the remainder of the memorandum, showing that Mr. Usilton had been previously discharged and reinstated. He read: "Bertie K. Peters, folder, discharged April 3, 1895. Charged to Texas." But he did not read the remainder of the memorandum: "Reappointed June 17, 1895." He read: 'George P. Silence, laborer, discharged March 13, 1895. Anti-Democratic." That was a good place to stop, considering the purposes of the gentleman from Indiana; but in common frankness, even though it might have militated against his purposes, he should have read the remainder of the memorandum: "Reappointed December 2, 1895."

He read: "George McCutcheon discharged April 3, 1895. Veteran and vindictive." That is Mr. Landis's construction of the memorandum, but it is not the memorandum as it is written in the book. The memorandum is, "Veteran (Pa.)—vindictive partisan," a memorandum very different in meaning and containing none of the suggestion of animosity toward the veterans involved in the form adopted and substituted for the language of the memorandum itself by the gentleman from Indiana.

He read: "Mary B. Dunbar, feeder, discharged April 18, 1895; boarding house; father discharged before when I was here," but he did not deem it necessary to read the remainder of the memorandum: "Reinstated January 26, 1896."

He read: "Alice Daly, discharged June 9, 1894. Not needed; daughter in department; soldier's widow." In the memorandum as it appears in the book the words are "Not needy."

Upon concluding the reading, or more properly misreading, of this memorandum, the gentleman from Indiana burst into a flood of superheated eloquence, crying out in the agony of his soul:

"Soldier's widow! Hurled from public place because she was the widow of a soldier. * * * It remained for a hyena, preparing a great Government bureau for a baptism of civil-service reform, to cast aspersion and brand with condemnation those whom honest men, brave men, and generous men the world over regard as the sainted legion of this Republic."

The statement that Alice Daly was discharged from the Government Printing Office because she was a soldier's widow is not only absolutely unwarranted by anything appearing in the book, but is shown by an examination of the record to be absolutely untrue, and without a shadow of foundation to justify such an inference. The memorandum was made up by Mr. Baker, in accordance with the instructions given him by the Public Printer, to show who the lady was; what her circumstances were; what, if any, relatives belonging to her immediate family were employed in the same or in other departments of the Government service.

In selecting those whom the imperative demands of the law and the interests of the Government required to be discharged in order to reduce the force to the requirements of the service, he preferred to discharge a woman who was not needy and who had a daughter in another department of the public service, drawing a salary from the Government, rather than to discharge an equally good and equally deserving woman who was needy, who depended for the support of herself and perhaps of dependent relatives upon the wages which she received in the Government Printing Office, and who had no daughter or other relative in any department of the Government service.

The gentleman from Indiana may not have understood this, and he may have frankly given us the benefit of his honest judgment when he said that in his opinion, from an examination of this memorandum and an examination of the three books to which he referred, he made the deduction and fully believed that Alice Daly was discharged from the Government Printing Office because she was a soldier's widow. If indeed that was his judgment, he must be acquitted of any motive of injustice to Mr. Benedict in making the statement on the floor, and of any motive to deceive ex-Union soldiers by the publication of that statement in his speech; but if that be his honest judgment from the memorandum and from an examination of the books to which he has referred, his mental sagacity will never interfere with his soul's salvation, for he must then be admitted to come clearly within the well-known exception made by the churchmen to the rule that those who do not embrace and retain the true faith can not enter the kingdom of heaven.

The gentleman from Indiana amused the House and encouraged his fellow partisans by reading the following memorandum:

"John F. Atkinson, discharged July 1, 1894. N. G.; lives in Indiana."

He seemed to think that Mr. Atkinson was discharged because he lived in Indiana and not because of anything that might be indicated by the letters "N. G." Probably for the purpose of strengthening his rhetoric, he made the statement that when Mr. Atkinson was discharged "he was instructing three tyros in the printer's art appointed by Mr. Benedict, one of them hailing from Georgia, another from Louisiana, and the third from Texas."

My information is that no printer was appointed by Mr. Benedict in the division in which Mr. Atkinson was serving prior to July 1, 1894, and that no printer was ever appointed by Mr. Benedict who was not a member of a regularly organized typographical union, at least as expert in the printer's art as was Mr. Atkinson, and probably less disposed to impose upon the credulity of Representatives in Congress.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will my friend allow me right there——

Mr. MAGUIRE. My time is very short, and I have much yet to say, but I will be pleased to hear the question of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to know if the gentleman does not think that a card from a printer's union is better evidence of competency than a civil-service examination?

Mr. MAGUIRE. No man can become a member of a regular printers' union without being a practical printer; his examination for admission to the union consists of practical tests of his skill in the art of printing; his card is evidence of all that, and is, in my opinion, as satisfactory evidence of his capacity as the certificate of any civil-service board.

The gentleman from Indiana will confer a favor upon the great body of printers who belong to the typographical unions if he will give the names of the three tyros in the printer's art appointed by Mr. Benedict who were being instructed by Mr. Atkinson prior to July 1, 1894. Upon authority which I believe to be absolutely reliable I am authorized to say that the statement is untrue and that the gentleman from Indiana has been imposed upon and grossly deceived by his informant.

The gentleman tells us that Mary E. Gorman was discharged from the Printing Office because she was a plutocrat, and that she was regarded as a plutocrat because, as shown by the memorandum following her name, she was represented as owning two houses and having money at interest. It is quite true that, in reducing the force of employees at the Printing Office, under the imperative necessity imposed by the law and by the outrageous condition in which he found the office, Mr. Benedict did consider the fact that Mary Gorman owned two houses and had money at interest in determining whether she or some equally worthy woman who had no means of support other than her wages as an employee in the Printing Office should be discharged, and that he did give preference to an equally worthy but more needy woman in reducing the force.

Of course the gentleman from Indiana would have discharged the needy woman as unworthy of consideration and would have retained in her stead the woman who owned houses and had money at interest. It is quite probable that no woman would have stood any chance of preferment over Mary Gorman in the gentleman's estimation unless she owned more houses than Mary Gorman owned and had more money at interest.

THE CHARITY THEORY—"HE NEEDED THE PLACE."

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Henderson], interrupting the gentleman from Indiana, read from one of these books an entry stating that B. P. Entriken had resigned June 30, 1894. The gentleman from Iowa pronounced the statement that Mr. Entriken had resigned to be false, but I venture to say that Mr. Entriken's resignation was duly filed in the office of the Public Printer.

I say that without investigation, because I can imagine no possible reason for making the entry unless Mr. Entriken had in fact filed his resignation. The call for his resignation was, at that time, a mere courtesy to which Mr. Entriken was not legally entitled. The Public Printer then had absolute power to discharge whomsoever he would without giving any reason for so doing. The civil-service rules were not at that time in force in the Printing Office, and it is quite immaterial whether Mr. Entriken severed his connection with the office by resignation or by discharge. In either case his removal amounted to a discharge, because the call for his resignation was equivalent to a notice of dismissal.

But I call attention to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, in his behalf, for quite another purpose. In discussing this case the gentleman from Iowa said:

"This man was appointed by Mr. Palmer on my recommendation and promoted until he got $1,400. His wife died, leaving young children on his hands, and he came to me when I was on my back, and I wrote an appeal to the Government Printer and tried to save him. He had been ordered to resign. I told him not to leave his place until he was driven out. Senator Gear, at my request, went personally to see the Government Printer and was insulted and told to 'mind his own business.'"

I am bound to assume, since the gentleman from Iowa states it to be a fact, that when Senator Gear attempted to interfere with his management of the force of the Government Printing Office, and attempted to dictate to him concerning the appointment of employees to serve the Government under him in that department, and attempted to insist upon the retention or reappointment of an employee, not upon any consideration of the interests of the public service, not because the employee was skillful or efficient or industrious or faithful, but because the employee was a friend of a Representative in Congress and was in circumstances entitling him to the charitable consideration of generous-minded people, who had probably told the Public Printer, in accordance with the advice given him by "his influence," that he would "not leave his place until he was driven out," that he—Mr. Benedict—told Senator Gear "to mind his own business."

Of course, I do not approve of the rudeness of that reply, but it seems to me that, under those circumstances, Mr. Benedict was entirely justified in mildly and considerately making that suggestion to the Senator, and that his courage in protecting the interests of the United States Government against the interference and domination of Members of the legislative department of the Government was highly commendable.

UNJUST ATTACK ON MR. BAKER.

So much for the assaults made upon Public Printer Benedict. The record of his public service is and will ever be a complete and invincible defense against all partisan assaults. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Landis], in the course of his denunciation of Mr. Benedict's administration of the Government Printing Office, made an attack upon Mr. Albert Baker, a clerk in that office under Mr. Benedict, which, in my opinion was utterly and absolutely unwarranted and inexcusable. He called him a "hyena" and an "official headsman" in charge of decapitations in the Printing Office, and held him up to ridicule and scorn as a malignant enemy of Republicans in general and of veteran soldiers and soldiers' widows in particular.

Mr. Baker was not an official headsman. He was not in charge of political decapitations in the Printing Office; he had nothing to do with removals or appointments; he had nothing to do with the recommendation or suggestion of removals or appointments. He was assigned to duty as a clerk in Mr. Benedict's office, to do what he was told to do by his superior; to keep such records as he was told to keep. He had neither power nor responsibility beyond this. Mr. Benedict was responsible for all removals and appointments, and when he sought advice concerning removals he sought it from the heads of the different divisions of the Printing Office, and not from the clerks, whose duty began and ended with keeping such records and doing such clerical work as he directed.

Immediately after the assault upon Mr. Baker was made by the gentleman from Indiana, and knowing that the statement made on this floor concerning him, if allowed to pass unchallenged, might be unjustly used to the prejudice of his standing and rights in the service of the Government, I wrote him, asking for a statement of his version of the matters referred to by the gentleman from Indiana, and, in particular, for a full statement of the facts concerning his connection with the dismissal of employees from the Government Printing Office.

On Saturday last I received a letter from Mr. Baker, in which, in a straightforward, manly way, he shows the absolute injustice of the attack made upon him. The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 8, 1898.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, in which you request the facts in connection with certain statements and deductions made in a speech by Mr. Landis, of Indiana, from records kept by me during Mr. Benedict's administration of the Government Printing Office, and I reply as follows:

Upon Mr. Benedict assuming the duties of Public Printer in May, 1894, he designated me to act as secretary, which position I held until the close of his administration. My services in the Printing Office were continuous from April, 1887, to July 16, 1897, at which time I was transferred from the above-named office to a position in the Treasury Department.

Mr. Landis, in the course of his remarks, states that Mr. Benedict brought me with him; that upon Mr. Palmer's taking charge of the office I was promptly kicked out; that the Civil Service Commission procured my reinstatement for the purpose of transfer to the Treasury Department, where I had a brother, who was chief of a division. The facts are that Mr. Benedict did not bring me with him; that I served three and one-half months under the present administration of the Printing Office; that the records do not show that I was discharged and reinstated for the purpose of transfer; that the Civil Service Commission did not procure my transfer to the Treasury Department, and I never had a brother chief of division in that department.

My duties as secretary did not require me to make discharges or recommendations for discharges, and I deny that part of Mr. Landis's speech wherein he refers to my being the official headsman and making discharges. I will go further: If he can substantiate his statement in a single instance, I will relieve his distress over the fact of my now occupying a position in the classified service by promptly resigning.

In regard to the books kept by me, one of which was produced by Mr. Landis, I will state that they contain the names of every person employed in the Government Printing Office at the time they were made up. The deaths, resignations, discharges, and reinstatements were entered in them from time to time as the reports of the same came on my desk. They are in no sense my personal records, and are only private in so far as the Public Printer desires to keep them. I made very few memorandums in these books, principally in reference to other papers on file in the office. Every notation placed therein of "soldier," "soldier's widow," or "G. A. R." was there not as an indication of a reason for the discharge, but for the benefit of the person opposite whose name placed, and these notations were used by the Public Printer subsequently when making reinstatements.

Of the names read by Mr. Landis, which were gleaned from the three books, I recall 15 of these persons were reinstated by Mr. Benedict, among them being "soldiers" and "soldiers' widows." I am at loss to understand how this fact could have escaped Mr. Landis when looking over the books, as my rule was to record the reinstatement on the same line with the discharge. We will take, for instance, the citation: "James C. Toy, wagon messenger; discharged September 17, 1894; not willing; causes trouble; G. A. R." If I remember right, the Grand Army of the Republic had him reinstated in the office; certainly Mr. Benedict reinstated him because he was a "soldier."

Mr. Benedict, when he took charge of the office, deemed the force of employees in excess of the demands of the service and made reductions. In making dismissals in the divisions in which women were employed I know that it was his desire to retain, all things being equal, the needy women and to dismiss those who were best fitted and able to relinquish their positions.

It would seem that humane action would require that the Public Printer keep the woman who had no means of support other than her position in the office and discharge the woman whose husband was a lawyer and engaged in active practice or the woman who was living with her husband and he able to support her or the woman who was well to do and worked simply as a matter of choice and not of necessity.

In conclusion I wish to say that I have endeavored to give you a correct and impartial statement.

I am, with respect, very truly, yours, ALBERT BAKER.

Hon. JAMES G. MAGUIRE,
House of Representatives,

After receiving the letter from Mr. Baker which I have just read I called upon the present Public Printer for the three books to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Landis] referred and from which he quoted in the course of his speech. The Public Printer very courteously and promptly sent the books to me, and I have them before me. I have carefully examined the three books and all the entries contained in them. I have gone through them thoroughly, and I say now that the gentleman from Indiana made a most unwarranted use of them.

They do not in the least tend to show any discrimination whatever against old soldiers or soldiers' widows by Mr. Benedict as Public Printer. On the contrary, an examination of the books shows conclusively that Mr. Benedict discriminated in favor of the old soldiers regardless of their political affiliations, and these very books show violent Republican partisans who were discharged by Mr. Benedict in reducing the force in the Government Printing Office were reinstated by Mr. Benedict because they were veteran soldiers and in spite of the fact that they were bitter and vindictive Republican partisans.

The records of the Government Printing Office will show that when Mr. Benedict went out of office the last time there was a greater proportion of Union soldiers and soldiers' widows employed in the Government Printing Office than there had ever been before under any previous administration.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On June 22, 1914:

S. 4053. An act for the relief of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co.

On June 23, 1914:

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that House bill 12579, the unfinished business, be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. MYERS. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. WALSH]. He is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. I should like to have this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The bill is in the Senate, and the pending question will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending question is on the amendment of the committee on page 77, beginning in line 18, as amended by the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS and the amendment of Mr. ASHURST on behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, this question has been very thoroughly discussed. I am sure the Senate is anxious for a vote. I am going to consume but a very few moments. The question in a nutshell is this: Shall the Mississippi Choctaw Indians be permitted by Congress to share in the fund that has been accumulated by the sale of their lands—in other words, shall these people be given a square deal in the distribution of their own property?

Mr. President, the white man's inhumanity to the red man has been the subject of song and story and sermon since the first pale face put foot upon the Western Hemisphere. The Indian has been plundered; he has been exploited; his interest has been the sport of the speculator and the rapacious lawyer, and his rights have at all times been subordinate to the interests of everybody else. "Perfidious wrongs and immedicable woes" have been his portion since the white man became the ruler of this continent.

The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] a few days ago animadverted upon the great wrong which the Indians had suffered at the hands of the lawyers, referring to the fact that they had paid as high as 33⅓ per cent to lawyers for the protection of their property rights. That is just treatment, Mr. President, compared with the treatment which is being accorded to the Mississippi Choctaws in this instance; that is at least two-thirds better treatment than these people are here to receive, for it is now proposed to take from them 100 per cent.

I am not going to speak of the genealogy of these people; I do not know whether or not they can prove their claims; but I do know, Mr. President, that they are Choctaw Indians; they are of the bone and flesh and blood of the Indians who are to share in the distribution of this fund in the State of Oklahoma. Nor am I asking the Senate to interpret a law; but, on the contrary, I am asking the Senate to write a law which will vouchsafe to these unfortunate people the enjoyment of their rights. As has been well said upon the floor of this Chamber, they have been neglected; they are ignorant; they are illiterate; they are thriftless; they know not their rights; they are not capable of maintaining them if they did; and if their rights are not protected here, they will go on as they have in the past, uncomplaining, and these silent, long-suffering stoics of the woods will never be heard from except through the voice of some one else. They are here now through myself and other Senators asking Congress to give them a square deal. Let the law be written so that the interests of these people may be looked after, so that the Secretary of the Interior or agencies to be created by this Government may go and ascertain the facts as to whether or not these are Choctaw Indians, and entitled to share in this benefaction which is awaiting them at the hands of Congress.

I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that when this question shall be voted on Senators will think of the helplessness of these people, and that they will realize that it is only through their action, their votes, that the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws are to be protected.

The Mississippi Choctaw as I know him personally is one of the genuine autochthons of America. He has been changed very little by the white man's civilization. He is practically the same creature described by Pope when he said:

> Lo, the poor Indian! Whose untutor'd mind
> Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind;
> His soul proud Science never taught to stray
> Far as the solar walk or milky way;
> Yet simple Nature to his hope has giv'n,
> Behind the cloud-topt hill, an humbler heav'n;
> Some safer world in depth of woods embrac'd,
> Some happier island in the wat'ry waste,
> Where slaves once more their native land behold,
> No fiends torment, no Christians thirst for gold.
> To be, contents his natural desire.
> He asks no angel's wing, no seraph's fire;
> But thinks, admitted to that equal sky,
> His faithful dog shall bear him company.

Unless the policy of the Government shall be changed, unless by the vote of the Senate to-day the rights of the Choctaw shall be protected in this bill, his happiness must necessarily be deferred until with his faithful dog he crosses the "cloud-topt hill" and enters the happy hunting ground. I can not believe that your sense of right will permit you to deny these wards of the Nation simple justice.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand—the Chair will correct me if I am wrong—the question comes up now upon the committee amendment as amended by my amendment and as amended by a subsequent amendment, so the question comes up upon the entire amendment as twice amended?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair last night, in the hope of expediting business, made a ruling that was perhaps not correct. The Chair announced last night that the vote would be on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, and not on the entire amendment, but it is immaterial to the Chair how the vote may be taken. If it is desirable to vote on the entire amendment, the Chair has no interest in it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that perfectly. I merely wanted to get the status correct. Then, those of us who favor the committee amendment, as amended by my amendment, will, of course, vote "yea."

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, we desire that the amendment to the committee amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi shall be voted on on its own merits, and not that the vote shall come on the committee amendment as amended on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi. That would give us no opportunity at all of passing upon the merits of this proposal to reopen the Choctaw rolls, which the department has opposed reopening for seven years. We want to vote upon the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi, and not upon the joint proposition. I should like to ask the parliamentary status.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled last night that the question was on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, not that the Chair ruled correctly, but for the purpose of expediting the business of the Senate. The Chair understood that that was the only question that was in real controversy.

Mr. OWEN. Then, those who wish to support the contention of the Senator from Mississippi should vote "yea," and those desiring to support the Committee on Indian Affairs should vote "nay." Is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the view of the Chair. The Chair thinks, however, that a far better situation would arise if a motion were made to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OWEN. Then, the question now is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has stated that the Chair believes that he made an incorrect ruling last night on the motion to lay on the table, but no Senator seemed to object; and the Chair is going to put the question now, Will the Senate concur in the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the committee amendment?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to thrash this straw again. I wish to say merely one word in response to the very eloquent and the very pathetic appeal just made by the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

I share the sympathy which he expresses for the Mississippi Choctaws, and I feel an equal sympathy and consideration for the Oklahoma Choctaws. It is not necessary to subject the Oklahoma Choctaws to delay or to privation or to suffering on account of any real or imaginary rights which might be alleged in behalf of the Mississippi Choctaws.

I suggested a few days ago that in 1820 and 1830 the white people were moving in large numbers into the State of Mississippi. It was their desire, and it was the desire of the General Government, that the Indians should be removed from the State of Mississippi to some region west of the Mississippi River. In order to consummate that design, in order to get rid of the Indians, a treaty was entered into in 1820 and another one in 1830. The Choctaws ceded a large tract of their land to the United States Government and received in return therefor the territory which they now occupy in the State of Oklahoma. The policy and design of the Government, be it remembered, were to get these Choctaws to leave Mississippi and to remove to the Far West. There were some Indians who would not go West. In order to make provision for them, the treaty stipulated that those who desired to remain in Mississippi and become citizens of the States should receive certain lands—a section of land to the head of a family, a half section to children over 10 years, and a quarter section to children under 10 years.

A number of the Indians qualified under that provision and received the land. More than a million acres of land were given to the Indians who qualified under that provision. Land scrip was issued, capitalized, and afterwards paid in the amount of $872,000 to the Choctaws who remained in Mississippi. In 1889 the Choctaws who neither received land nor scrip nor money in 1852 were given an opportunity to qualify in a court provided for the purpose, and $417,000 was distributed among those Choctaws. Three efforts have been made by the Government of the United States to satisfy any claim and any right on the part of the Choctaw Indians who remained in the State of Mississippi.

On the other hand, a number of Choctaws, subsequent to the first migration, removed to the State of Oklahoma between 1836 and 1892. They were encouraged to go by their brethren in Oklahoma; they were admitted to membership in the tribe; they were allowed to share the property of the tribe; every privilege was accorded to them. But in 1893 the Dawes Commission was created. Now, let it be remembered again that bona fide residence in Oklahoma has always been a condition precedent to membership in that tribe. The treaty itself, the patent itself, conveyed those lands to the Choctaws on condition that they should remove there; in other words, it stipulated that they should have and hold the lands so long as they existed as a nation and lived on the land.

In 1893, as I have said, the Dawes Commission was created with a view to winding up the affairs of these Indians. The Dawes Commission decided that the Mississippi Choctaws who had remained in Mississippi had no right to share in the tribal property of the Oklahoma Choctaws. An appeal was prosecuted from that decision of the commission to the Federal court in Oklahoma, and the Federal court decided that the Mississippi Choctaws remaining in Mississippi had no right to membership in the Oklahoma tribe and had no right to share in their property. An appeal was prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court of the United States held that the Choctaws remaining in Mississippi had no right to share in the tribal property in Oklahoma.

Now, two decisions of the Federal court stand here in opposition to the pending amendment; but, Mr. President, notwithstanding those court decisions, in order that they might have their peace, in order that they might come into their own, out of an abounding generosity, the Oklahoma Choctaws in 1902 reopened their rolls and allowed 1,440 and odd Mississippi Choctaws who had removed to the State to be enrolled in the Oklahoma tribe and to share in the tribal property. That act of generosity cost the Oklahoma Choctaws $1,400,000.

But, Mr. President, this matter ought to be closed at some time. It has been pending for 84 years. Thrice has our Government tried to satisfy the Choctaws who remained in Mississippi; the Oklahoma Choctaws have repeatedly opened their doors and encouraged their kinsmen to come to Oklahoma; they encouraged them to come at the cost of $1,400,000. To-day they have $7,500,000 in cash in the Treasury, uncollected balances of $7,100,000, and unsold properties aggregating some $25,000,000 or $30,000,000.

Many of these Indians are, of course, amongst our most intelligent, enlightened, and successful citizens, but there are many full bloods. I had a letter yesterday from a full-blood Choctaw, appealing to Congress and appealing to the Senate to pass this per capita payment of $100. They have had five lean years, five dry years in Oklahoma. It has been a severe time upon many of the whites; imagine the severity upon the Indians, and particularly upon the full bloods. For three years they have had no per capita payment. Last year this proposition went out on account of the opposition of the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Now, since they are asking but for $2,700,000, which would leave $4,800,000 in the Treasury, and a large estate in addition to that, why subject the Oklahoma Choctaws, why subject the full bloods to privation, to hardship, and to actual suffering merely in order to speculate about the rights which, if ever determined in favor of the Mississippi Choctaws, there will be a superabundance of property to liquidate any claim they may possibly establish?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. We were perfectly willing on yesterday and made the proposition to go on and pay the $100 per capita under the terms of the bill provided any disposition whatever was shown to deal fairly with the Mississippi Choctaws, and to ascertain what number of the Mississippi Choctaws were entitled to share in this benefaction. We do not want to delay the payment; I do not at any rate; I should be very glad to have the matter compromised and to let the Choctaws in Oklahoma, who are suffering from five lean years, have the $100 per capita if the Senator from Oklahoma will consent that the law may be so amended that the Secretary of the Interior may institute proceedings to ascertain who of the Mississippi Choctaws are entitled to share in the fund.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GORE. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I rose to ask a question of the junior Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I shall be glad to answer it if the Senator from Oklahoma will permit me to do so at this time.

Mr. GORE. With pleasure; yes, sir.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Oklahoma has just given a recital of the various settlements which were made with the Mississippi Choctaws by the United States Government. Does the Senator from Mississippi concede the correctness of that statement?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I concede the correctness of the statement that an effort has been made several times to ascertain who are entitled to share in this fund; but I also concede, and it will not be denied, that when the rolls were closed in 1907 the Indian Commissioner said that he had not had time to complete the investigation; and I also know that there are something like 1,100 Choctaws in Mississippi who stand in relation to this fund equally with those who were permitted to go to Oklahoma and participate in it. Now, we know they are there. We know they are entitled to it in morals. That they have failed to take advantage of the opportunities I confess, but they did so because they did not know their rights, and they had nobody to instruct them as to their rights. I am simply asking now that the Congress give them an opportunity; and if they are not entitled to it under the law and under the treaty, then of course they will not share it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, as I understood the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma, there was first a grant of land to those Choctaws.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, there was a promise of land.

Mr. POMERENE. Just let me finish my question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There was a promise of land, but no land.

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; the Mississippi Choctaws got nothing.

Mr. GORE They got a million acres of land.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understood, the Senator said that they got either land or land scrip.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; over a million acres.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, secondly, I infer that there was some other dissatisfaction, and a certain sum of money was granted to the Mississippi Choctaws. I am simply interested in knowing what the facts are about the matter, and I wanted to know what was the difference between the two propositions.

Mr. VARDAMAN. These people there have all the moral rights that the Mississippi Choctaws had who went to Oklahome in 1907. They just failed to take advantage of this privilege; that is all. They are there. They deserve it. They are entitled to it. It is theirs.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, do the records show who were the recipients of this land scrip and of this money so that we can ascertain?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not think the record shows that any of the Mississippi Choctaws in Mississippi now have ever shared in it at all.

Mr. POMERENE. Is there any way of showing whether or not these Mississippi claimants or their ancestors received this scrip or this money?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suppose so.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, may I answer the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GORE. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. OWEN. Under the treaty of 1830 a number of Choctaws received lands in Mississippi, estimated by my colleague—and he has recently hunted it up—at a million acres of land. After that Murray & Vroom made a list of those who ought to have been enrolled as fourteenth-article claimants in 1830. There were 4,100 Choctaws who were on the Murray & Vroom roll, and between 1838 and 1855, 3,400 of them moved from Mississippi to Oklahoma. Afterwards, before the Curtis Act of 1898 was passed, 700 more moved, according to the records. Those lists are shown on the muster rolls in the Indian Office. So that of the 4,100 found entitled by Murray & Vroom 4,100 moved.

Since that time, and when the Congress determined to break up the Five Tribes and their government, Congress in 1896 ordered the Dawes Commission to make up these rolls. I represented the Mississippi Choctaws and applied for their enrollment in 1896. The Dawes Commission refused to enroll them, because they had not moved to Oklahoma. I took the matter on appeal to the United States court presided over by Judge Clayton. He decided in the Jack Amos case that because they had not removed he would not enroll them. The matter was then appealed to the Supreme Court, and they held that the decision of Judge Clayton was final under the law.

From 1898 up to 1907, nine years, the Dawes Commission were considering various individual Mississippi Choctaws. They went down to Mississippi in 1898 and made a tentative list of those who appeared to be of Indian blood—a list of 1,900 people, some of them full bloods, some of them half bloods, and some of less degree—but the Dawes Commission reported at the same time that these people could not prove their rights under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, because they could not prove who their ancestors were, and they could not prove that their ancestors had complied with that agreement. That was the roll referred to by the Senator, who said that 1,100 of those never were finally admitted; but after March 10, 1899, when this list was made, the Dawes Commission sent expedition after expedition into Mississippi and elsewhere to consider the individual claims of anyone who could prove himself entitled; and in addition to that the Choctaws and the Chickasaws agreed that they would waive the matter of evidence and would not require them to prove their descent from an ancestor who had complied with the treaty of 1830, but if they could show themselves to be full-blooded Choctaws, and if they would, after being notified that they were so recognized, within six months remove to Oklahoma and live there for three years, they should be enrolled.

Mr. POMERENE. What year was that?

Mr. OWEN. It was in 1902 that this compromise was made of this question. Under that agreement with the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, made an act of Congress and approved by the vote of the Choctaw people and approved by the vote of the Chickasaw people, 1,642 of these people from Mississippi were brought into Oklahoma to divide this property of the Western Choctaws, estimated by my colleague at $1,400,000. Now, after 18 years of effort to close these rolls, after 7 years since the Congress of the United States by an act did close these rolls, the Senators from Mississippi, moved by the activity of some of their citizens, are urging the reopening of these rolls. It means the opening of Pandora's box. The Interior Department has reported against it time and again. We are entitled to our peace, and the committee ought to be supported in this matter.

I hope my colleague will pardon me. I did not know I was going to make a speech.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

I wish to say further to the Senator from Ohio that in 1852 an appropriation was made by Congress of $872,000 to pay the Indians for the latter half of the land scrip which had not been issued. In 1889 the Mississippi Choctaws who had received neither land nor scrip nor money under the act of 1852 were given $417,000. It was distributed among them, some 192 families, I suppose representing a thousand individuals.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I ask the Senator where those so-called Mississippi Choctaws were at that time?

Mr. GORE. I think the 192 families were in Oklahoma.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and, as a matter of fact, all of these distributions the Senator is referring to were made to Choctaws in Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Oh, no.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Every one of them.

Mr. GORE. The distribution of 1852 was made to Choctaws in Mississippi. It was the land scrip which was given to them on the very condition that they did remain in the State of Mississippi.

This matter has been pending now for 84 years. The General Government has thrice made an effort to satisfy the Mississippi Choctaws who remained in that State. If they have any claim against anybody it is a moral claim only against the Government of the United States.

Mr. OWEN. They have not any claim against the Government.

Mr. GORE. So far as that is concerned, they have no claim against the Government. Twice the courts have decided that they have no right to share in the Oklahoma property. I do not know how many efforts or how many cases there must be, or how long this is to be continued. There have been three efforts by the General Government and two decisions by the court. If it is to be pursued until ultimately they get a decision in their favor, if that policy should be pursued in litigation, there never would be an end to judicial controversies or to controversies of any character.

It would seem that these three efforts on the part of the General Government and these two court decisions, and even subsequently to that the voluntary opening of their roll to the Choctaws at such an enormous expense, ought to show that at least the Oklahoma Choctaws have acted in good faith. To penalize them now, to subject them to privation and in many instances to want, is an instance of man's inhumanity to man which no one can justify, least of all to the involuntary wards of this great and generous Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, once upon a time somebody came to Benjamin Franklin, I believe, and asked him why he did not reply to a certain argument which had just been delivered. He said: "To reply is easy; to silence is impossible."

I have already replied to every point that has just been made by the two Senators from Oklahoma. I have called the attention of the Senate to the fact that they have been using the phrase "Mississippi Choctaws" in an ambiguous sense, calculated to mislead; that when I use the term "Mississippi Choctaws" I am referring to the Choctaws who are now residing in Mississippi; and they get up here and give you a long list of things that have been done for so-called Mississippi Choctaws who are residing in Oklahoma and who are not known by me as Mississippi Choctaws at all. Of course all Choctaws were at one time Mississippi Choctaws, except those who went from Alabama.

Mr. OWEN. The law describes them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The law describes the Mississippi Choctaws, as far as it describes them in the act of 1902 at all, as I have defined them, to wit, the Choctaws who are in Mississippi. We undertook in 1902 to make provision for those Choctaws who are now in Mississippi, and the Senators keep going back historically to all the legislation that ever was enacted concerning Choctaws who originally lived in Mississippi but afterwards moved to Oklahoma and are living there now. They are there to-day.

Mr. OWEN. We have taken good care of one group after another until we are worn out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If you have taken good care of one group after another until you are worn out, it would have been better for you to have taken care of all the groups at once. At any rate, the fact is not disputed that a number of them are there now, and they are very much more Indian than the Senator from Oklahoma is, and very much more Indian than anybody here is. They are full-blood Indians, they are half-blood Indians, they are quarter-blood Indians; and I offered yesterday to take care of the full bloods and the half bloods only and let the balance go in an amendment I offered to an amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

All that we are trying to do is to see to it that the distribution of this fund is not begun—and if it once begins, it will be finished before they are through with it—until these people have had a proper chance. Why, there is nobody who will deny, because the argument of the senior Senator from Oklahoma would stare them in the face if they did, that there were 1,110 of them on the roll pigeonholed down here for eight years; and yet you come up and say they did not move to Oklahoma. Why, they never got any notice that they could move to Oklahoma. They were to be given six months after the final approval of the rolls, and the rolls were not finally approved. Then the bar of the statute of limitations was pleaded against them.

Again and again and again it has been said upon the floor that the Supreme Court of the United States decided that these Choctaws in Mississippi had no rights in Oklahoma unless they had moved there, and yet the fact is that the Supreme Court never decided anything of the sort. The Supreme Court of the United States decided, under the peculiar jurisdiction granted to the Federal courts in the Indian Territory at that time, that Congress had intended to give those courts the final say upon the question, and therefore that the Supreme Court of the United States had no jurisdiction by way of review or on appeal, and the case was sent out because of the lack of jurisdiction. There was a peculiarly constructed act in which the Federal courts were given the final say without right of appeal from those Federal courts.

It is not even true that all the Federal courts in Oklahoma decided that way. One of those Federal courts decided that the Mississippi Choctaws—and when I say "Mississippi Choctaws" I mean Choctaws living in Mississippi—had a right independently of removal to the Choctaw Nation; and another, presided over by Judge Clayton, decided that they had none except founded upon their removal. It was from Judge Clayton's decision that the then citizen of Oklahoma, now a Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. ROBERT L. OWEN, took the appeal in the Jack Amos case; and there it was that the Supreme Court decided that under the peculiar wording of that act it had jurisdiction; that no appeal lay to it; that the decision of Judge Clayton was final, and settled the question, on the ground that Congress had vested that authority in the Federal court, just as I explained the other day that when Congress vests a certain authority in the Bureau of Immigration or the Immigration Commissioner to deal with the matter or immigration, or when it vests a certain authority in the Postmaster General to stop the delivery of fraudlent mail, for example, the courts refuse to consider the matter any further because the legislative branch seems to have determined that the consideration should stop there.

All that we are asking is just what I have asked before. Reference has been made to a compromise. Why, you would think from that that the Mississippi Choctaws—meaning the Choctaws living in Mississippi—had something to do with some agreement. They never had anything to do with it. It was a compromise between the Government of the United States and the Choctaws living in Oklahoma. The Mississippi Choctaws were left out of consideration and literally cut off.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to earn as far as I can the unbounded gratitude of the Senate by not repeating over and over again what I have already said in answer to arguments which this morning are a mere repetition of what had also previously been said.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say for the information of the Senate that I was acting chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs when this matter was presented by the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. I was not in favor of it then, nor am I now, and I shall vote against it for the reason that it has struck me that here is a payment which if we make, as we are requested to do, will perhaps be building up another one of the claims against the Government, on the ground that there are rights belonging to unrepresented people, just rights which have been ignored, upon which they may hereafter be entitled to found a claim, and the Government and the people of the United States will have to pay this money over again. The fair thing to do will be to first ascertain the standing of all these people, without prejudice to anyone, and pay them what belongs to them.

These great claims which the Government is having to pay and these large attorneys' fees which are being collected are all founded upon mistakes in legislation, due to the fact that Congress passes measures without knowledge of the circumstances.

I may be mistaken, and it may be that the Mississippi Choctaws are not entitled to a cent of this money, yet that has not been clearly demonstrated; and until it is, it seems to me, it is our duty, as independent, unprejudiced representatives of both classes of these claimants, to refrain from making appropriations out of a fund which will be diminished and thereby perhaps deprive honest claimants of their share in the same.

I felt that, in justice to myself and the Senate, I should say that much.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I shall impose on the patience of the Senate but one moment longer. I appreciate the importance of those who are engaged in a controversy of this sort to use the same word in the same sense. Otherwise no discussion can proceed intelligently. When I use the term "Mississippi Choctaws" generally, I mean the Choctaw Indians who did not remove to Oklahoma under the treaty of 1830, but who remained in the State of Mississippi and whose descendants are in Mississippi to-day, or in some other State than the State of Oklahoma.

Now, that is what I mean when I use the term "Mississippi Choctaw." When I allude to the allotment of lands to the head of a family under the treaty of 1830, I mean the Mississippi Choctaws who remained in the State of Mississippi. When I speak of the issuance of land scrip to the Mississippi Choctaws, I mean to the Choctaws who remained in the State of Mississippi. When I speak of the distribution of these moneys under the act of 1852 to the Mississippi Choctaws, I mean the red men of that tribe who remained in the State of Mississippi.

Now, then, there is one use of the term which is rather misleading. Under judgments liquidated and distributed in 1889, $417,000 went to the Mississippi Choctaws. Those Mississippi Choctaws did live in the State of Oklahoma, but they received $417,000 on the ground that they were Mississippi Choctaws, and it was money that the Oklahoma Choctaws otherwise would have received.

That is my definition of the term "Mississippi Choctaws." I received a letter yesterday from a man in New York stating that his father was a Choctaw, living in Mississippi in 1830, and that he ought to be allowed to head in on Senator WILLIAMS'S amendment. I have been told, though I can not vouch for the statement, that some 40,000 claimants would protest, if this amendment were passed, that they ought to be allowed to share in the tribal estates of the Oklahoma Choctaws.

There is one other point. The Senator from Mississippi says that the treaties were made and these laws were passed with reference to the Oklahoma Choctaws, and that the Mississippi Choctaws remaining in Mississippi were never consulted. That is entirely true. The Government of the United States never has since 1830 treated the Mississippi Choctaws living in Mississippi as members of the Choctaw Tribe. The Government of the United States negotiated a treaty with the Choctaw Tribe of Indians in 1855. That was with the Choctaw Nation living in Oklahoma. Of course, the Mississippi Choctaws were not taken into account, because the Government did not treat them as Choctaws until and unless they removed. The Government of the United States negotiated a treaty in 1866 with the Choctaw Tribe living in Oklahoma. The General Government took no account of the Choctaws living in Mississippi. It did not consider them as members of the tribe. They are Choctaw Indians, but they are not citizens of the tribe.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, how can he say that, in view of the fact that the fourteenth article of the Dancing Rabbit treaty of 1830 expressly provided that they should have the privilege of citizenship of the Choctaw Nation?

Mr. GORE. That is true; but plainly that they should remove to Oklahoma in order to enjoy those privileges.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On the contrary, the fourteenth article refers only to those Choctaws remaining in Mississippi, and it is to them that the privileges of Choctaw citizenship are guaranteed.

Mr. GORE. It says these particular Choctaw citizens shall not be deprived; but if they remove, they shall not be allowed to share in the annuities.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right.

Mr. GORE. The annuities accrued to those who went at the time, and if these Mississippi Choctaws decided to go later and avail themselves of the privileges of Choctaw citizens they could not have the annuities; but, of course, they should have the land and the other rights which accrued to the citizenship of the tribe.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, the fourteenth article gave them all the privileges of Choctaw citizenship, with this proviso, that if afterwards any of the Indians so designated desired to remove to Oklahoma, then they should not get their share of the annuities; it was to be payable only to those who had removed.

Mr. GORE. Who went at the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In every other respect they were citizens of the Choctaw Tribe.

Mr. GORE. Certainly. If they should go to the Oklahoma country, they were denied the right to share in the annuities; but they should have a share of the land and the other property. The purpose was to urge them out of Mississippi. It was a lure held up before their eyes, to get them to leave Mississippi, notwithstanding they should also in the first instance take land, and that in case they did subsequently go they should share all the rights, privileges, and property of the Choctaw Tribe.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon one more interruption, I will not bother him any more. The Senator himself is a Mississippian and he knows that, although these people were promised a certain section of land and all that sort of thing, under Ward's administration and subsequent administration, except as to those who went to Oklahoma, very few, indeed, of them ever received anything. Certain chiefs and subchiefs were mentioned in the treaty.

Mr. GORE. There were 1,142 families, I think, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was going to say that certain chiefs and subchiefs were mentioned in the treaty. We know how that always occurs. The chiefs and subchiefs have influence with the tribe to get them to agree to a treaty. Those mentioned in that treaty did receive their land. I have forgotten how many Ward issued patents to, but only a little over 100.

Mr. GORE. I think less than 100.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Although the treaty did say they should receive the land in Mississippi, as a matter of fact they did not receive it, except a few people, less than a hundred in number; that is, those named in the treaty—the chiefs and subchiefs to whom the douceur went.

Mr. GORE. It is true that under Mr. Ward's superintendency, I think, less than 100 received land. That was in 1836 and 1837; but in 1842, in order to rectify his misconduct, a commission went down and enrolled 1,142, representing some 4,000 Indians, who received either land or land scrip or money, representing in all a million acres of land.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They did not stay in Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SHIELDS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Unless I can secure a transfer I shall refrain from voting.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, but I neglected to announce my general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and the transfer of that pair to the junor Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. STONE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK], and withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS. I am informed that the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], with whom I am paired, and myself are in accord on this question. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. POMERENE. The senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] is detained from the Chamber on official business. I was requested to announce that he is paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL].

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Mexico [Mr. CATRON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. OWEN. I then transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 21, as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment as amended.

Mr. OWEN. I move to strike out from the committee amendment the Choctaw Indians, and with it the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi. This is now far more embarrassing to the State of Oklahoma. It will result in very great disorder. I make that motion with a view to eliminating these controverted questions at this time. That will omit the payment to the Choctaws and omit, therefore, the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My amendment as it is worded does not embarrass the Chickasaws at all.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator misunderstood my observation. I move to strike out the term "Choctaws," so as to omit the Choctaws entirely, and with it to omit the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi, which the Senator from Mississippi thought necessary. That would leave the Chickasaws and Cherokees who were not in this controversy to receive the per capita and leave the Choctaws without any action. It is much better to do that, because this matter may involve the United States in very great loss.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the committee amendment as it was adopted stands, and if my amendment to the committee amendment as adopted stands, it does not interfere at all with the distribution to the Chickasaws, because the amendment reads:

Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not be applicable to the members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma until Congress shall have determined—

And so forth.

The Chickasaws will receive their distribution under it as amended, and it is useless to try to make the point that they will be in any degree embarrassed. My amendment does not refer to them in the slightest degree. It says only that the distribution shall not be made to the Choctaws until Congress shall have had, and so forth. The Senator, in other words, would rather get rid of the distribution to the Choctaws in Oklahoma of $100 per capita than to see an opportunity given to the Mississippi Choctaws to have Congress right their wrongs. I am not going that far. I want the Choctaws in Oklahoma to have their distribution, and I want them to have it whenever Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws. I am not willing to see adopted the motion now made by the Senator from Oklahoma to strike out the Choctaws in Oklahoma, because I have secured an amendment squinting at giving rights to the Choctaws in Mississippi, and thereby punish the Choctaws in Oklahoma because the Senate has adopted my amendment. The amendment as passed does not affect the Chickasaws at all; it does not affect any tribe of the Five Civilized Tribes except the Choctaws in Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. That is why I have moved to strike it out, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but the Senator, in saying that, went on to say something about leaving it free to be distributed to the Chickasaws. It is free to be distributed to the Chickasaws now, but I do not want the Choctaws in Oklahoma punished because the Senator has seen fit to try to do justice to the Choctaws in Mississippi. I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will not be adopted.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I insist upon the amendment to strike out of this per capita payment the Choctaws, and to strike out with it all the amendment which the Senator from Mississippi seems to insist upon so urgently. In that way it will leave the payment to the Chickasaws and Cherokees unembarrassed by this controversy over the Choctaw question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There I want to make a point of order that, in so far as the Senator's amendment is to strike out my amendment to the amendment, it is not in order, because it is precisely the same question which was voted upon by the Senate a moment ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As to that part of the amendment the Chair would be compelled to sustain the point of order. There is no way now known to parliamentary law to get rid of this amendment except to reconsider the vote whereby it was adopted.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote whereby the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the reconsideration of the vote whereby what the Chair calls the Williams amendment was adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is that in order at this stage? It was moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to in Committee of the Whole and a separate vote was called for upon it in the Senate. That presents the same question over again. I merely put that inquiry to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair holds that a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was adopted is in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In order to have a full Senate present, I suggest the absence of a quorum. A good many Senators have left the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Lane	Perkins	Smoot
Bankhead	Lee, Md.	Pittman	Sterling
Bryan	McCumber	Poindexter	Sutherland
Burleigh	Martine, N. J.	Ransdell	Thomas
Camden	Myers	Robinson	Thompson
Chamberlain	Nelson	Shafroth	Thornton
Clapp	Newlands	Sheppard	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	Norris	Sherman	Weeks
Crawford	Oliver	Shields	White
Gore	Overman	Simmons	Williams
Hughes	Owen	Smith, Ariz.	Works
James	Page	Smith, Ga.
Jones	Penrose	Smith, Mich.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. OWEN. I only ask for a viva voce vote, and will not detain the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order that the Senator from Oklahoma having voted against the proposition on the last roll call can not now move to reconsider.

Mr. OWEN. I withdraw my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, then, Will the Senate concur in the amendment as amended in Committee of the Whole?

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, following the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi I send to the desk an amendment, the adoption of which I now move. I think it will be accepted by the chairman of the committee and also by the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS it is proposed to insert the following:

Unless the consent of the United States shall have previously been given, all contracts made with any person, or persons, now or hereafter applicants for enrollment as citizens in the Five Civilized Tribes for compensation for services in relation thereto, are hereby declared to be void and of no effect, and the collection or receipt of any moneys from any such applicants for citizenship shall comprise an offense against the laws of the United States, punishable by a fine of not exceeding $500 or imprisonment for not exceeding six months, or both, and lands allotted to such applicants, whether Indians or freedmen, shall not be affected or encumbered by any deed, debt, or obligation of any character contracted prior to the time at which said land may be alienated under the laws of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I notice from the reading of the amendment that it says certain acts shall "comprise an offense." I suggest that the word "constitute" be substituted for the word "comprise."

Mr. GORE. I ask that the amendment be modified in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. GORE. I gave notice of another amendment which I would present. It is an amendment which I tendered, as in Committee of the Whole, in relation to the extension of certain payments. I now move the adoption of the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us hear the amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized in his discretion to grant a further extension or extensions of time on the payments described in the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to subdivide and extend the deferred payments of settlers in the Kiowa-Comanche and Apache ceded lands in Oklahoma," approved April 27, 1912: Provided, That accrued and unpaid interest shall be treated as principal: Provided further, That no payment shall be deferred beyond the time prescribed in the act herein cited and no forfeiture of entry shall be declared except for fraud, and all entries heretofore canceled except for fraud may be reinstated without prejudice.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned as the chairman of the committee, I have no objection to the amendment, provided the last sentence is stricken therefrom, following the word "fraud." I do not think it would be fit and proper for the Senate at this time, without further consideration, to revive any claim that has been canceled. I do not know what my future judgment on the question might be, but at this particular time I must insist that lines 2 and 3 on page 2 of the printed amendment be eliminated. I move, therefore, to strike out the words "and all entries heretofore canceled except for fraud may be reinstated without prejudice."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert in the proper place in the bill the following:

That to carry into effect the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901, and the supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902, and other laws and treaties providing for a minimum allotment to each Creek citizen whose name has been placed on the roll by the Government of the United States under authority of said agreements and laws, of the standard value of $1,040; and in order that the claim of said citizens of the Creek Nation who have received allotments in land and money of a less value than the standard allotment of 160 acres of the standard value of $1,040 might be determined and finally adjudicated, jurisdiction is hereby conferred, upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal as in other cases, to hear, determine, and render final judgment against the United States for such amount, if any, as may be found due by the United States, and as may be necessary to equalize all of such allotments up to the treaty standard value of allotments of $1,040. Said suits shall be begun by petitions filed within six months after the approval of this act, which petitions shall be verified and prosecuted by the national attorney for the Creek Nation.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if this matter has been considered by the committee or whether it is a new proposition?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it was considered by the committee and was favorably reported; but as reported it involved some other things. I have a right to offer it in the Senate. I have stricken out the latter part of it and so modified it as to still give the right to these people to be heard in court.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that this is virtually an amendment that was considered when the bill was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. I want to ask the Senator if he reserved the right to offer this amendment in the Senate?

Mr. OWEN. I do not remember as to what the RECORD shows as to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I hardly think the Senator made the reservation.

Mr. OWEN. It is not the same amendment. The amendment that was considered as in Committee of the Whole involved a boundary line of the Creek Nation. That is not in this amendment at all. It also involved certain fees to attorneys, and that is stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. I noticed the amendment and followed it and I see that all that was in this amendment was in the amendment that was considered when the bill was in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it is a part——

Mr. SMOOT. And therefore the Senator, to be well within his rights, should have reserved the amendment to offer in the Senate; and if he did not reserve that right then, it is out of order to offer it at this time.

Mr. OWEN. I do not recall whether I did reserve the right or not, but it is not the same amendment. It strikes out the question relating to the boundary line and deals only with the right of these individuals to the equalization of funds; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. But the amendment is not offered as an amendment to any part of the House bill. Of course the Senator would have a perfect right to do that. This is an amendment of itself, a new subject matter entirely; and, as I state, unless the Senator reserved the right to offer it when the bill was in the Senate, it is clearly out of order at this time, and, as I remember, there was no reservation made by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that this went out on a point of order.

Mr. OWEN. This was involved in that which did go out on a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; on a point of order. If it went out in the Committee of the Whole on a point of order, the Chair does not well see how it could be reserved for consideration in the Senate, and the Chair thinks that the bill is open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. I offered this form of the amendment in the Committee of the Whole, and withdrew it because I thought the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] was going to make a point of order on it. I afterwards learned that I was mistaken as to his purpose, and he did not make the point of order on it; but I withdrew it, thinking he was going to do so.

Mr. LANE. I do not remember it that way, Mr. President. If my memory serves me right, I did make the point of order against this particular item, and the Senator refers to another item which followed afterwards. If this is just, I have no objection at all to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This amendment is now offered to the House text of the bill.

Mr. OWEN. I think it is open to a point of order, if any Senator desires to make it. I hope it will not be made, because these people ought to be allowed to have their day, which they have not had.

Mr. LANE. Not knowing what the circumstances are, and yet having become rather gun shy of a good many of these amendments, I will not make any objection to it, but will give it an opportunity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, line 20, after the word "expended," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That not to exceed $100,000 shall be expended under this appropriation unless the Attorney General of the United States shall, after submission to him by the Secretary of the Interior of a request for an opinion, hold affirmatively that in his opinion the Indians, under existing law, are protected and confirmed in their water rights.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the amendment is intended to safeguard the water rights of the Indians on this reservation. The Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate reported a provision which was also intended for that purpose, but the provision went out on a point of order. After much discussion an amendment which I offered on a previous occasion was defeated. That amendment contemplated that the State of Montana should be called upon to protect the water rights of these Indians before this appropriation was fully expended. That amendment was defeated on yesterday.

This amendment merely requires that before the total appropriation shall be expended the opinion of the Attorney General must be obtained by the Secretary of the Interior to the effect that the water rights of these Indians are confirmed and protected. It contemplates that $100,000 of the appropriation may be expended before that requirement is met.

I do not know that I can add anything to what has been said heretofore concerning the necessity of taking some precaution to prevent the benefits of these expenditures of Indian money accruing in the end to white persons. This is certainly an amendment which anyone who wants the rights of the Indians protected might agree to. It merely contemplates that before the greater part of the appropriation shall be expended the opinion of the Attorney General shall be obtained that the benefits will accrue to the Indians.

I submit the matter to the Senate now for such action as it desires to take. I wish to say to the Senate, however, that there is a day of reckoning coming. We can not continue to expend Indian moneys for the benefit of white settlers, and we can not wisely continue to construct these irrigation works without safeguarding the rights of the Indians and seeing that they secure at least a reasonable part of the benefits arising from the appropriations which are made out of their funds.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think the amendment is unreasonable, illogical, and inconsistent. This is another onslaught on the Flathead reclamation project, which was authorized by this Government 8 or 10 years ago, and no objection was ever made to it until this year. No complaint has ever been made. According to the amendment, if the Attorney General should decide that the rights of the Indians are not properly safeguarded, we are going to throw away $100,000 and spend it without warrant or justification.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but we are going to save the balance of the $4,000,000 which the Senator said yesterday would be necessary to complete the construction of these works.

Mr. MYERS. If this is wrong, then the $100,000 should not be expended.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator objects to that feature of the amendment, I will strike out the provision in regard to the $100,000 and modify it so that it will provide that no part of the appropriation shall be expended until the opinion of the Attorney General has been obtained.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator may modify it in any way he wishes, but I am opposed to it as an onslaught on this reclamation project, which has been authorized by the Government, which has been prosecuted in good faith, which is for the benefit of the Indians as well as the whites; and the Indians are getting their benefits out of it. They were allotted their lands first. They had the choice of the land, and they took the best land. That land, in 80-acre tracts, is of no value to the Indians unless they can get water on it. The allotment has already taken place. The Indians have given up their tribal rights to the land willingly and voluntarily, and have taken 80-acre allotments. As long as water is not put on those 80-acre allotments they are of no benefit to the Indians. The sooner this project is completed, and the more money that is appropriated for it, and the more rapidly it is prosecuted, the sooner the Indians will get water on their lands and be where they can be self-sustaining. If this is cut off now, they are simply up in the air. They can not get their land back, and they can not get their water, and they will be where they will have nothing.

If this is not a good project, it should have been determined long ago; and if they want to stop it now, they will have to throw away over a million dollars which has been already spent on it. This should be an outright appropriation, as has always been the case, or none at all. I want to say that this is a project where there never has been a complaint lodged by a Flathead Indian that he was not getting his right.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I have never had any complaint, and the committee has never had any, so far as I know.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I stated yesterday, in reply to a similar statement from the Senator from Montana, that a number of complaints had been made to the Joint Commission to Investigate Indian Affairs. My memory as to the testimony that has been already submitted is not perhaps entirely complete, but I do recall that some testimony was submitted to the effect that the Indians are deprived of any water under this reclamation project until about the 1st of July; that they never get water for their crops until the white settlers have had all the water they want; and that complaint is quite general among the Indians.

That statement was made to me by an Indian who is in the gallery now. It was made to me on yesterday. The testimony, I think, was offered before the joint commission some months ago. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] is present now and was present when that testimony was offered. The condition which exists on the Flathead Reservation is not different from the condition that prevails on many other reservations where large amounts of monev have been already expended, and where much larger amounts must be expended before the works are complete.

I do not like to introduce any amendment here which is objectionable to my friend from Montana; but I am discharging what I believe to be a duty as a Member of this body, and a duty to the Indians of the United States, and that is to see that when we expend large sums of their money we take some precaution to require that the expenditures shall result in benefits to them.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I never heard of any such complaint. At any rate, it has not been made to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. If there is any complaint, however, that the Indians do not get their water until the 1st of July, neither this amendment nor any other amendment like it would remedy the situation. That is a matter of which complaint should be made to the Interior Department, to the authorities of the Reclamation Service in charge of this project.

If that is the case, it is in the power of the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the engineer in charge of the Reclamation Service to remedy it. It is something that Congress can not remedy. This amendment would not reach that. If they do not get their water before the 1st of July this amendment would not touch any such complaint. That would be the fault of the Reclamation Service; and if proper complaint is shown and proper proof is made, I believe the chief engineer or the Indian Commissioner, or even the Secretary of the Interior, would investigate and give attention to it and cause it to be remedied.

This amendment, however, is radically wrong. There is no justification for it. No complaint has ever been lodged before Congress or before the Committee on Indian Affairs that would justify it, and I hope it will be defeated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, of the series of amendments that have been proposed with reference to these water projects, I think perhaps this is the most remarkable of all.

Under the law of Montana, as under the law of all the arid-land States, before anybody can acquire a right to water certain things must be done. There must, first of all, be notice of appropriation. That, I understand, has been given by the Interior Department in these cases. Following the notice, the works which are intended to divert the water must be constructed, and following the construction of the works there must be an application of the water to the land for a beneficial use.

Every one of those steps must be taken before these Indians or anybody else can acquire any right to the water for irrigation purposes in the State of Montana or in any of these other States; so it would be an impossible thing for the Attorney General to find that these Indians have any present right. Whatever rights they have are inchoate in character. They have simply given notice and have begun the preliminary work of constructing these irrigation works. If this appropriation is withheld, or subsequent appropriations are withheld, and the works are never completed, of course the Indians can never acquire a right at all; so the Senator might as well move to strike the appropriation out of the bill altogether. The Attorney General can only reply, as I understand the law, that these Indians have taken the preliminary steps to acquire a water right, and that in order to protect their rights they must have the very appropriation which the Senator's amendment would withhold.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield for a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator read the testimony appearing on page 227 of the hearings before the Senate committee on the present bill? I will address the same question to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have read some parts of the hearings. I have not read them all, by any means.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator know that these lands on the Flathead irrigation project are appraised at from four to seven dollars per acre, and that the white people are purchasing them at that amount? Does the Senator know that?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have not read that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state to the Senator that that is the undisputed fact, according to Mr. Newell. I want to read a little of the testimony that relates to this subject, to show the Senators just what will be the result of this appropriation if some provision is not made in the bill safeguarding the rights of the Indians.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall read whatever he pleases to read, but no testimony could alter the situation. We are dealing not with a question of fact but with a question of law. If these Indians must comply with a State law in order to secure water rights, we can not alter that situation, whatever the facts may be, by any legislation on the part of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the situation is such that the Indians can not confirm their water rights, I do not think any Senator will want to go ahead and appropriate $4,000,000 of money to complete this irrigation project, especially if it is known in advance that the benefits of it can not redound to the interest of the Indians. I think we ought to provide some safeguards, and that it is a part of the duty of the Senator from Utah, if he will permit me, as well as part of my duty, to see that while we are incurring all of these expenses on the part of the Indians they shall have some benefit out of this appropriation.

What is going to happen here is what has happened on a great many other reservations where these irrigation projects have been constructed and are being constructed. The circumstances under which the appropriations are made, and the character and condition of the Indians themselves, are such that they lose all rights to the lands; that after the project has been constructed the white people acquire them with the water rights, and the Indians go off of the reservation, and they have paid for substantial benefits which have in this way accrued to white persons.

What is there that is unreasonable about asking the Attorney General of the United States whether he thinks, if we go ahead and spend this Indian money, the Indians will get their water rights? Do you want to make the Indians pay $4,000,000 more if you know in advance, or can ascertain in advance, that the white people are going to get all the benefit of it?

Mr. MYERS. No; I will say that I do not. They will get the water rights, however, and they are getting them, and there never has been a complaint that they were not getting them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; the Senator from Utah is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yielded to the Senator because I thought he desired to propound some interrogatory to me. Has the Senator something he desires to ask me?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. What is the objection of the Senator to providing that this appropriation shall not be expended if the Attorney General of the United States declares that in his opinion it will not accrue to the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the Senator evidently was not listening when I stated the objection a moment ago. It is that we know in advance what the Attorney General must say if he states the law, namely, that these Indians have no present right any more than a like number of white men similarly situated would have a present right. If a number of white men were expending this amount of money for the purpose of finally appropriating water under the laws of Montana, they would have to go ahead and make their investment of money and complete their appropriation under the law; and that is all the Attorney General can say. We know in advance what these Indians have to do in order to acquire this water right. They must complete this work, and if they complete the work and put the water which they have already taken the preliminary steps to appropriate to a beneficial use, then they have a prior right. If they do not do that, then they have no right. We can not give the Indians of Montana by some act of Congress a right to acquire water under the laws of Montana that the ordinary citizens of Montana would not have.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. We have the right to place any limitation we think is reasonable and right on the expenditure of the Indians' money?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator from Utah think we ought to place such a limitation on the use of this money as will guarantee that the benefits of it shall accrue to the Indians?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Arkansas is wasting his time in asking me that question. If I thought we ought to pass this amendment, I would not be opposing it; I would be speaking in favor of it. I am saying all the time it is an amendment which ought not to be adopted, because it is an utterly meaningless and futile provision to put into the bill. It can not advance the cause of these Indians one bit.

If it be true that these Indians can not acquire any water rights in Montana, then of course we ought to make no appropriation for them; but we are proceeding upon the theory that the notice has been given; that all the preliminary steps which, if followed up, will ripen into a right have been taken; and in view of that we are making the appropriation. If we are mistaken about that, if they never can acquire any water right at all, then it follows we ought not to make the appropriation.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I am informed that these Indians never asked for this irrigation scheme and that they have protested against the expenditure of their money for this purpose; that they have been pressed into it by their guardians, and their land is being held for all of it, while they will receive but a fraction of the benefit. It is a great wrong that is being perpetrated on them. This may not be the way of correcting it, but it ought to be corrected, for the reason that if there is any justice this Government will have to repay these Indians for the money of which they are being defrauded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator feels that way about it he ought to be against this appropriation altogether.

Mr. LANE. I am going to vote against it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But it is proposed to attach to it a perfectly absurd and meaningless proviso, and that is what I am complaining about. I do not quarrel with the Senator if he thinks this is an unwise appropriation to make and chooses to vote against it.

Mr. LANE. It is wicked.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the Senator ought to vote against it.

Mr. LANE. I am going to vote against it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood that the Senator had been in favor of it all the time.

The Attorney General can do no more than report that these Indians at the present moment have an inchoate right to this water, something which the Senate of the United States knows quite as well as the Attorney General, and that if they want to perfect the right and obtain the water for use upon their lands they must expend the money, complete the work, and put the water to a beneficial use. We know all that in advance just as well as if the Attorney General tells us.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WORKS. I am not familiar with the conditions supposed to be affected by this amendment. What does the Senator from Utah understand to be the present status of the Indian right, of his claim to this water?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand it to be this, and I ask the Senator from Montana to correct me if I am not stating it accurately: I understand that the Interior Department, complying with the laws of the State of Montana, has posted the requisite notice that they intend to appropriate for the benefit of these Indian lands certain waters from certain streams; that following that notice they have begun the work of constructing whatever reservoirs or dams or canals are necessary in order to make the appropriation effectual. We have already expended some money in the way of doing that work. About $1,000,000 I think has been appropriated. Now we propose by this item to appropriate additional money to go on with that work. The right of the Indians is the same as the right of the white men would be in that country.

Mr. WORKS. Has there been an actual diversion of the water?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There has not yet been an actual diversion of the water, but when the works are completed and the water is applied to the land, then, in accordance with the universally recognized law of the arid region, their rights will relate back to the preliminary steps.

Mr. WORKS. Subject to any prior claims.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Subject to any prior claims, but not subject to any intervening claims. If when this notice was given there was unappropriated water in these streams, the Indian rights will attach whenever they put the water to a beneficial use, provided it is done within a reasonable time.

Mr. WORKS. How are we going to determine whether their money ought to be expended for the purpose of prosecuting that work by any reference to the Attorney General?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We can not. The Attorney General can reflect no light upon it. The Attorney General can tell us exactly what we know, that they must go ahead and complete their appropriations. We know that. If the Senate thinks it is unwise to expend money because the final appropriation and acquirement of right to the water is doubtful, then we would be justified in refusing the appropriation altogether. We are not justified in making the appropriation and asking the Attorney General for an opinion upon a matter of law which Senators from the arid-land States understand quite as well as the Attorney General.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was about to yield the floor, but if the Senator desires to ask me a question I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will make a statement, and perhaps the Senator from Utah will either confirm it or correct me if it is erroneous.

This is a so-called Indian reclamation project; that is to say, it is being constructed at the expense of the Indians on the Flathead Reservation. The estimated cost of this improvement is $6,000,000. The Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs testified before the House committee that in his opinion it ought not to be constructed as an Indian reclamation project at all, but it ought to be constructed as an ordinary reclamation project, and that the Indians ought to be required or permitted to pay their pro rata share of the cost of the project.

I refer to page 233 of the hearings already mentioned—the hearings before the House committee on this bill.

In the same testimony it appears that these lands belonging to the Indians sell for from $4 to $7 an acre, and after they are irrigated they are worth, according to the testimony of Mr. Newell, from $100 to $500 an acre. What is actually going on out there is this: The Indians are building a reclamation project; the lands which they own and which are embraced within the project are being sold at from $4 to $7 an acre; and their money is making these lands which are so sold worth, according to the testimony of Mr. Newell, $100 to $500 an acre, and they are getting practically no benefit from it.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to be permitted to remark at this point, if the Senator please, that from $4 to $7 an acre is all the lands are worth without any water. The water is all that makes the lands worth anything. Before water is put on them they are wholly unproductive to the Indian or anybody else. If it was not for this reclamation project they would all be worth but from $4 to $7 an acre.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is probably true; but here is a reclamation project being constructed against the protest of the Indians.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator where he got that statement. What proof has he of that?

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement was made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] in the hearings I have referred to before the Senate committee, that these Indians had objected, and the statement was repeated by other members of the committee.

Mr. MYERS. It is simply a statement of the Senator from Vermont; but what Indians have ever objected?

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement of any Senator is good for the Senator from Arkansas—the statement of the Senator from Vermont, as the statement of the Senator from Montana—but——

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator is informed of the fact, that is different; but if he merely renders an opinion, it may or may not be good.

Mr. LANE. I have heard that statement by Indians who lived near there, and I have heard that statement made before the committee. I understand that this suit which has been brought by the Conrad Investment Co. for taking the waters——

Mr. MYERS. I want to say, just to show how near right the Senator from Oregon is, that the Conrad Investment Co. is not on the Flathead Reservation; it is not within 400 miles. That is the Blackfeet Reservation.

Mr. LANE. It is the Blackfeet, I know.

Mr. MYERS. We are not discussing the Blackfeet; and now let us have the facts about the Flatheads.

Mr. LANE. That is what I am talking about. I am informed that some complaint exists among the Blackfeet.

Mr. MYERS. If the Blackfeet Indians are stating the troubles on the Flathead Reservation, all right.

Mr. LANE. Anyway, the fact remains that the Indian money is being expended and they are not receiving the benefits.

Mr. MYERS. They are getting all the money back.

Mr. LANE. He is not getting a proper hearing in the case, for the reason that the time is limited and we are giving him no means to buy implements to farm.

Mr. MYERS. There has never been a Flathead Indian who made a complaint that I am aware of. The Flathead Indians write me and send word here that they want this reclamation project hurried up and finished.

Mr. LANE. Then you have the Indians before the commissioner that was here. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is sustained by the superintendent of the reclamation fund.

Mr. MYERS. If there are any Indians finding fault with this, I should like to have it read.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, I will read some of the testimony to which I have referred on page 228 of the hearings. This question was asked by Senator LANE.

Mr. MYERS. Of whom?

Mr. ROBINSON. Of Mr. Newell:

Senator LANE. What is that appraised value?
Mr. NEWELL. Four dollars to $7 an acre, I think. They did that with the knowledge and belief that those lands were to be irrigated in the way proposed by Congress. There are literally hundreds, if not thousands, of settlers living there believing thoroughly that Congress will construct a complete irrigation system, not only to the Indian lands, but to their lands, and we have had most pitiable requests, and such requests have doubtless come to you, to expedite the extension of those lands to take in more of the white lands.

Omitting part of the testimony:

Mr. NEWELL. My impression is, Senator, that the water appraisement becomes subject to the land—the cost of the water is appraised to the land irrigated.
Senator FALL. Then this appropriation should read: "One-half to be reimbursable," instead of all reimbursable out of the Indian funds?
Mr. NEWELL. That is technical.
Senator FALL. That would be correct, would it not? It would relieve the Indians of the burden.

* * * * * * *

Senator LANE. What is this land worth after irrigation?
Mr. NEWELL. I would hardly dare to say. I suppose that irrigated and cultivated it is worth in alfalfa at least $100 to $150 an acre, and in fruit, $500 an acre.
Senator LANE. And the Indians get $4 an acre?
Mr. NEWELL. Raw land, before anything is done with it, $4 to $7 an acre.
Senator LANE. How much is raw land under a project like that worth, subject to irrigation?
Mr. NEWELL. With a reasonable certainty of getting water it is worth its full appraised value.
Senator LANE. $4 an acre?
Mr. NEWELL. $7 an acre. If you can not get water it will be worth practically nothing.
Senator LANE. But where you can get water?
Mr. NEWELL. If there is a reasonable certainty, or if contiguous to lands to which water has been supplied, I suppose the raw lands would be worth $40 to $50 an acre. I do not think you could buy them to-day for that.

On page 231:

Senator PAGE. Do you say to us that you fully justify the project or the methods under which it is conducted, the taking of the Indians' money for this great project and letting him take a chance of loss or gain hereafter?
Mr. NEWELL. I think he is taking no more chances——
Senator FALL. He is taking chances of loss and not of gain?
Senator MYERS. How is he taking any chance?
Senator PAGE. He has often protested against it.
Mr. NEWELL. I beg pardon, I never heard of any protest.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to know just where that comes from that the Flathead Indians have often protested. I should like to see one protest.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am reading the statement of Senators.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Vermont says it.

Mr. ROBINSON (reading):

Senator LANE. Oh, yes.
Senator PAGE. We have heard protests here within a week.
Mr. NEWELL. Was he really a representative of his people?
Senator PAGE. He said they do not like to have their property there encumbered by these large mortgages without being conferred with; without being consulted. It seems to me they ought to be consulted at least before we mortgage their lands as heavily as they are mortgaged now.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to say at this point, if the Senator will permit me, that there were a lot of Blackfeet Indians down here this spring hanging around the committee rooms all the time, but if there was a Flathead Indian in the city of Washington this year I never heard of it and I never met him.

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not mattter whether there was a Flathead Indian in the city of Washington or not.

Mr. MYERS. I think they were Blackfeet Indians who were making these complaints.

Mr. ROBINSON. A great many delegations of Indians have come here, some regularly authorized representatives and some not, but the fact of the matter is that in view of this record it is difficult to justify the construction of this reclamation project at the expense of the Indians. It means the expenditure before it is completed of $6,000,000.

Now, supporting that statement, I take the testimony of Assistant Commissioner Meritt on page 232 and following:

Mr. MERITT. This Flathead irrigation project is a very large project that is being constructed by the Reclamation Service under contract with the Secretary of the Interior. This project, when completed, will irrigate about 150,000 acres of land.
Senator FALL. That is, the Reclamation Service does the work and the Indian Service pays for it?
Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir; out of appropriations provided by Congress. When this project is completed it will irrigate about 75,000 acres of Indian land and about 75,000 acres of white land.

Now, listen:

The method of financing this project is as follows: Congress makes appropriations out of the Treasury for the construction of this project to be reimbursed out of the funds of the Indians.

Listen. Seventy-five thousand acres of the white man's land and 75,000 acres of the Indians' land, and every dollar that is being expended to construct this work, both for the whites and for the Indians, is being reimbursed in the first instance out of the Indians' fund. Of course, if it proves profitable, it will be reimbursed to the Indians in the end, in so far as the white lands are concerned.

Mr. MYERS. I will say to the Senator there can be no doubt about its being profitable. According to the testimony produced there, water put on the land makes it worth from $100 to $150 an acre. There can not be any doubt about its being profitable.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but the Indians do not get the water.

Mr. MYERS. There is nothing to prevent them from getting their share of water.

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a minute. Under this process of constructing at the expense of the Indians an irrigation project to water the white land and the Indian land, I make the statement that it is my conviction that, while the Indians are paying the entire expense of it, the whites are getting practically the entire benefit of it.

Now, that is not a new condition. It has occurred time and time again before. I expect to submit hereafter some further statements——

Mr. MYERS. Allow me just to submit this statement.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. ROBINSON. I take great pleasure in yielding to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. As I understand this amendment, it simply allows the Government to expend $100,000 without determining whether the Indians have any rights or not, and after that amount of money is expended we should stop there and get an opinion from the Attorney General as to whether the Indians have any rights or not. What I should like to ask the Senator is whether the inquiry should not be made before we spend the $100,000?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it should, Mr. President. The same suggestion was made by the Senator from Montana. I shall ask leave to so modify my amendment that no part of this appropriation shall be expended until the chief law officer of the Government says that in his opinion it will accrue to the benefit of the people who pay for it. It is a question of honesty; a question of fairness. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas modifies the amendment proposed by him by striking out the limitation.

Mr. ROBINSON. So as to read as follows: "That no part of this appropriation shall be expended," and so forth, "until," and so forth.

Mr. WORKS. I am quite anxious myself to protect any rights that the Indians have in this water. In that respect I sympathize entirely with the Senator from Arkansas. I think it is going to be a very difficult matter, however, I suggest to the Senator, for the Attorney General to determine the rights of these Indians in waters of the stream in advance, as has been suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. Certainly the authorities dealing with this question should have determined that matter at the time of the initiation of these proceedings, and unless there was water there to be appropriated and proper steps were being taken to that end, the Government should never have expended any money at all. I do not know how much money has been expended there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A million dollars.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Utah says there has been a million dollars expended on that project. Now that we have spent a million dollars we are talking about stopping here to inquire whether the Indians have any rights in the stream. That is rather a singular condition of things as suggested to my mind.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, when that is disclosed it seems to anyone unaccountable that Congress should contemplate spending approximately $5,000,000 more on this project; and it occurs to me, even if we did begin this project without due consideration, before we expend this $5,000,000 of somebody else's money that we are trustees for, and under a sacred obligation to spend for their benefit, we ought to first find out that they are going to get the benefit of it.

Now, then, to show you that this is not a mere fancy upon my part, this is the opinion of representatives of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The assistant commissioner testified on page 233 as follows:

> Senator MYERS. At this point I will ask, was $4 or $5 an acre all the raw land without any water on it was worth? What do you think about that?
> Mr. MERITT. If the project is to be financed entirely out of Indian funds I believe it is an injustice to the Indians; that they should get the benefit of the increased value that their money adds to this land, because their money is providing the funds with which to construct the irrigation project and the irrigation project increases the value of the raw lands from $4 to $5 an acre to something like $50 an acre. This situation can not be justified from the Indian standpoint for another reason.

I ask the attention of the Senator from Utah to this statement:

> This situation can not be justified from the Indian standpoint for another reason. The Government is advancing the Indian funds to construct an irrigation project and absorbing all the money that they derive from the sale of their land and timber to reimburse the Government for the money advanced. These Indians have been allotted irrigable land; they are without funds with which to make use of the land that has already been allotted to them simply because those funds have to go back into the Treasury to reimburse the Government for the construction of this irrigation project.
> This project will cost, when completed, approximately $6,000,000. The Indians of that reservation have ample resources to guarantee to the Government this amount. It is estimated they have resources amounting to more than $13,000,000, but those resources should not be used, in our judgment, in this way.
> I believe, and I think the Commissioner of Indian Affairs believes, that this project should be constructed not as an Indian project, but as a reclamation project and permit the Indians to pay their pro rata share of the cost of this project.

Now, we have the case of a doubtful project, according to this testimony, constructed entirely at the Indian's expense, that is reimbursable out of the Indian fund, watering in equal amounts Indian lands and lands belonging to white settlers, 75,000 acres of each class. Why not at least require that one-half of the expense of the construction work shall be paid for out of the reclamation fund and the half which is required to water the Indian lands out of the Indian funds, to be reimbursable?

Mr. MYERS. I should like to answer the Senator's question at this juncture.

Mr. ROBINSON. I take pleasure in yielding to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. It is because the demand on the reclamation fund for projects now under way is so very great and so pressing that the Reclamation Service claims that it has need for all the money in the reclamation fund and more for projects already started and now under headway, and because, in the opinion of everybody who has investigated this proposition, except Mr. Meritt, this project on the present basis is absolutely safe to the Indians, and they take no chances whatever. The land is there as security for the money. The land is worth all that it is necessary to bring to reimburse the Indians. It would be hard to get the Government to put this under the expenditures of the Reclamation Service, when the Reclamation Service is already hard pressed for funds and when, in the opinion of everybody else who has ever investigated it, it is a sound and safe business proposition on a legitimate basis. The land is worth the money, and if we just go ahead with the project, instead of abandoning it, the Indians will get their money; and they are not complaining. That answers the question.

Mr. LANE. I should like to make just one interjection right there.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield first to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. You can get at the outside $7 an acre for the land, and it will be resold for about $40.

Mr. ROBINSON. But when you take into consideration the fact that the Indian is advancing the funds which according to the undisputed testimony of Mr. Newell will make the land worth from $50 to $500 an acre, why should not the Indian be entitled to the increase in value which the use of his funds brings to the lands?

Mr. MYERS. Then, when a man buys a raw product and pays all the raw product is worth and it is manufactured into a superior article, he should also pay for the increased value of the manufacture.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the illustration of the Senator from Montana is an unfortunate one for him. If the owner of the raw product furnishes the factory and the labor to manufacture the raw material into the manufactured product, I insist that he ought to have the benefits of the increased value of the manufactured product.

Mr. MYERS. The Government of the United States is furnishing to the Indians the raw land. The Indian furnishes nothing.

Mr. ROBINSON. That statement is technically right. The Government first advances the fund and the Indian reimburses it.

Mr. MYERS. The Government of the United States is furnishing the water, and that is what makes the increased value.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Government of the United States can not furnish water, unless the Senator from Montana has come to my contention that under some circumstances the Government furnishes water.

Mr. MYERS. By appropriation.

Mr. ROBINSON. I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to say, Mr. President, in view of the explanation given by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] of the reason why the reclamation fund should not be used for the purpose of paying the white man's share of this reservoir construction, that the embarrassments are largely due to what I consider the unlawful diversion of $10,000,000 of money from the reclamation fund for the purpose of constructing a dam and reservoir in the southern part of New Mexico with which to reclaim less than 14,000 acres of public land and 180,000 acres of land in all, a large portion of which is for the citizens of the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. MYERS. Of course I can not help that, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. Supplementing what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has suggested, I will say that I do not think the Indians on the Flathead Reservation or on any other reservation should be the victims of a mistake in our general reclamation policy.

Mr. THOMAS. I fully concur with that opinion of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, Mr. President, I think it is entirely competent and proper before expending this sum, since there is a dispute about it, that Congress ascertain in the best way that it can whether this will redound to the benefit of the people who are to pay for it. There can be no objection to this amendment on the part of anybody who wants to make certain that the Indian will get the benefits which arise from the expenditure of his funds. I submit this question, Mr. President, for the action of the Senate.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas, before he takes his seat, whether he has investigated or knows in any way to what extent the Indians take advantage of the right they have to use water for irrigation purposes; that is to say, to what extent they have become farmers or husbandmen and really use the water that is at hand and belongs to them?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is a very important question, and it has been my duty, in connection with others, to look into that somewhat extensively. The Indian is very slow to avail himself of the privilege of using water for irrigation purposes. The Indian is not naturally an agriculturist. The Government, however, has declared its policy in more ways than one of converting the Indians into an agricultural people. If we are to do that, it is a part of my general argument that we must provide on their reservations a sufficient amount of water to make the reservations reasonably productive in an agricultural way. The subject which arises under the question of the Senator from California presents one of the broader aspects of the problem connected with the Indian Service, one of the great difficulties that is confronting the Indian race.

Mr. WORKS. The question suggested itself to my mind because if the Indians are not going to use this water for beneficial purposes, we may be making another great mistake in the expenditure of millions of dollars for the purpose of storing and appropriating this water for the use of the Indians, who will not use it when they have the privilege of doing so.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am in hearty sympathy with the sentiments which have been so well expressed here upon this subject by the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], but I am unable to agree with him as to the importance or even the expediency of this amendment. If I understand the amendment correctly, it will impose upon the Department of Justice of the Government the duty of reporting not upon a question of law, but upon a question of fact. The amendment seeks to obtain an opinion from the Attorney General of the United States as to whether this appropriation, if expended, is going to inure to the benefit of the Indians. That is purely a question of fact, and not a question of law.

The legal aspects of the situation are, to my mind, perfectly clear, and consequently I am unable to perceive in what way this amendment, even if adopted, can be of any benefit to the Indians or to anybody else.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I suppose that if the Attorney General is called upon to give an opinion on this question he will be compelled to investigate the prior appropriations from the beginning to determine, in the first instance, whether there is any surplus water there to be appropriated. It would be an immense undertaking.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from California is exactly right. Not only that, but the Attorney General would also have to determine the extent to which flood-water appropriations have been made for the purpose of building this reservoir and the system of irrigation after it shall have been completed.

Mr. PAGE. I wish, before the Senator passes final judgment on this matter, as this is purely a question of fact, he would consider for a moment the attitude of the department with reference to it. It is claimed here in the Senate that under State laws the man who first appropriates has the first and best right to the water. That, I think, is the view of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The man who first appropriates to a beneficial use.

Mr. PAGE. Yes: who appropriates to a beneficial use.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. The department takes a different view of the matter. They claim that under the Winters case there was an implied reservation of the waters of the Milk River to the extent necessary to irrigate this particular project. I will read the identical language of the Supreme Court. It is found on page 378 of the House hearings:

> The Supreme Court, in the case of Winters v. United States (207 U. S., 564), said that "The power of the Government to reserve waters and exempt them from appropriation under the State laws is not denied, and could not be."

That, I understand, was the ruling of the entire court, with the exception of one member.

Mr. THOMAS. Under the State law, certainly. Under the State law there is no possible doubt about the correctness of that opinion. If the Senator will read it again, he will discover that there is a recognition of the very principle for which the Senator from Utah was just contending.

Mr. PAGE. I should like to read it again, because I can not see the matter in the light the Senator has suggested.

> The Supreme Court, in the case of Winters v. United States (207 U. S., 564), said that "The power of the Government to reserve waters and exempt them from appropriation under the State laws is not denied, and could not be."

Note the language of the decision:

> The power of the Government to reserve the water can not be denied.

Mr. THOMAS. I misapprehended the meaning of the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. Let me go a little further, because this particular case has another important feature connected with it, which is, that before Montana was admitted to the Union certain rights existed. I want to read the statement of the Supreme Court upon that point:

> The Supreme Court further said in this case that there was an implied reservation for the benefit of the Indians of a sufficient amount of water from the Milk River for irrigation purposes which was not affected by the subsequent act of February 22, 1889 (25 Stat. L., 676), admitting Montana to the Union, and that the water of the Milk River can not be diverted so as to prejudice the rights of the Indians by settlers on the public lands and those claiming riparian rights on that river.

I am not going to try to be more wise than the Supreme Court and say that the court ruled wrongly. I am giving you what the Supreme Court said on this case.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am reasonably familiar with that decision, although I have not read it for a good while. That decision does recognize in the Government the right to make a reservation of water from that particular stream for the benefit of the Indians. If that were the only decision of the Supreme Court upon the general subject, there could be no doubt about the effect of it in its application to enterprises of this sort; but, Mr. President, I think I can say without exaggerating that this opinion is an exception to the general line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States upon this very important subject which have been made by that court both before and since that decision was handed down.

It is a general principle, and I think it has been fully recognized by all the courts from the earliest days of settlement in the arid regions and in the mining sections of the Union in the West, that rights to water and to the use of water depend upon appropriation and diversion to a beneficial use. That principle has been crystallized into national legislation for many years—ever since the act of 1866—a section relating to the subject being found in the Revised Statutes as early as 1872. Since the decision in the case to which the Senator from Vermont has called my attention, which has been read here during the course of this discussion, and in the two hundred and thirteenth United States, as I remember, the Supreme Court has denied even to the Government itself the right to the use of water needed for general governmental purposes unless that right is acquired by compliance with the laws of the particular State where that decision originated, my general recollection of that case being that the Government had a certain appropriation of water for a military post and needed a greater supply, which it assumed to take by virtue of the sovereign power of the Government. That interfered with the rights of others, and the Supreme Court of the United States went so far as to hold, and to hold properly, that even the Government could not utilize the waters of that stream except by complying with the requirements of the statutes of the State where public ownership of water independent of riparian rights is one of the absolute essentials to settlement, and consequently to community life.

In the case of Kansas against Colorado, a case involving a controversy over water rights between the citizens of those States along the line of the Arkansas Valley and watered by the stream of that name, the United States Government sought to interfere, and based its right of interference upon its ownership of vast stretches of public domain through which the tributaries of the Arkansas River and the river itself in certain parts ran, but the Supreme Court of the United States held that the title to those waters was in the State, subject to appropriation by its citizens for beneficial uses, and that as a consequence the Government could not upon that ground or any other ground assert any interest that gave it the right to intervene in and become a party to that controversy.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator this question: If by a treaty with the Indians the waters of the Milk River had been especially reserved for them by name, by description, and by boundaries, and to an extent sufficient to irrigate their reservation, and if that treaty was made before Montana was admitted to the Union as a State, does the Senator say that the rights of the State of Montana would be paramount?

Mr. THOMAS. As to that particular treaty and that particular reservation I should hardly say that if it were done before the State was admitted into the Union——

Mr. PAGE. That is the case here.

Mr. THOMAS. Because in the case to which I have referred, the Kansas and Colorado case, the right of the Government in the Territories concerning this question is conceded to be much more extensive and general than in the States of the Union, but the effect——

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will pardon me—the effect would be to limit that decision and the principle announced by the treaty upon which it is founded.

Mr. PAGE. But as I understand, Mr. President, that is the case here. The treaties, as I understand it, referred to one particular river, the Milk River, which supplies the water for the Indians' use on the Flathead Reservation. The court did not say that this reservation was made in terms, but it said that:

> There was an implied reservation for the benefit of the Indians of a sufficient amount of water from the Milk River for irrigation purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; the Supreme Court decided in that case that the treaty established that reservation.

Mr. PAGE. Then, does not that take this particular case about which we are talking to-day out of the general law?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; the particular case here might be taken out of the general law—the general law upon the subject.

Mr. PAGE. That is the point I make, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. But that is not the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas. That amendment, as I understand, imposes upon the Attorney General the duty of informing Congress or the Department of the Interior, or both, whether this money, if expended as this bill provides, will inure to the benefit of the Indians. That is merely a question of fact.

Mr. PAGE. May I interrupt the Senator upon that point for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly; I am always glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. PAGE. We have had a long discussion upon this matter in the Senate, in which the most distinguished lawyers in the body have held that this particular decision was wrong.

Mr. THOMAS. As a general proposition, it certainly is wrong, in my humble opinion. As applied to the specific facts in the Milk River case it may not be wrong.

Mr. PAGE. If the Supreme Court has held in the case of the Milk River Reservation that the water rights were, by an implied reservation, held for the benefit of the Flathead Indians, and if the best lawyers in this Senate insist that the Supreme Court has wrongly held, then is there not presented a question of law, as well as of fact?

If the law as interpreted by the Senator from Colorado and other Senators differs from the decisions of the Supreme Court touching the Indians' rights in this matter, then it seems to me the Indian Department, under this amendment, will properly say to the Attorney General: "We want you to study the decisions of the courts carefully and determine whether, under these decisions and purely as a matter of law, the rights of the Indians are or are not sufficiently and properly safeguarded in this matter. We do not want this money spent until we know whether they are or are not protected, and if they are not protected we want their money withheld and covered back into the Treasury."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Supreme Court of the United States has already determined the law, according to the Senator's own statement, in so far as it can be determined in that particular case. It is the application of this water after the system has been constructed, and that alone, that can be made the basis for any opinion as to whether the Indian is going to get any benefit from it. It is a matter of fact.

Mr. PAGE. I am not going to debate a legal proposition with the Senator from Colorado; he knows that very well.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator is capable of holding his own with any of us here on a legal proposition.

Mr. PAGE. I simply say that here is a decision of the Supreme Court which the Senator's colleague and other Senators here have criticized, if I remember correctly—if I am wrong, he will correct me—and have intimated was not good law.

Mr. THOMAS. My colleague is a most excellent lawyer, and if he said that, I would be inclined to doubt the wisdom of my own conclusions.

Mr. PAGE. I may be wrong about it; it may have been some other Senator who expressed this opinion; but, be that as it may, some of our learned Senators have declared upon the floor of the Senate during this discussion that, in their judgment, the view of the Supreme Court which I have quoted was not good law. Does it not therefore become a proper matter for the Attorney General to investigate in order that the Indian Department may know whether it can or can not properly go ahead and spend three, four, or five million dollars more of the Indians' money upon this irrigation project?

Mr. THOMAS. There are many decisions which are poor law, but they are nevertheless stare decisis. The decision to which the Senator from Vermont refers may be poor law, but at the same time it may be conclusive of the particular controversy to which it relates, irrespective of whether it appeals to the reasoning powers of the profession generally.

Mr. President, so far as the last statement of the Senator is concerned, I do not think that we are very far apart. I do not believe that it is right—and I am expressing no new opinion upon the subject—to take the money of the Indians for the purpose of building reservoirs for white people. The Senator can not get up any controversy with me on that proposition, and if this were a new question I should hesitate very long before even consenting to consider it; but, if I understand the situation, under previous legislation the water system for this particular tract of land has been provided for and is partially completed, and that other and further appropriations are necessary in order to make it effective. If that is so, that presents a very different proposition to my mind, because I know of no more useless thing in the world, Mr. President, than an uncompleted irrigation system in the arid West.

Mr. PAGE. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. It is true, is it not, that here is an irrigation project which has been entered upon and upon which there has been expended, of the Indians' money or of money for which the Indians' lands are mortgaged, more than $1,000,000. The testimony also is that the project will require four or five or six million dollars more.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like the Senator to get that correct. There have been a million and a half dollars approximately expended, and it will take about $4,500,000 more to complete the work.

Mr. PAGE. I accept the correction; I stated it as nearly as I could from memory and without looking up the testimony upon this point.

Mr. THOMAS. I may state that these projects always cost from 25 to 100 per cent more than the original estimate.

Mr. PAGE. The matter has been the subject of much debate on the part of the Indian Affairs Committee. They had reasoned like this: "Have we any right to continue with this project and expend three or four or five million dollars more upon it, if the Indian, being unable to make beneficial use of the water, is going to lose his rights? The Indian is taking all the risk. The facts are I believe that up to this date the Indian has only been able to appropriate water on about half as much land as the white man. We have mortgaged the Indians' property for an immense sum, a sum so large that it almost staggers us, and yet we are now proposing to place further mortgages on his lands—mortgages aggregating five or six million dollars. In view of that fact the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was asked, "Can not something be done to safeguard the Indians' rights?" He said, "Yes; there can be something done"; and he prepared amendments to safeguard the Indians' rights in all these propositions. The moment the bill got into the Committee of the Whole those amendments in the form of provisos prepared by the Indian Bureau were all thrown out on points of order.

It is true as to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas that we asked the Indian Bureau if they could not propose some amendment to safeguard the Indian which would not be obnoxious to a point of order, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas was hurriedly prepared by officials of the Indian Bureau in response to this suggestion. I do not think they thought it was the best that could be prepared, but they thought that it was not open to a point of order, and therefore was perhaps the best that could be done on the spur of the moment. I sincerely hope that those Senators who believe that it is wrong to spend the Indians' moneys in this way without properly safeguarding his rights will not stand back and say to every proposal we make here for the protection of the Indian, "This way is wrong and that way is wrong." I want positive suggestions offered as to some way to safeguard the Indians' rights; and if no way can be found, then, so far as I am concerned, I prefer that no appropriation be made at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I had no idea when I took the floor that I would take as much time of the Senate as I have consumed thus far. When last interrupted by the Senator from Vermont, I was about to state that on yesterday the Senator from Montana, in response to a question of mine, said that these water rights, or some water rights for the benefit of the Indians and of the Indian lands, had been secured by the Government through its compliance with the requirements and machinery of the State laws upon that subject.

Mr. MYERS. They have, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, I assume that the Government has so acted that the appropriations by it were sufficient in quantity for the amount of lands to be supplied. The Senator also said that of the lands to be benefited by this scheme, occupied by the whites who purchased their lands, the purchase money, together with the price to be charged to them for their water and water rights, would constitute a fund that would go back into the Treasury to recoup and reimburse the amount of these appropriations. That being the case, and a million and half dollars having been appropriated which will be absolutely lost and worthless if this enterprise is not completed, and in view of the further fact that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States does in that particular case, according to the Senator's own statement, make a reservation of all waters that are necessary for the Indians, I am unable to perceive why, even if this were a question of law—which I can not for a moment admit—that this amendment would be of any importance whatever.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator desire to interrupt me?

Mr. PAGE. I rose to say to the Senator that I have not yet heard any reliable authority say that this would be an entire loss of money if we should stop now. The entire project, of course, would not be completed, but $100,000 or $50,000 would probably be sufficient to keep the project going until we can ascertain what may be done to protect the Indians.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to interject a remark at that point and shed a little light upon the subject. The greater part of the million and a half dollars would be lost because the greater part of it has been spent in preliminary work, some in fundamental work, such as foundation work, putting in dams and reservoirs, and simply getting ready to put the water on the land.

Mr. THOMAS. If it be true that this enterprise is going to cost four or five million dollars more—and I do not doubt it—it seems to me that the Government is indulging in a system of false economy in making such a small appropriation as $200,000 for the continuance of the work. It is something that ought to be completed, and completed as soon as possible.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to say at this juncture that both the Indians and the whites are clamoring for larger appropriations and a speedy completion of the project. Mr. Newell, chief engineer of the Reclamation Service, testified that $600,000 a year could be profitably handled and ought to be appropriated to rush the work to completion.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, as a matter of fact, the Reclamation Service and the reclamation fund ought to have been used, in part at least, for the construction of this reservoir.

Mr. MYERS. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. To that I fully agree; but, Mr. President, the reclamation fund has been treated very much as the Senator thinks the Indian fund has been treated in the administration of all these reclamation projects. The very heart and core of the reclamation law is involved in the purpose and effort of reclaiming and making cultivable the lands which belong to the Government of the United States, the public domain, in order that citizens may avail themselves of their changed condition to settle upon them and make homes upon them; and yet in what is called the Engle project, down in the southern part of New Mexico, a vast amount of money—the project will cost, before it is completed, $10,000,000—has been deliberately misappropriated—I do not use the term in any offensive or criminal sense—misdirected from its original purpose and diverted to the completion of that huge enterprise, which, when completed, will only reclaim an aggregate of 180,000 acres of land, less than 14,000 acres of which, as I said before, is on the public domain. I presume that it is because of those things, or, rather, because of that particular instance—I can not name any others, although there may be others—that recourse is had upon the Indian funds for the purpose of completing some of these other projects.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. I think there are a great many things about this matter that I do not know. In fact, they would fill a very large book.

Mr. THOMAS. The things I do not know about it would probably fill another volume.

Mr. PAGE. But, Mr. President, when we want information—and I speak now with reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs—the most natural place in the world for us to go is to the Interior Department, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Indian Commissioner. I want to read just two or three quotations from the statements made by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Committee on Indian Affairs touching this particular appropriation. Here is one:

These items—

Speaking of the several amendments which were thrown out on points of order, the commissioner, or assistant commissioner, said:

These items, we believe, will protect the water rights of Indians on a number of reservations where large appropriations have been made—

Bear in mind that these provisos were added to half a dozen items.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. PAGE. Now, mark this:

And where, if they lose their water rights, they will receive no benefit from the irrigation projects heretofore constructed.

Again:

According to estimates of the Reclamation Service, it will require nearly $3,000,000 to be further appropriated by Congress to complete this project.

Here is another suggestion from the assistant commissioner:

The Indian water-right situation is one of the most acute and important questions relating to Indian matters now before the Indian Bureau.

I believe that statement is absolutely correct.

Mr. THOMAS. He might have extended it, with perfect truth, and said that it is one of the most acute problems that all people, red and white, are confronted with in the arid regions of the United States.

Mr. PAGE. He then proceeds to say:

There are dependent upon the solution of this question not only property rights involving millions of dollars but the success or failure, prosperity or poverty, of thousands of Indians who are the wards of the Government and whose interests it is the duty of the Indian Bureau to protect.

The Indian Bureau has been seeking to protect them in the way I have suggested, but unfortunately their suggestions have gone out upon points of order; and that leaves us with the urgent necessity of providing some other relief, and the best we are at this time able to suggest is provided by this amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. THOMAS. I have the highest opinion of the good purposes and the zeal and the efforts to properly discharge the duties of the position which the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs and his assistants have at all times shown; but I am unable to see how this amendment which has been stricken out on a point of order can in the slightest degree benefit the Indians, whether it is agreed to or not. I regard it as so much waste paper, because you can not initiate a water right in that way for an Indian or for a white man or at all, unless it may be in the particular case to which that decision relates; and there it is needless, because the decision, if it is good law, as it is claimed to be, makes the amendment even there unnecessary.

I do not want to see the Indian funds squandered and misused any more than anyone else does; and I will join the Senator from Vermont at any time and at all times, as long as I am here, in any effort that he sees fit to make toward husbanding the resources of the Indian and seeing to it that they are expended for the Indian and for him alone; but I am unwilling to bring this enterprise to a halt in view of all the information I have been able to obtain concerning it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has called attention to the case of Winters v. The United States (207 U. S., 564) as bearing upon this question. I think it is only necessary to disclose the facts upon which the suit was based and the opinion rendered to determine that it has no effect upon the question now before the Senate.

It is said in the statement of the case:

This suit was brought by the United States to restrain appellants and others from constructing or maintaining dams or reservoirs on the Milk River, in the State of Montana, or in any other manner preventing the water of the river or its tributaries from flowing to the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation.

So it appears that the action was one between the United States and private individuals who were claiming rights in the waters of the stream.

It is said further in the statement:

In 1889 the United States constructed houses and buildings upon the reservation for the occupancy and residence of the officers in charge of it, and such officers depend entirely for their domestic, culinary, and irrigation purposes upon the water of the river. In the year 1889, and long prior to the acts of the defendants complained of, the United States, through its officers and agents at the reservation, appropriated and took from the river a flow of 1,000 miner's inches, and conducted it to the buildings and premises, used the same for domestic purposes and also for the irrigation of land adjacent to the buildings and premises, and by the use thereof raised crops of grain, grass, and vegetables. Afterwards, but long prior to the acts of the defendants complained of, to wit, on the 5th of July, 1898, the Indians residing on the reservation diverted from the river for the purpose of irrigation a flow of 10,000 miner's inches of water to and upon divers and extensive tracts of land, aggregating in amount about 30,000 acres, and raised upon said lands crops of grain, grass, and vegetables.

So it appears that in this case, before Montana became a State, the Government and the Indians had actually appropriated to a beneficial use a large part of the waters of the stream; and it was upon that condition of things that the decision of the court was rendered.

The court, speaking of that condition and the rights of the parties, has this to say:

Another contention of appellants is that if it be conceded that there was a reservation of the waters of Milk River by the agreement of 1888, yet the reservation was repealed by the admission of Montana into the Union, February 22, 1889 (ch. 180, 25 Stat., 676), "upon an equal footing with the original States." The language of counsel is that "any reservation in the agreement with the Indians, expressed or implied, whereby the waters of Milk River were not to be subject of appropriation by the citizens and inhabitants of said State, was repealed by the act of admission." But to establish the repeal counsel rely substantially upon the same argument that they advance against the intention of the agreement to reserve the waters. The power of the Government to reserve the waters and exempt them from appropriation under the State laws is not denied, and could not be.

That is the particular clause in the decision to which the Senator from Vermont refers and upon which he relies.

That the Government did reserve them we have decided, and for a use which would be necessarily continued through years. This was done May 1, 1888, and it would be extreme to believe that within a year Congress destroyed the reservation and took from the Indians the consideration of their grant, leaving them a barren waste—took from them the means of continuing their old habits, yet did not leave them the power to change to new ones.

The only question there was whether the Government had actually reserved these waters to the use of itself and the Indians by actual appropriation and use of the water, putting it to a beneficial use, and whether, if that reservation had been made, it would be repealed by the mere act of admitting Montana into the Union. The court concludes that the reservation was actually made, and that the admission of the State would not have the effect of setting aside the contract of reservation made with the Indians.

I think there can be no doubt of the correctness of the decision based upon the facts as they are stated in the statement of the case; but that does not reach the question of the rights in the waters of a stream as between the States and the United States. Nobody at the present time will question the fact that as a matter of law the States, and not the United States, are the owners of the water that flows in the streams passing through the States, and that the State has the right and jurisdiction to determine upon what terms and conditions the water shall be taken out of the streams and used by private individuals or others; so that there is really nothing in this decision that affects this question or affects the question of the rights of the States in the water.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to ask the Senator from California whether that decision is not somewhat similar, at least, to the decisions that have been rendered in my State as to what has been conveyed when a man conveys 160 acres of land without any reference to the water rights upon it. Under the laws of Colorado, if there has been a water right attached to the land, the water right passes as appurtenant to the land by the deed itself. You do not have to mention the water right.

Mr. WORKS. Oh, there is no question about that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If, however, your water rights are obtained by stock in a company, and it is represented that by virtue of those shares you are entitled to so much water, the conveyance of the land conveys nothing whatever of the water.

Mr. WORKS. No; not unless the water has been actually applied to the land.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In the case of its application to the land there is a difference between the States. In our State, however, you have a right to transfer water. Consequently, they have held in those cases that where the owner of land owns stock in a company, if he conveys the land without referring at all to the water right or to the stock the water does not go; but where he conveys the land to which the water right has attached by reason of appropriation without the intervention of some stock of his own in a company, the water right goes as a part of the conveyance, as appurtenant to the land.

This decision seems to me to be following out that same view, namely, that here was an agreement by which the Indians conveyed this land to the United States, and it was to be held as an Indian reservation; and the question arose there whether, in that conveyance, because of the fact that no water right was mentioned, the Indians did not intend not to reserve any water rights, notwithstanding they had already constructed the ditch, and notwithstanding they were using water. It would naturally, under the laws of the State of Colorado, at least, go as appurtenant to the land, and consequently they would not be deprived of it. It seems to me that distinction is clearly presented in that opinion.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAGE. I have listened to the debate upon this law point with very great interest for several days, and I do not want to prolong the session of the Senate by going further, but I should like to have just one point settled in my mind, and that is, does the Senator believe that this decision as it reads is good law?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I am not prepared to say that it is good law or that it is poor law, because, from the facts that the Senator from California has read, the opinion is not contrary to the general principles that were announced in the discussion of this question on Saturday. It is like this: The Government, by reason of its contract with the Indians, made a conveyance to the Indians, as it were; and the question was whether a water right that had already attached went with the conveyance or whether it was excluded by the conveyance. It seems to me that when you consider that they had constructed it for that purpose, and that the land was useless without the water, the court naturally would hold that it was appurtenant to the land, and therefore it would go with the land, just as in the decisions to which I have referred in the State of Colorado, where a man conveys a piece of property upon which there is a ditch constructed, and he has been using water continually, the courts would say to any person who attempted to attack that water right, "You can not do it, because it was conveyed to that party, although it was not expressly mentioned."

Mr. PAGE. Does not the Senator think the Supreme Court attempted to say that water from the Milk River sufficient for the irrigation of these Indian lands was, by an implied reservation, reserved for the benefit of the Indians?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, certainly. It does not say all the water; whatever had been appropriated there. You might just as well ask, when I make a conveyance of 160 acres upon which there is an irrigating ditch and I have been drawing water from a regular irrigating ditch and paying for it each year whether or not when I convey that land there is reserved by me the water which goes by that land. The court would say, "No; you could not have done that. You could not have intended that. You must have intended, as a matter of fact, that the water should be conveyed, because the land is not worth much without the water."

Mr. PAGE. But it seems to me the trouble with the Senator's reasoning is that the Supreme Court's decision does not limit the water to whatever may be appropriated, but it says "for the benefit of the Indians of a sufficient amount of water," and so forth.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But when, according to the statement of facts there, 10,000 inches have been used, it does seem to me that it would be naturally implied that it was a part of the agreement that it should go.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, there can be no doubt of the correctness of the first proposition advanced by the Senator from Colorado, that where water is actually appropriated and applied to a beneficial use in the irrigation of land it becomes appurtenant to the land, and passes with it upon a conveyance of the land without any reference to the water right.

As to the rights of one holding stock in a water corporation, that is entirely controlled by the State statutes, and the rule differs in the different States.

The Senator from Vermont, however, asks whether this opinion correctly states the law. It does, undoubtedly, as applied to the facts as they are disclosed in the case; but the general statement made by the court that—

The power of the Government to reserve the waters and exempt them from appropriation under the State laws is not denied, and could not be—

Must be confined to the facts of this particular case. As a general proposition, it is not good law at all, because the National Government has no right to reserve any of the waters of a stream flowing within a State. This, however, was a case where the waters were flowing through a Territory, under the control and jurisdiction of the National Government; and such a contract was made as entitled the Indians to appropriate the waters, and they were actually appropriated and applied to the lands. Under those conditions, of course, the statement of the court is entirely correct, in my judgment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. PAGE. I should like to ask one more question, and then I will discontinue my remarks. Does the court design to say that the United States has reserved the water of which the Indians made beneficial use at that particular time, or does it design to say that the reservation is made of enough water to irrigate the lands? There is the whole question, in my mind.

Mr. WORKS. The court does not say, but simply states the facts, and then the conclusion that the Government had the right to reserve the water; but I assume that the Government was dealing with the water actually appropriated and applied to a beneficial use.

Mr. PAGE. Then the language of the court is very misleading, because it says that the court holds that there was an implied reservation for the benefit of the Indians of a sufficient amount of water from the Milk River for irrigation and other specified purposes.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I suppose the quantity of water that had already been appropriated by the Indians was regarded by the court as a sufficient quantity. Of course, I am not able to say what was in the mind of the justice who delivered this opinion; but undoubtedly the language used by the court must be confined to the actual conditions that were disclosed in this particular case.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the legal features of this matter; and while I have tried to pay attention to this debate, and probably ought to know the facts with reference to the lands affected, I confess that I do not know very much about them. If the Senator from Montana will permit me, however, I should like to ask him a few questions, not in a catechising way at all, but simply to get some information.

Mr. MYERS. I shall answer them with great pleasure. I have been stating facts, and had intended to state some more, but I shall be glad to answer any questions that I can.

Mr. JONES. How many acres of land are supposed to be reclaimed by this project for which we are making provision?

Mr. MYERS. I can not tell that right now without taking a good while and going into the testimony before the committee. Perhaps the chairman of the committee or the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] might be able to tell that. I have not the figures at hand.

Mr. JONES. Do the lands to be reclaimed constitute an Indian reservation?

Mr. MYERS. They do not now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can inform the Senator from Washington that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] stated that the irrigable part of the reservation consisted of about 150,000 acres, one half of which belonged to white people and the other half to the Indians.

Mr. MYERS. I have not yet answered the other question. This land is not now an Indian reservation. It was the Flathead Indian Reservation, on which the Flathead Tribe of Indians resided; but by an agreement with the tribe, into which the tribe entered, and to which it consented, the reservation was thrown open to allotment and settlement. Each Indian was allotted so much land—80 acres of irrigable farming land and a larger quantity of grazing land. The Indians took their allotments first, got the first choice, and got the land they wanted. Then the balance of it was thrown open to settlement by whites upon its purchase at the appraised price of from $4 to $7 an acre, and by legislation of Congress this reclamation project was started in order to put water on the land.

Mr. JONES. The lands that continued Indian lands have all been allotted to the individual Indians, as I understand?

Mr. MYERS. They have all taken their allotments, I think.

Mr. JONES. And the remainder that was formerly part of the reservation has been disposed of to white people?

Mr. MYERS. It is open to disposal. Most of it has been disposed of; not all.

Mr. JONES. But the remainder, then, is still Indian land, to be disposed of to settlers upon their paying the appraised value and complying with the homestead law, I suppose?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; to be disposed of.

Mr. JONES. About half of it has been allotted to the Indians and the other half——

Mr. PAGE. One-third.

Mr. JONES. One-third, the Senator from Vermont tells me.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Vermont, I think, is thinking of the amount of land which the Indians have had water put upon. They have had about one-third of the water put upon their lands, as I understand; but from the statement of the Chair, which I now recall to be substantially correct, the Indians got half of the land, and the better half.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, then, Congress some time ago made an appropriation to provide irrigation works to reclaim the lands that had been allotted to the Indians, and also the surplus lands?

Mr. MYERS. It began about six years ago, and has been appropriating from $200,000 to $400,000 each year for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. What is the plan of these irrigation works? Do they consist of reservoirs, or simply diverting canals?

Mr. MYERS. Reservoirs, principally, as a foundation for the storage of water.

Mr. JONES. That is, the water has to be stored in order to make the supply available for these lands?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; for most of them.

Mr. JONES. Most of it has to be stored?

Mr. MYERS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. We have appropriated the money, or part of it, to start this project, but have provided that it should be reimbursable out of the Indian funds. Is that true?

Mr. MYERS. That is true.

Mr. JONES. And all that we have appropriated thus far has been reimbursable out of the Indian funds?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. Of course, it is probably useless to inquire why we did that; but I can see no particular justice in requiring the Indian to put up money to reclaim any land excepting his own, and I do not see the justice of our continuing that.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask the Senator a question. If it is necessary to construct these reservoirs and use the Indians' money for the purpose of storing water to put on the Indians' lands, had they not just as well make it a little larger and store water to put on the lands of the white settlers, when the money which comes in from the sale of the land to white settlers goes to pay for the whole thing?

Mr. JONES. Yes; but why should we say that the money that is expended to reclaim the lands in private ownership shall be a lien upon the funds of the Indians? Why do we not say that we are going to appropriate that money out of the Treasury of the United States, and then, when a private individual gets title to his land, that he has to repay to the Government the amount it cost?

Mr. MYERS. Because the appropriation would have to come out of the reclamation fund.

Mr. JONES. No; it would come out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MYERS. I have never heard anybody advocate that theory before. I have heard all sorts of complaints——

Mr. JONES. I think it is about time it was advocated in a case like this.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to finish my statement. I have heard all sorts of critical comments and complaints and fault-finding with this system, and people have told us a hundred different ways in which it ought to be done, and the only thing they seem to agree about is that they do not want it done in the present way; but I never before heard anybody suggest that the money ought to come or could come directly out of the Treasury of the United States.

I should like to ask the Senator a question. He says he does not know why that was done. Was the Senator in this body six years ago?

Mr. JONES. No; I did not ask why that was done. I know why it was done. I was not in this body six years ago, but I was in the House.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator was in the House six years ago?

Mr. JONES. I was.

Mr. MYERS. Then the Senator ought to know why it was done. I was not here.

Mr. JONES. I do know why it was done. It was done just for the reason, I suppose, that we are continuing it now—because in a way it evades taking it out of the Treasury of the United States and puts it in a sort of way as though Congress was not appropriating any money. That is the reason it was put in that way.

Mr. MYERS. We are appropriating the money now, however, and it goes into the sum total of the appropriations of Congress.

Mr. JONES. I know it; but why not say that it comes out of the Treasury and shall be reimbursable by the white people instead of out of the Indians' money? The Indian is under no obligation to reclaim that land.

I do not blame the Senator for trying to carry on this proposition. I do not criticize him in the least.

Mr. MYERS. The Indians are getting the benefit by getting water on their land. They get the benefit as well as the others.

Mr. JONES. It is all right to let their lands be burdened with the cost of their own reclamation, but do not burden them with the cost of reclaiming the white man's lands. Let the United States Government put up that money out of the Treasury, as we are doing, and instead of saying that it is reimbursable out of Indian funds let us say that the white man shall pay the cost which he ought to pay.

If I had my way about it, I would put in a provision here simply appropriating this money, and require that whatever part ought to be put against the Indian land should be reimbursed out of the Indian fund and require the white owners to pay the other half.

Mr. MYERS. You can not do that now, because it would be a general appropriation, and it has not been estimated for.

Mr. JONES. We could do it if we would.

Mr. MYERS. I do not believe we could do it this year.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to say that the Senator from Washington, to use a proverbial expression, has struck the keynote. By a reference to the hearings before the Senate committee on pages 234 and 235 it will be seen that the exact policy which he is suggesting was agreed on in the committee; that is, that the matter of financing this reclamation project should be changed so that the Indians should reimburse only one-half of it, and the whites the remaining half, and in this way the increase from $100,000 to $250,000 was made.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator say that such an amendment was offered in committee?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. It was discussed.

Mr. MYERS. What became of it?

Mr. ROBINSON. I will read the record. I did not want to prolong this debate by further injecting my views into this controversy, but it is an important matter, and it is not by any means terminated with the adoption or rejection of this amendment, because there is involved in this legislation a principle which Congress will be compelled to recognize in the early future. I read from page 234:

Mr. MERITT. This matter has been in my mind for a number of years. Soon after I became the law clerk of the Indian Bureau and had charge of the legislative work of that bureau, I recognized that an injustice was being done to the Flathead Indians. On January 12, 1912, I prepared a memorandum for the then commissioner and set out this condition. That memorandum is found on page 453 of the hearings, and I made a specific recommendation as to what should be done in this case in order that the rights of the Flathead Indians might be protected.

One paragraph of that memorandum reads as follows:

"I wish to call your attention to the fact that under the proposed arrangement the property of the Indians is required to be held as security for the reimbursement of appropriations made by Congress to construct the Flathead irrigation project, which will benefit the white settlers as much as it will benefit the Indians, and the project when completed will irrigate as much land in the ownership of white settlers as allotted to the Indians. In view of this fact, I want to suggest the advisability of Congress making direct appropriations for the construction of this project as a regular irrigation project under the supervision of the Reclamation Service rather than an Indian irrigation project, the Indians to pay their proportionate share of the cost per acre for irrigation, and the money heretofore appropriated by Congress and made reimbursable by the Indians could be considered as part payment of the cost of the irrigation of the Indians' land."

Mr. Chairman, I think that is the equitable solution of this question.

Senator FALL. I want to congratulate you, sir.

Senator GRONNA. So, instead of making it a reimbursable fund, you want it appropriated direct, the same as any other irrigation project?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir; and let the money which shall hereafter be reimbursed be credited to the Indians as part payment of this construction charge.

Senator TOWNSEND afterwards took part in that discussion, and I make the statement, from reading the testimony of the hearings before the committee on that subject, that it was agreed by the committee that the method of financing this reclamation project should be changed, so that the Indians should reimburse only for their proportionate share and the whites should reimburse for their proportionate share. If that is not a fair proposition, I am unable to perceive one when it is presented.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator from Washington permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Do I understand from what the Senator from Arkansas has said that the money that is used to build this irrigation project will be paid entirely out of Indian funds, and that white settlers will get the water without paying anything for the water?

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; that is not it at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What is the situation about that? Of course I think——

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not say——

Mr. MYERS. Just let me interject a remark here. The white settlers pay the cost of putting water upon their land—thirty or forty dollars an acre.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The white settlers pay their proportionate cost of the irrigation work?

Mr. MYERS. They do; certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course that ought to be so.

Mr. MYERS. They do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Indians ought not to be compelled to pay money for building irrigation work to irrigate the lands of white settlers.

Mr. MYERS. The white settlers have to pay their share before they get title to the land. They must not only pay for the land, but pay the cost of putting water on the land before they can get a patent to the land.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What becomes of the money which the white settlers pay?

Mr. MYERS. It goes back into the Indian fund from which the money was taken to pay for the work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So the white settlers, to the extent of land which they irrigate, pay a just measure?

Mr. MYERS. They do.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is not an entirely correct statement. The correct statement is——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington has the floor. Does he continue to yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield. I am just trying to get the facts in the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. The correct statement as disclosed in the record is this: The Indians are financing this reclamation project. The Government advances the money out of the Treasury, approximately $6,000,000. While the whites already own half the lands that are to be reclaimed under the project, the Indians are required to reimburse every dollar of it. The whites, of course, if the reclamation project proves profitable, reimburse the Indians.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to answer the Senator right there. The white settler goes up there and buys from the Government a certain quantity of land, say, 80 acres of irrigable land. He signs the papers and enters into a contract with the Government to pay the appraised value of that land, which is from four to seven dollars an acre. We will say that the appraised value in this case is $5 per acre. For 80 acres of land that is $400 he agrees to pay, and also he signs papers to pay the Government the cost of putting water on that land, of which at present the running amount is $40 per acre. We will say it costs $40 per acre. He pays not only for the land, but he pays the Government $40 per acre for putting water on the land. He pays for the land and he pays for the water. I want to ask the Senator where does that money go? I should like——

Mr. ROBINSON. It is reimbursed to the Indian fund, and I have never contended anything else; but I will further answer that by reading the testimony of the assistant commissioner, together with the question the Senator from Montana asked him, on page 234.

Senator MYERS. No; I think it ought to be completed long before the 20 years is up and get back the principal.

Senator FALL. Under the act of Congress they—have 20 years, these white people, to pay it back after it is completed. Let me ask you this question and see if I get this right. We will say this 77,000 acres of land, which goes to the white people, is sold for the maximum, $7 an acre. I understand it is appraised at $4 to $7 an acre. Now, as I understand the proceeds of that $7 an acre go back into this fund to reimburse; is that not it?

Meaning the white settlers—

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. Then as a matter of fact, that is Indian land, is it not?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. Instead of getting $7 the Indians get only $3.50, because one-half goes to reimburse his cost and one-half goes to the white man to reimburse his cost, so he is really getting $3.50?

Mr. MERITT. The white man ultimately will pay back to the Indian his pro rata share.

Senator FALL. I thought he was going to pay it back to the Reclamation Service or to this fund we appropriated. If we appropriate $500,000 now, one-half of that will be for the benefit of the white man and one-half for the Indian?

Mr. MERITT. And the Indian will have to reimburse the entire $500,000.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will permit me, he will have to reimburse the Indian fund.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have already stated that ultimately he will have to reimburse the Indian fund.

Senator FALL. And he takes the chance of the white man doing anything?

Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir.

Senator FALL. And then the proceeds of this $7 an acre which the white man pays, one-half of that will be applied in repaying his $250,000 and one-half the Indian's $250,000, so the Indian gets $3.50 an acre instead of $4 to $7 an acre?

Senator LANE. There is another point I wish to bring out, that the majority of the allotments on the Flathead Reservation have been made, and the Indians are held responsible, on dry land which never can be irrigated at all. I should like to call on these gentlemen to explain in regard to that.

Senator MYERS. I should like Mr. Meritt to finish all he has to say.

Now, the fact of the matter is that many of the Indians' allotments are on the dry lands that can not be irrigated. Nevertheless, these lands which can never receive any benefit from the project whatever are hypothecated against the chance that the Indian takes of this being made a successful reclamation project, and the white man takes no chances whatever.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to interrupt the Senator just there. Every Indian has the opportunity to select 80 acres of good irrigable, arable land and an additional amount of grazing land, I think 320 acres. If that is not giving him just as good a chance as the white man I do not know what is. If they do not select 80 acres of bottom land, good farm land, it is their fault.

Mr. ROBINSON. Most of the allotments have already been made, and while the Indians did have such an opportunity, in the course of events it resulted that the Indians in many instances got dry lands that can not be irrigated, and now they are required to hypothecate that land, which can not be benefited, to make good the establishment of this project.

Mr. MYERS. With 80 acres of bottom land, irrigable land——

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington has the floor. The Chair does not know to whom he is farming it out.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Arkansas is not quite correct when he says this project is being financed by the United States Government. It seems to be financed by the Indians. They are required to furnish the security and repay the total amount of this money to the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have stated that the Government first pays it.

Mr. WORKS. You have so stated, but I think the conclusion drawn from the statement is not correct, for I think really the Indian is financing this whole scheme.

Mr. ROBINSON. Undoubtedly; that was the very basis of my contention, that the scheme is not fair and that the system of financing it ought to be changed. It is true the Government first advances the money, and in that sense of the word the Government is financing it. Nevertheless, every dollar of it is reimbursable out of the Indian funds. It means that the entire property of the Flathead Indians, whether it is benefited by this reclamation project or not, stands pledged as a guarantee of the success of the reclamation project. The system is wrong. You would not get a white man standing in the place of these Indians to go into a scheme of this sort as long as time runs.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator says that an agreement was reached by the committee that was entirely inconsistent, as I understand, with the bill as reported from the committee. What became of that agreement?

Mr. ROBINSON. The committee inserted in the bill a provision which sought to protect the rights of the Indians, and that provision went out on a point of order. Then, after conferring with some of my colleagues on the committee, as the Senator will remember, I offered an amendment which took the other horn of the dilemma and sought to have the Indians' rights protected under the laws of Montana. That amendment was defeated. Now I have offered this amendment as the last recourse. It simply provides that before you further commit Congress to the expenditure of Indian moneys to construct this irrigation project, you shall get the advice and opinion of the chief law officer of the Government that the Indians are going to be benefited by it.

Mr. WORKS. That does not relieve the objectionable features of the provision, even if that amendment may be adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is entirely true.

Mr. WORKS. They are still left burdened with the obligation of constructing this whole work.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with the Senator from California, but it will require affirmative legislation to change the method of financing this irrigation project, and you can not secure that in this appropriation bill. You must have separate legislation.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator mean to say that it is necessary in this appropriation bill to make this amount of money a lien upon the lands of the Indians and compel them to obligate themselves for the total amount in an appropriation bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Whether I say that or not, when we make this appropriation it does become a lien on the lands of the Indians.

Mr. WORKS. Certainly; but the Senator says that no substantive legislation can go into the bill. Is not that substantive legislation?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; it is not.

Mr. WORKS. Outside of the mere appropriation?

Mr. ROBINSON. This appropriation is made under authority of law heretofore enacted authorizing the construction of this irrigation project, and the appropriation itself is not subject to a point of order. If it were, I unhesitatingly say that in the light that has come to me during this discussion I should make the point of order.

Mr. WORKS. It is perfectly evident that the Senator from Arkansas is right, that this whole proceeding is unjust to the Indians, and that something ought to be done to protect the Indians from that injustice.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Calling the attention of the Senator from Arkansas, it rather strikes me that his amendment does not go to the root of the trouble here.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with the Senator that it does not.

Mr. CLAPP. While we perhaps could not on this bill, and it might be difficult at this time to get a provision that would readjust what has gone before, could we not at this time amend this by inserting after the figures "$250,000" on line 18 the words "one-half," so as to read "$250,000, one-half reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910"; and then after the figures "1910" on line 20 to insert "and the other half to remain and be a lien upon the land not allotted to or taken by Indians," or perhaps some other expression may be used as to the other half, so that as to this particular appropriation we would make one-half of it reimbursable and the other half not reimbursable out of the Indian fund, and to that extent relieve the Indians of insuring the final payment for the work?

The position of the Senator, I think, is right. While it is true that we use this money, and while it is undoubtedly true that this project will probably work out and be successful, and, of course, in that event if it proved successful it would be immaterial, I quite agree with the Senator that as to the half that is taken by white settlers we should advance the money directly and not hold the Indian fund responsible for it.

While I would be glad if we had the time to join with anyone and reach back and readjust the matter up to this point, in the absence of time to do that, this suggestion of mine, beginning with this appropriation, would at least meet the objection as to the amount appropriated against taking out the entire appropriation.

Mr. JONES. That would throw it into conference.

Mr. CLAPP. That would throw it into conference, and I think perhaps in conference the matter could be worked out in detail.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has suggested an amendment which contemplates a change of method of financing this reclamation project?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. That amendment, like the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. I realize, of course, that that amendment would be subject to a point of order; and still I do not know whether it would, either, because it is simply a limitation. We appropriate $250,000 and add to that appropriation a limitation. On the other hand, I rather think, on reflection, that being a mere limitation upon that appropriation, it would not be subject to a point of order. But my suggestion was based on the thought that, it being the general desire here to put the matter in proper shape, there certainly would be no point made against what is manifestly desired by everyone, and that is to begin as soon as we can, at least, to put one-half of this burden upon the land taken by the white settlers.

Mr. ROBINSON. The suggestion offered by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, which I read a few moments ago, could be easily framed into an amendment that would change the entire method of financing this irrigation project. There would be but very little trouble about it. We could provide not only that future appropriations which may be made should be reimbursable one half from the Indians and the remaining half from the white settlers, but we could also provide that the funds which have heretofore been charged as reimbursable against the Indians should be credited on their pro rata share of the payments. But the difficulty about that is that it is all subject to a point of order.

Mr. JONES. I think no one would make a point of order against it.

Mr. CLAPP. No one would make the point of order.

Mr. JONES. It would solve the problem. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas to frame an amendment that would cover that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall be very glad to do so if the opportunity is offered. The amendment which I have offered, and it was not submitted until after consultation with some authorities of the Government, who, while they do not stand sponsor for changing the method of financing this reclamation project, realize that an injustice is being done to the Indians under the present system. My thought is that if we put a limitation upon the appropriation so that we must have the approval of the Attorney General in so far as the rights of the Indians are concerned, if he has any doubt that the Indians are being properly protected he might suggest a way out of the difficulty which would enable us hereafter to provide an adequate remedy.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Washington pardon me?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Calling the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the matter, it seems to me the difficulty with his plan is this: Here we have made large appropriations for this work. While I am not familiar with the details of the work, I am rather inclined to think that there should be made appropriations at this time to carry the work forward.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator prepared an amendment which he thinks would cover the proposition?

Mr. CLAPP. I want to finish the suggestion. I think it would be unfortunate to delay this work if we can allow the work to go on under a provision that will make a just application of the cost of it, because I do know that it often happens in these works that if you delay them you lose a great deal of that which has been invested in the work.

I may be mistaken, but I do not believe a point of order would be made against it if we could frame an amendment here that would allow the work to go right on and at the same time protect the Indian fund from the burden of an assurance of the success of the work. As to the land taken by the white men, it seems to me it would not be better, with all due deference to the Senator, to refer the matter to the department and possibly hold up this entire work.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am entirely willing to accept that suggestion, and I shall be very glad, if I am assured that no point of order will be made, to submit the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. I can not assure that, of course, but it is my suggestion to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I offer this amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is already one amendment pending.

Mr. CLAPP. I have not offered it. It is more of a suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Senator that he put the amendment which he has suggested in form to be presented to the Senate. I can then——

Mr. CLAPP. I have it here in form, and I will submit it to the consideration of the Senator. As I said, it only begins now. It does not reach back and adjust matters. After the figures "$250,000," page 43, line 18, insert the words "one half," so that it will read:

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, one half reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 4, 1910—

That is the old law. Then, after the figures "1910," on line 20, insert the words:

And the other half to be and remain a lien upon the land not allotted to or taken by Indians.

It might be worded better than that, and in view of the evident acquiescense of the Senator, I suggest that we pass over the amendment for a few moments.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to that suggestion.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to make just one or two other suggestions, and then I will be through. I have not read the hearings in reference to this matter. This proposition has been suggested, and the plan which we have just been discussing occurred to me as I heard it discussed as being a proper and fair way to deal with this matter.

Now, in reference to the water-right proposition, from the statement made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], it seems to me there really is no question of interference with State laws, or anything of that sort. I should like the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to this particular proposition, because he has given it much more thought than I have. It seems to me, I say, from the statement of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], that there is no question of interference with State laws here, because he said that the water secured by this work was secured largely by storage or in reservoirs. In other words, the Government, or the Indians, or whoever pays for the work of storing surplus water, and as long as it keeps that in storage—and it can hold it in storage as long as it wants—it is the owner of it, just the same as a man owns a piece of land; and it can distribute the stored-up water just as it sees fit, to whomsoever it sees fit, and upon what terms it sees fit. There is, it seems to me, no interference with State laws or regulations. If the statement is correct that the Government shall furnish water that is largely stored water, that simplifies the matter very much and takes out the suggested interference with the State law.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] the amendment which he proposes is fundamental. It goes to the entire irrigation movement in the West. Nobody has ever yet heretofore sought a direct appropriation from the United States Treasury for the purpose of constructing these irrigation works. They have what is known as the Reclamation Service out there, made up of contributions by the General Government. That serves as a sort of limitation upon the amount.

If you set a precedent in this particular case of allowing the United States Government to construct these improvements and look to an indefinite time and to an indefinite source when it is utilized and it will be reimbursed, it opens up a phase of it that has not heretofore been discussed. It is too late in the consideration of the bill to do so intelligently and effectively now. There is a great desire that this particular bill should be out of the way, so that some important matters standing behind it may receive consideration, and if no one else makes the point of order against the amendment I will do it myself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, of course, none of us want to do these Indians any injustice; and it would be a very great injustice if their moneys were used to build an irrigation plant, and the benefit of it should go to the white settlers without any payment on the part of the white settlers for it. But the white settlers will pay for whatever water they use. They are to pay for it, I understand, at the rate of about $40 an acre, the Indians, of course, in one sense, advancing the funds which are necessary to build the irrigation plant to begin with. In other words——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senator is mistaken about that. My colleague says the United States Government furnishes the money.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is true. I did not begin quite far enough back. In the first place, the United States Government advances the money. Then it looks, first of all, to the Indians to reimburse the Government for the funds which it has utilized for that purpose. Then, in turn, to the extent of the water that is used by the white settlers, the Indian fund looks to the white settlers for reimbursement. So ultimately the white settlers will pay for the water they get and the Indians will pay for the water they get. The only question is whether in the meantime the Indians will really get any benefit for their advancements. These lands are sold at from four to seven dollars per acre; and I assume that they would not be sold for as much if it were not for the fact that the lands have a prospective water right. That being so, the Indians do get a benefit, and a very great benefit, for their advancements. The Government first advances the money, then the Indians reimburse the Government; and the benefit which the Indians get for the advancement, which is ultimately repaid to them, is that they obtain a bigger price for the land they sell.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that that proposition is very much questioned; in fact, we are informed that as to those lands or similar lands in other reservations of the hilly country which never can be irrigated the price is from $10 to $12 an acre. Four dollars to $7 an acre is no price for land, as everybody knows who has ever been in that portion of the country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course the price paid for public lands depends upon a variety of circumstances.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will do so in a moment. My understanding is that as to those lands which are now sold at from $4 to $7 an acre that price is obtained because there is provision made for the building of irrigation works. Therefore the white man who purchases the land at that price pays that much because he has a prospective water right for the land. If this irrigation plant were not built at all and were not arranged for, then the lands would not sell for anything like the price for which they have sold. Now I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. But suppose under the terms and the conditions of this appropriation this project should fail, who would be the loser?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I presume that the Indians would ultimately be the losers.

Mr. WORKS. Certainly. They are required to take upon themselves a responsibility that is not imposed upon the white man. There is not any justice at all in that, Mr. President.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the Indians are selling their lands, I repeat, at from $4 to $7 an acre, because the white man who buys them relies upon this project not being a failure.

Mr. WORKS. That may be so as to a part of the land, but the ultimate outcome of it is that the Indian will be the loser and the white man will get off scot free.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to interject the suggestion that if it were not for the prospects of getting water, the land would not be worth 50 cents an acre.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know that lands have been sold in the Uintah Reservation, Utah, where there is no prospect of irrigation, for as little as 50 cents an acre. They are sold at public auction; they can not be sold even for the Government price of $1.25 an acre; but they are sold at auction at 50 cents an acre. I imagine that the same thing would be the case in this instance. The Indians are engaged in the enterprise in that view of it, and it really puts them in a better financial situation than if they did not advance the money to build these irrigation works.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I call the attention of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the fact—which also accords with our general experience, I think, in irrigation projects—that you go along to a certain point with one of them, and if you then stop you necessarily entail a great deal of loss. I think that will be admitted by everyone. This expenditure which would be imposed upon the Government outside of the Indian fund would amount to only $125,000.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It is the precedent which it would establish which makes it objectionable.

Mr. CLAPP. I know it is the precedent to which the Senator objects; but it is not necessarily a precedent, because we are in such a situation that if this is delayed and this appropriation fails, it is going to be an injustice to the Indians; it is going to entail a loss; and it would seem to me that under those circumstances——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. How can it fail? It has passed the House of Representatives and it has passed the Senate. Who is talking about any course of conduct that will ultimately create a condition where it will fail? Who is talking about making it fail?

Mr. CLAPP. If the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] prevails, it would then leave this matter to be referred to the Attorney General upon a question involving largely, I take it, the right of the Federal Government with reference to controlling the waters in view of the State laws. The Attorney General might hold that legally the Federal Government could not exercise that jurisdiction over those waters.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If there is any legitimate doubt about the powers of the Federal Government in dealing with waters on Indian reservations, it ought to be settled.

Mr. CLAPP. That is not the doubt at all; no one will question the right of the Federal Government under the law to provide for irrigation projects upon Indian reservations; but whether in connection with such projects the Federal Government can successfully attempt to give to the Indian beneficiary any right which would not under the State law be vested in a white citizen is a question.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I take it the right to divert water from Milk River, this very reservation, is res adjudicata. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that that right exists. Whether or not it is right as a general principle, it is right in that case.

Mr. CLAPP. I know the Supreme Court has made that decision.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then why does the Senator inject into this discussion all these doubts which he now enumerates?

Mr. CLAPP. The Attorney General might render a technical opinion in this case that probably under the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Arkansas would postpone this appropriation.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. All those matters can be worked out in conference.

Mr. CLAPP. Or defeated entirely; and I believe that would be a very great misfortune.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I do not regard it as any misfortune, because I do not regard it as at all probable. What the amendment requires the Attorney General to determine is as to whether or not the Indian, whose land furnishes the security for this lien, will be benefited by this project. I do not know just exactly what evidence the Attorney General would take into consideration in rendering his opinion. Therefore I do not know what he will decide.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the Senator from Arkansas will find that the amendment goes further than that if he will have it again stated.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator is that it changes the contract with the white man who purchases Indian lands. You can not make a new contract for a person in his own right; you can do it for a ward, but you can not do it for a person sui juris, as the lawyers call it, without consulting him, without his consent.

Mr. CLAPP. This would not change the contract between the Government and the white settlers at all.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. You intend to impose a lien upon his land that he has not contracted shall go there.

Mr. CLAPP. I beg the Senator's pardon. He has contracted that it shall go there. Every foot of that land is subject to this lien.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then you do not need any more legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will bear with me, I wish to say that if the project works out successfully and the land is sold and the lien is enforced, then the Indians will not lose anything.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment. The only change the amendment proposes to make is that, instead of leaving the Indian fund as the insurance for the success of this project, the Federal Government would assume one-half of the risk of the contract. That is the effect of the amendment. It does not change the contract relation with the men upon the lands.

Mr. MYERS. I should merely like to interject a remark here. I am glad to hear the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] make the statement, and make it clear, that there is a lien on the land of these white settlers for the money for carrying out this project, because there has been much said here to lead Senators who are not informed on the subject to believe that the lien was only on the Indian land, and that the white settler was incurring no obligation at all.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] made a very clear, lucid, and satisfactory explanation of that when he occupied the floor some time since. In the last analysis the real security for the money that is being advanced is the land. The Indians are not advancing the money now; they are not immediately the sureties for the repayment of the money; they have no credit; they have no assets outside of the reservation and the fund raised from the sale of surplus lands. It is a mere play upon words to talk about their being the ultimate security for anybody. The actual security for the lien is the land itself, and the actual lender will be the United States Government.

The scheme proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota is an entirely new one. It is objectionable because it will form a precedent in a great number of projects, and it will furnish the basis of appeals that will be constantly made here to make more liberal provision for every other project in the country. We have not discussed it; we do not understand it; we have not time to work it all out in equity and justice this afternoon, and I object to it on that score.

Then, it raises a very serious question as to whether, after a contract has been made and its ultimate limits have been defined by the parties to it acting in their own right, it can be changed by an act of Congress without their consent. I know it can not be. For that reason I think it is best to let this partial appropriation be made just as others have been made. It seems that it will require $4,000,000 more to complete the project; that much of the work necessary to consummate that great undertaking remains to be done hereafter; and it seems to me that if the million and a half already spent is properly safeguarded the additional $250,000 which is sought to be appropriated by this bill can share the same fate; and if it shall hereafter become necessary to modify the laws on this subject of irrigation, we ought to do so systematically and after a full understanding of what we are doing.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator from Arkansas will pause a moment, the Senator's first objection, of course, is a valid one if it is persisted in. The amendment does change the policy as to the appropriation itself, but I have no hesitation in saying that it does not change the contract rights of the man upon the land.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Arkansas, from his long experience and from the almost endless debate on the proposed amendment, if it is not the only way out of it for the Senate now to pass this bill?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes; right now.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And then to take up this other great question in its regular way and dispose of it with justice to both the white man and the Indian in a separate bill?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Why not pass the bill now? We have been talking upon these amendments for four or five or six days and making points of order on them at the end of a four-hour debate. I suggest that we proceed with the bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am entirely agreeable to the suggestion of the Senator from Arizona and will sit down.

Mr. ROBINSON. So far as I am concerned I am entirely ready for a vote upon the amendment.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think we have been borrowing a great deal of unnecessary trouble about the whole Indian situation in Montana and in these other States. The fact about it is that six years ago we provided for the building of this particular enterprise, and because we provided for it, because we were going to expend upwards of $6,000,000 in building a great irrigation enterprise, white settlers out there were induced to buy lands of the Indians and to pay for those lands a larger sum of money than they would have paid if it had not been for the irrigation project. These white settlers have some rights to be considered. I venture to say that if we had not provided for these irrigation works those lands would not have sold for one-half what they are now selling for. Some of them probably would not have sold, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has said, for more than 50 cents or a dollar an acre.

Now, having brought about that situation, these Indians are benefited, and they will in the end get a very large sum of money in the enhanced price of the lands which they would not have obtained except for the building of this irrigation plant. So that it does not seem to me that they are going to suffer or that we are doing any injustice to them. I think we ought to continue the policy which we have entered upon and make this appropriation of $250,000—and it really ought to be half a million dollars; it would be more economical to appropriate that much and finish this work—but we at least ought to make this appropriation of $250,000 without any restriction or limitation upon it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I deny that the plan on which this project is being constructed is an unfair one or that it is unjust to the Indians. It was studied out by the Interior Department and the Indian Bureau and adopted by Congress in the beginning, and it has been bowling along smoothly without anyone ever questioning its wisdom or raising any doubt about it. The Indians have never complained, and no complaint was made from other sources until this year. For three years I have sat in the Indian Committee and they have recommended an appropriation of from $250,000 to $400,000 for this project each year, and nobody ever raised any question about the wisdom of the project or suggested any doubt about justice being done to the Indians. Former Senator Curtis, of Kansas, when a Member of the Senate, was a leading and active member of that committee and never opposed liberal appropriations for this project. He never raised any question about justice being done to the Indians, and I reaffirm that there has been no complaint from the Flathead Indians about their not getting their rights under this project.

This is the one project in the West where the Indians and the whites both want large appropriations; they want the work hurried along and prosecuted to a speedy completion. The sooner it is completed and the sooner water is put upon the lands, both of the Indians and the whites, the sooner the whites can pay for their lands and water and the sooner the Indian tribal funds will be reimbursed this money. To adopt any such amendment as is suggested here would cause a cessation of the work which is going on now. The supervising engineer would certainly not permit any more work to go on under this appropriation without waiting to see what the Attorney General is going to do; and if it is stopped at all, it will doubtless be stopped for this year. It costs much money to stop and start again a work like this, and if any hampering amendment is put on the work will doubtless be stopped for one year and not be resumed until next year, if, indeed, it is resumed then.

As I have said, it remained for Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Indian Commissioner, to raise doubt about this project and to instill fear into the minds of some members of the Indian Committee about the wisdom of this course; and yet, notwithstanding that, although Mr. Meritt condemns the system under which the project is being carried on, he went before the Indian Committee of the House and recommended that $100,000 be appropriated for this year under the old system. If he thinks that it is a wrong and vicious system and that the Indians are not getting their rights, then he recommended that $100,000 be spent without the Indians getting their rights. The House committee appropriated $100,000, that being the estimate for this year.

There has been a good deal said about the House only appropriating $100,000. I want to tell something more about that. The Indian Committee did take his estimate and his word and appropriated only $100,000, a mere driblet, the least that has ever been appropriated for this project. When the item was reported out of the committee and before the bill passed the House, my colleague [Mr. WALSH] and our associates in the House, Representatives EVANS and STOUT, were astounded that only $100,000 should be recommended for this project, and all four of us went in a body to the Indian Commissioner to protest against such a small amount being allowed. The Indian Commissioner agreed then to let it go through the House in that way and to recommend to the Senate committee an increase, so as to make the amount $250,000. It is true that he found some fault with the method of procedure, but he said that this year he would recommend to the Senate committee an appropriation of $250,000, and that next year he would try to bring about some changes in the system under which the irrigation work was being constructed, and we agreed to help him in that effort. Then he agreed, as I have said, to recommend an appropriation of $250,000 this year without any restriction or any proviso being attached to it. We left satisfied that $250,000 straight, without any strings attached, would be recommended for this year.

Then, when it came up in the Senate committee and the paragraph was put on which has provoked—and I think justly—such strong objection from Senators from the arid States of the West, I was in the hospital. I went to the hospital feeling sure that $250,000, without qualification, would be recommended by the Indian Commissioner this year and that the committee would take his advice, and I never heard about the proviso which was attached until after the bill had come out of committee into the Senate.

My colleague [Mr. WALSH] was unalterably opposed to that proviso, and expressed himself so to me in unqualified terms, and I have no doubt that if he were here he would be opposed to the pending amendment. My colleague was never invited to appear before the committee, nor to have anything to say about the appropriation, nor about this proviso attached to the appropriation, so that the first that we knew about it, as I have said, was when it came out of the committee.

I claim that it would be unjust and unfair to this project and to the Montana delegation in Congress to incorporate any such handicapping amendment in this bill as is now proposed. I believe such an amendment is likely to halt the work. I believe that a straight appropriation ought to be made this year, and then, as the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], I think, has suggested, if we want to enact a general law to change the basis of conducting irrigation enterprises in the future, and it can be done without any injustice to anybody, let us go at it in that way.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, as usual, to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. I simply wish to have the Senator's mind refreshed in regard to the view of former Senator Curtis in regard to some of these Montana appropriations.

Mr. MYERS. I will be very glad to hear the Senator. I never heard Senator Curtis say a word against this item:

Mr. PAGE. Here is the record:

Senator MYERS. I would like to ask the gentlemen of the committee a question or two about this—

Referring to this identical project—

Do any of you doubt that the land is worth this money and that it will be reimbursed to the Government? Do you doubt that the security is sufficient?

Senator CURTIS. I do not know anything about this particular tract. I have tried to find your last year's hearing, but did not have time. There is one of these reservations in your State where the property owned by the Indians is not sufficient to reimburse the Government.

Mr. MYERS. Did he say which one it was?

Mr. PAGE. He said:

I do not know which one it is, but there is one of them, because——

Senator MYERS. This certainly is not it.

Senator CURTIS. Because they showed that if you got all the money that the land was appraised at it would not then pay back the amount of money that we had advanced for irrigation.

Mr. MYERS. There is nothing to show that that refers to the Flathead Reservation; and, as a matter of fact, Senator Curtis joined me that year in voting for an appropriation for irrigation work on that reservation of $400,000 without any qualification.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment——

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thought when the Senator from Vermont rose that he was about to read a statement on page 240 of the hearings before the Senate committee on this irrigation project, in which this colloquy occurred between the two Senators from Montana.

Mr. MYERS. The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] was there as a spectator.

Mr. ROBINSON. He made a very illuminating statement, which I am about to read, with the Senator's permission.

Mr. MYERS. I am always glad to hear anything my colleague says.

Mr. ROBINSON. I read from the hearings:

Senator MYERS. There is a good deal of dissatisfaction expressed with the method of financing the plan on which it has been worked.

Mr. MYERS. That was this year.

Mr. ROBINSON (continuing):

What have you to say about that to the committee?

Senator WALSH. I am not very familiar with the plan that has heretofore been pursued. Of course there is only one plan that can in fairness, as it seems to me, be operated. It is not right at all to make the entire amount that is expended for this work reimbursable out of Indian funds; and, obviously, if all that portion is devoted to the improvement of land of the settlers, it ought to be made reimbursable out of the fund contributed by them, and some equitable basis of distribution ought to be arrived at as between the Indians' land and the settlers' land. So much as is properly assessable to the allotted lands of the Indians may very properly be made reimbursable out of the Indians' funds. As a matter of course it should be. Then so much of it as is properly assessable to the improvement of the lands of the settlers should be charged up against the lands of the settlers and be reimbursable in exactly the same way as the general reclamation fund is reimbursable.

Mr. MYERS. I will say, in answer to that, Mr. President, that I do not deny that it might have been just as well and perhaps better in the beginning to have started this work by taking one-half the money from the reclamation fund or from the General Treasury, if Congress would consent to any such procedure. As the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has stated, Congress never has consented, and he doubts if it ever will consent, to such a plan, but if you could get Congress into a frame of mind to consent to it, I would not dissent from it; but the project has been carried on thus far on the present plan.

My colleague, just before he left here, expressed to me the strongest possible objection to the proviso that was put in by the committee. He said that he knew nothing about it, and that if he had he would have appeared before the committee and protested against it. He said he thought it ought to go out on a point of order or be defeated on a vote, and he hoped it would be. He was in accord with me about it.

As I have said, the Montana delegation was assured that the Indian Bureau would recommend a straight appropriation for this year of $250,000, and we had no idea that any strings would be attached to it. Next year, if any way could be devised to switch it around to meet the objections which have been suggested by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and Congress could be induced to accept such a plan, we were willing to see if it could be done and to aid in bringing it about; but we think that there ought to be a straight appropriation this year.

This is the one project in the Northwest that everybody is satisfied with and wants pushed. As I have said, there has been no objection and no complaint from the Flathead Indians. Delegations of the Flathead Indians have come down here—not this year, but last year—and urged me to procure larger appropriations to push the prosecution of this work to a speedy conclusion. I have never had a line nor a scratch of a pen nor a letter from a Flathead Indian objecting to this project.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think the work could be done very much more economically if we would make much larger appropriations?

Mr. MYERS. Yes. Mr. Newell says that at least $600,000 a year ought to be appropriated.

Mr. JONES. All work of that character can be prosecuted more economically if ample appropriations are made as needed.

Mr. MYERS. As I have said, the Indians and the whites are both clamoring to have this work completed. If you halt this work, you do the greatest possible injustice to the Indian, because the Indian has got to get his money back out of the sale of land to the white man; and if the white man does not get water on his land, he can not make his payments. Therefore if you halt this work, the Indian will be the chief sufferer. It is to the interest of both the Indians and the whites to prosecute this work as speedily as possible, and I think this appropriation of $250,000, in all fairness, ought to be made without any handicapping amendment, such as would be likely to halt the work and break it off for this year. Then, if you want, after consulting the Indian Bureau and the Indian Committee, to see if a different scheme can be devised in order that the objection suggested by the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] can be overcome, why let us undertake that labor and take plenty of time to it, but this is no time to halt the work on the Flathead Reservation to engage in experiments.

I say that the land is amply good to secure the money, and all the testimony goes to show that. Testimony has been read here by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], which he offered himself, showing that the land with water on it is worth from $100 to $500 per acre. Do you have any doubt that land of that character, or land worth from $50 to $100 per acre, is going to fail to bring enough to pay back to the Indians from $4 to $7 an acre and about $30 or $40 an acre, the cost of putting water on the land? I say that there can be no manner of doubt about it. They talk about the white man making a failure. Now, I will tell you why that can not affect the Indian in any way whatever. Let the white man go on the land; let him prove shiftless and thriftless and not able to make his payments; say that he makes two or three payments on the land and two or three payments for the water, but he is always trifling and not much of a farmer; his crops fail; he does not meet his payments. Do you not know that the Government retains as a forfeit the money that he paid, and, if he fails or lapses in any of his payments, the Government keeps what he has paid as a forfeit, and that same land is sold to other purchasers at the full price; so that the Government gets its money for the land, and then it goes into the Indian funds? So there can be no chance of the Government losing, and there can be no chance of the Indian funds losing.

This matter was carefully studied out by men who are careful, conscientious, and scrupulous, and who, I believe, wanted to do what was right. The work has been going along nicely, although with inadequate appropriations, it is true. Everybody wants it hurried along; there has been no complaint in regard to this particular project; and, I say, the sooner it is completed the better for the Indians and for all concerned. I think that the amendment ought to be rejected and that a straight appropriation of $250,000 ought to be made. If there is nobody else who particularly desires to discuss the matter——

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I will move that the amendment be laid on the table. I will withhold that motion, if the Senator from Oregon wishes to be heard.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word. The general subject was brought up in the committee, and what attracted my attention to it was that there was said to be a provision in the law of 1907 which restricted the time in which the Indian was allowed to make his improvements upon the land. If he did not make them within a certain time, which was only a few years, I think, he lost his water rights. In the meantime he was furnished no tools and given no means with which to make improvements; so the inevitable result would be that he would lose his water rights. Then this series of questions of the department representatives came about. They recommended the appropriation of $100,000, for the reason, as I understand, that they feared that that was what would happen; and they did not care to go on and spend more money than this, and they offered another proviso by which they would not lose their rights through lack of usage under the State law.

The white man, under the new law which we passed this year, has been granted an extension of time, which makes it a period of 20 years in which to make his payments on the land, and he is allowed from 5 to 7 years to make his improvements. It seemed to me and to the committee that if the Indian's lands were being mortgaged—his dry lands, his hill lands, as well as the bottom lands—and tied up for the cost of this expenditure of money in order to reclaim the land of the whites as well as his own land, he ought to be allowed a reasonable time in which to make his improvements and given an opportunity to do so.

I can quite understand how the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Indian Bureau would feel when the entire Montana delegation descended upon them, but when we questioned them they did say that it was unfair to put the whole cost upon the Indians.

Mr. MYERS. Now I make my motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

The question is, Shall the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] be laid on the table? Upon that question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I announce my pair as on a former vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair, I transfer it to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair as on the former vote—on which, I believe, I voted wrongly, not understanding the question—I vote "nay."

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair, and withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. GRONNA], and to say that he is paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the negative). I inquire whether the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CLAPP. Having a general pair with him, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I withdraw my vote, unless a transfer can be arranged in order to make a quorum.

Mr. HOLLIS. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], and to state that he is paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. CLAPP. In order to make a quorum, notwithstanding my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS. I am informed that my vote is necessary to make a quorum. For that reason I vote "yea."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 31, as follows:

So the Senate refused to lay Mr. ROBINSON's amendment on the table.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will simply say, on this main question, that I think this amendment is useless, unfair, unjust, and unreasonable; that it will merely halt work on a great reclamation project in Montana for an indefinite length of time; and do that project incalculable damage, as it can not be halted and resumed again except at a great cost of money.

I hope that the amendment will be defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. MYERS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote unless it becomes necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. CRAWFORD (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and the transfer of that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). I desire again to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH] and his pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] and the transfer as on the last vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. I announce my pair and transfer as before and vote "yea."

Mr. OWEN. I am paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. JAMES. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN. I understand that if my vote is necessary to make a quorum I have a right to vote. I should like to be informed as to that. I vote "yea."

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a quorum without the Senator's vote.

Mr. OWEN. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]; that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]; that the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]; that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]; and that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON].

So Mr. ROBINSON's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. On page 78, following the last amendment adopted this morning, and in relation to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I submit an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To what part of the bill does the Senator from Oklahoma offer the amendment?

Mr. GORE. Following the amendment adopted early in the day in relation to attorneys' fees. The amendment bore relation to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which was adopted. I think it ought to follow the amendment in relation to attorneys' fees. It is not a part of that amendment; it is an independent amendment. I offer it to come in at the appropriate place. It is not necessary to indicate the exact line.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the amendment heretofore adopted on page 78:

The Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations are hereby authorized to file a suit in the Court of Claims by their tribal attorneys against the United States within 60 days after the passage of this act for the purpose of ascertaining the amount due said nations from the United States for the land embraced in the "leased district" lying between the ninety-eighth and one hundredth meridians of west longitude and the Canadian and Red Rivers, and the Court of Claims is hereby authorized to ascertain the amount due the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations upon the principles of justice and regardless of treaty technicalities and to render judgment therefor in favor of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations: Provided, That judgment shall not be rendered in favor of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for an amount to exceeed $1.25 per acre for the land embraced in said "leased district" exclusive of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe country and exclusive of lands allotted to other Indians, and there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum sufficient to pay the award of the Court of Claims in said suit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to have some information from the Senator from Oklahoma——

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator from Mississippi will pardon me a moment——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I regret that my duty leads me to make a point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, on page 67, insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the administrator of the estate of John W. West, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States standing to the credit of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, the sum of $5,000 and interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from May 25, 1883, in full payment of the award made on said date by the commission appointed pursuant to the authority contained in the seventh article of the treaty with the Cherokees of August 6, 1846, and which award was approved by the Secretary of the Interior August 29, 1883, reaffirmed by decision dated September 16, 1884, and again reaffirmed by decision dated April 26, 1886.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, my duty requires me to make a point of order against this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask with all due deference to the ruling of the Chair as to the ground on which the point of order is made and sustained?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been made three times, I believe, during the progress of this bill under the fourth clause of Rule XVI, namely, that it is a private claim offered to a general appropriation bill.

Mr. STERLING. The same point was made when the bill was before the Senate at the last session and as against the point of order the statement was made that it was for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of a treaty and the presiding officer, being the same presiding officer now occupying the chair, overruled the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no question of doubt about that; but the presiding officer rules on the point made by the Senator who raises it, and not on the rules of the Senate. The point then was that it was general legislation, and no attention was called at that time to the fact that it was a private claim. At this time, however, the fourth clause of Rule XVI is invoked, which presents an entirely different question. It is not the business of the presiding officer to hunt reasons for sustaining points of order; it is the business of the Senator making a point of order to state the ground upon which he rests it. The bill is in the Senate and open to further amendment. The question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed, and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, there are some facts which pertain to the Indian question which I think, in a general way, are of interest, and to which I wish to call attention briefly.

The Indians are a different type of people from the whites. They have always held their property in common; they are communists, in a way; they are socialists; and for that reason it is hard to teach them to be thrifty. I do not suppose that we shall ever accomplish that.

The Indians of the far west coast have a sort of religion—or a custom, at least—which has been practiced for generations, to this effect: If an Indian succeeded in becoming what was known as a rich man, if he became wealthy, if he acquired a large number of horses or blankets or furs, he held what was called a potlatch. He called together all the Indians from all over the country to meet at his camp on a certain day. At that time he gave away everything he had; he stripped himself to his breechcloth, and he went out into the world flat broke and to begin all over again.

As a physician for 40 years I have tried to find the potlatch germ, the potlatch bug. I wanted to secure it in order to inoculate it into the systems of some of the wealthier class of the white people of this country. I think it would be good if we could instill into them some idea of such a distribution. The Indian will never perhaps become a thrifty man; but, under the system by which we, as his guardians, conduct his affairs, it is absolutely impossible for him to get ahead in this world.

For instance, under the items of support and civilization of the Indians which have been carried for years and years and for which hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars have been expended there has been but a modicum, a mere trifle of that money expended either for the support or the civilization of the Indian. It has been used to pay salaries for a lot of gentlemen appointed to administer his affairs. We appropriate money to employ farmers to teach the Indian how to farm, but we give him no lands upon which to farm and no implements with which to farm. That is the general rule, though there are exceptional cases. If you go upon the majority of the reservations of this country you will find a dozen or 20 Indians using the same plow, borrowing one from another. Farming can not be successfully conducted in that way. A white man can not do it, and an Indian can not be justly censured if he does not succeed.

To begin with, the Indian is not a farmer; he never was a farmer. I have been among Indians who still wore their hair to their waists and traveled about in breechcloth and leggins. I never knew an Indian who could farm. He would send his wife out to dig camas and wapato for vegetables, but he lived upon game and fish. The Indian is naturally a hunter and a fisherman. It is hard to make a farmer of him, and with the methods we use we never shall make a farmer of him. The Indian is a good horseman, and I think he would make a good stockman. If we would spend our money in supplying some of the Indians who are fitted for it, such as the Blackfeet and the Indians of the Plains, with horses, he would be very likely to make a success of that or of stock raising. But, above all things, the Indian was a warrior; he liked to hunt and to fight. Here was a great opportunity that this Government has missed for all these years and is missing to-day.

The Indian upon the reservations, through the change in their method of living, by which they have gone out of the tepee and into the house with bad ventilation, is dying of tuberculosis at a rate that is four times as great as the percentage of deaths from that disease among the whites. It is a pitiable condition, for he was a healthy, outdoor human being before he was confined to a house, and if he lived in the old tepee tent to-day he would again be healthy, for the reason that it was the best-devised human habitation that the mind of man ever invented so far as ventilation is concerned. It was built on the plan of the old cupola furnace, by means of which every bit of iron in the world was smelted before the blast furnace was invented, all the circulation of air being out through the top. When he lived in that way he was healthy, also he was a man who loved to hunt and fight; and if this Government had taken advantage of his natural disposition and requisitioned him as a cavalryman, had given him a horse, and made him live as the Arab does, out of doors and in his tepee, and allowed him to carry his family with him, or those who wished to do so—and the majority of them do—we would have had a magnificent body of cavalrymen, the finest in the world, who would be true to the country and who would have loved to fight for it and who would have been particularly adapted to the work. We would have employed him in a service in which he would be useful. I repeat we shall never make a farmer of him.

The Indian is a good pilot. He is a good swift-water man, the best swift-water pilot in the world; whether on the Yukon or Stikine River, the swiftest water that we have in America, he is the best man that you can put in the pilot house. They read water as they read all other signs of nature, with an intuition that they have inherited from generations down; they read it as no white man can. They have a better eye than a white man has. It has been developed in their centuries of experience, but we do not give him a chance or opportunity to use any of these gifts which God has given him to a degree far in excess of any which we possess, but we pinch him down and place him under restrictions and try to make a farmer of him. It is a mistake.

I am not going to say anything more than that. I merely wished to impress upon the Senate if I could that I think the whole scheme of our management of the affairs of the Indian is a mistake. It is wrong; it is expensive to the Government; it is fatal to the Indians, and we in the Senate through ignorance, not knowing the conditions which prevail among them, are passing much bad legislation, which, in my opinion, later along will come back to vex us in the way of just claims against the Government. A horde of hungry attorneys, who are now trying to get legislation through for some personal benefit, will after a while be here again as the attorneys against the Government to recover claims because of the legislation which they did all they could to secure the passage of at the hands of this body.

I wish to call your attention to some of the facts as they exist—it is pitiful; it is awful; it is almost too bad even to tell—there is, for instance, one tribe which has $900,000 in cash on deposit with the Government, for which I presume—I do not know—they are entitled to some sort of interest; they have $90,000, or something like that amount, which is paid in their behalf to their agent, to employees of the Indian Bureau for rental of their lands; they have an annuity of some $20 a year due to each individual, and yet last year with all of this income some of those Indians are said to have starved to death; they and their children, poor little consumptive children, dying with that horrible disease, compelled to live on a mixture of flour and potatoes ground up and boiled down in water. One Indian of that tribe wrote an appealing letter to a stockman, which was sent to me, asking his permission and telling him, "You know I am an honest man, for I have never defrauded you, and I ask your permission to allow me to go upon the plains and eat such dead cattle of yours as have died of disease and starvation." These Indians possess property worth millions upon millions of dollars.

There is something wrong, gentlemen, in our administration of these affairs. The fault lies in the scheme, in the plan. It is not due to individual crime or sin, but there is a collective blame upon this Government; and until we purge ourselves of this condition and look into it and give the Indian the employment to which he is adapted and shut off the wretched, dishonest, petty grafting that he is subjected to, I do not see how it can lie in our mouths to go before the world and say that we have a civilization or a lesson to teach to the people of the Philippine Islands or a whisper of information to transmit to the unfortunate people of Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass? The bill was passed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I give notice that to-morrow, at the close of the morning business, I will address the Senate on the bill for the creation of a Federal trade commission.

I now move that the Senate take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator will not make that motion this afternoon. Very few Senators are present at this time. He can make the motion to-morrow. I do not want to have to suggest the absence of a quorum, but I shall feel disposed to do it if the Senator now insists on the motion. I have no objection to the bill being made the unfinished business to-morrow.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well, Mr. President. As there is no probability of a quorum being secured, I will renew the motion to-morrow morning.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 25, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 24, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and most merciful God, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, we thank Thee for all the blessings of the past and turn to Thee with renewed confidence for the outpouring of Thy spirit which shall enlighten, uphold, and guide us through all the changing scenes of this newborn day. May we hear, receive, and obey in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the business in order to-day under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves to dispense with business in order to-day under the rules.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, a week from to-day is the 1st of July, the beginning of the next fiscal year. There are still 53 pages of the sundry civil appropriation bill to be considered. I think if we were to consider the bill to-day and sit at some length, and one or two days more, we could dispose of it before the end of this week. I hope that because of the importance of passing the bill in the House the motion will prevail.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will attend to the motion of the gentleman from Oregon in a minute, as soon as we get through with this motion.

Mr. MANN. Would it be practicable to substitute next Tuesday for to-day, and then have two Calendar Wednesdays next week?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I could not agree to that.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. LLOYD. Would it not be better to make it next Thursday instead of next Tuesday?

Mr. MANN. That would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. One objection to two days next week is that probably we will want to attempt to commence consideration of the general deficiency bill if we can get this bill finished early enough this week.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is not the House now on Calendar Wednesday and in the midst of the consideration of a measure?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is; but disposition of that bill to-day is not nearly so important as finishing the consideration of the sundry civil bill at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Supplementing the view of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], I wish to say that the bill under consideration on Calendar Wednesday is largely a codification of existing law, that there is very little new law embodied in the bill as it is presented to the House, and could very well be postponed to some time next week for consideration. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] will see his way clear to postpone the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, realizing the importance of action on the sundry civil bill, I have no disposition to oppose the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], provided some fair arrangement can be made. If it could be agreed that the House will set apart next Thursday, as well as next Wednesday, for business that is in order on Calendar Wednesday, so that these little bills may be disposed of, I would have no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that proceedings under Calendar Wednesday for to-day be dispensed with and that next Thursday be treated as a Calendar Wednesday day in addition to Wednesday.

Mr. ADAMSON. You mean Thursday week?

Mr. MANN. Thursday of next week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that Thursday of next week be substituted for to-day.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MURDOCK. I reserve the right to object. If Calendar Wednesday is going to be dispensed with, I would like to have it done by a vote.

Mr. MANN. This will not dispose of Calendar Wednesday. This preserves Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MURDOCK. It disposes of it for the day, and the rule says that Calendar Wednesday shall be disposed of after 10 minutes of debate by a motion.

Mr. MANN. But the trouble about making the motion is that you can not substitute another day for to-day. There would be two Calendar Wednesdays next week, and the bill under consideration to-day would come up next Wednesday. Following that would be the reclamation bill, I would take it. We would not lose any time.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is in the power of the House to dispose of Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; but it is not in the power of the House this morning to substitute another Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that next Wednesday is the 1st of July, and there is still undisposed of differences between the two Houses on both the District and the legislative appropriation bills.

Mr. MANN. It is still within the power of the House to dispense with proceedings on Calendar Wednesday if there was sufficient reason for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would take two-thirds vote to dispense with business on both those days.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MURDOCK. I still reserve my right.

Mr. MONDELL. In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas, some of us who are here are very much interested in the bill which will be taken up to-day relative to campaign expenditures. I want to see it become a law, and the sooner the better. We are also very much interested in the reclamation bill which follows, for the extension of the period of payments, and we can not take any position that could possibly delay or jeopardize the enactment of either of those bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, just a moment.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] insists on a vote on a motion which does not substitute another day for the day lost, he would put us in a position where we must vote against dispensing with Calendar Wednesday, because by that vote we do not get the other day. If the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] were granted, we would secure two consecutive days; that would be better than one day now and one day next week.

Mr. MURDOCK. With the Speaker's permission, will the gentleman yield? If the House votes to dispense with Calendar Wednesday, is there any reason why we can not go on with the consideration, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] proposed?

Mr. MONDELL. If anyone can assure us we will get that other day.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman knows that nearly everybody here in the House is to-day in favor of dispensing with Calendar Wednesday, but I would like to see it dispensed with regularly under the rules; that is, by a vote.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not in favor of dispensing with it unless we get an extra day next week—Thursday, as well as Wednesday.

Mr. MURDOCK. If we are going to dispose of it, let it be done regularly and by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman want to dispense with Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And the only object is that he wants to establish a record?

Mr. MURDOCK. We had a great deal of trouble in providing for a Calendar Wednesday rule, and finally established the day, and provided that we could dispense with it by a motion after limited debate. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] certainly does not mean to say that I was trying to do anything in the line of a "grand-stand play"?

Mr. GARNER. I do not mean to say that, but the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] seems to have such a respect for Calendar Wednesday that he is not even willing at this stage of the procedure, in order to relieve the country, to dispense with Calendar Wednesday, in order to make his record consistent.

Mr. MURDOCK. No; it is not a matter of consistency. It is a very simple process for the gentleman from New York to move to dispense with Calendar Wednesday, and then, after the vote is taken and Calendar Wednesday is disposed of to-day by a majority vote——

Mr. FITZGERALD. It takes a two-thirds vote——

Mr. MURDOCK (continuing). Yes; by a two-thirds vote, then we can go on with the consideration of the bill. But I would like to see the motion made and voted on and not have it done by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. If Calendar Wednesday is disposed of to-day by unanimous consent, and next Thursday is recognized as Calendar Wednesday, we will then have next Wednesday and Thursday for all the business that otherwise would be taken up on to-day and on next Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In the same order and condition?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. So that when we shall have gotten through with the so-called Rucker bill, the reclamation bill could be taken up as if the Rucker bill had been disposed of to-day?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, another parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Would it not be competent to get out of the trouble if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would modify his request and say that if the House should dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-day, in that event Wednesday and Thursday of next week be substituted?

Mr. MANN. I will not substitute it that way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to substitute to-morrow week for to-day.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, speaking in the time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] in his reservation, I do not think it wise to make any other special order for next week or to set aside a special day for next week. Next Monday we have set apart as a suspension day. That will aid more Members and facilitate the passage of more bills than a calendar day can possibly do, because it brings the bills to the immediate consideration of the House. Next week we have a Calendar Wednesday. That makes two days set apart, and I do not suppose we can get all the appropriation bills through, but those that are in conference and can be considered ought to be passed, every one of them that is possible, next week before the 1st day of July, because——

Mr. MANN. Next Thursday is after the 1st day of July.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Wednesday is the 1st day of July.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They may not be finished then. I do not think it wise to set apart another Calendar Wednesday to interfere with the business of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-day.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] demands a division. Those in favor of dispensing with Calendar Wednesday to-day will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Sixty-one gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative. The "ayes" will take their seats, and those opposed will rise. [After counting.] Thirty-eight gentleman have arisen in the negative. On this vote the ayes are 61 and the noes are 38.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask for tellers, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] demands tellers.

Mr. WINGO rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Arkansas rise?

Mr. WINGO. To make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of dispensing with Calendar

Wednesday to-day will answer "yea" when their names are called; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 175, nays 72, answered "present" 6, not voting 180, as follows:

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Hon. WILLIAM G. SHARP, of Ohio, was appointed as one of the conferees on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill. He can not be here, and the Chair appoints Mr. CLINE in his place.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMMIGRATION SERVICE.

For all expenses of the enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract-labor laws; cost of the reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; for salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws; enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 20, 1907, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," and acts amendatory thereof; necessary supplies, including exchange of typewriting machines, alterations, and repairs, and for all other expenses authorized by said act; also for preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, the expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, and for the refunding of head tax upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers; all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, $2,650,000.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 150, at the end of line 21, strike out "$2,650,000" and insert "$2,649,500: Provided, however, That the commissioner of immigration to discharge at New Orleans, La., the duties now required of other commissioners of immigration at the respective ports of the United States, shall be appointed in the same manner and for the same term as said other commissioners, and shall have the same official status as they; and that section 34 of the immigration act approved February 20, 1907, is hereby repealed in so far as it conflicts with the foregoing provision: Provided further, however, That the salary of the said commissioner of immigration at New Orleans, La., shall be reduced the sum of $2,900 per annum."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I will frankly state to the House that the object of this amendment is to put the commissioner of immigration at the port of New Orleans on the same basis as the other commissioners of immigration at other ports of this country. At other ports where immigration stations are located, except at the port of New Orleans, the commissioner is appointed by the President for a term of four years and confirmed by the Senate. In the one case in my home city it is held that this officer comes under the Civil Service Commission and must be named from the classified list. That happens for this reason: That the other commissioners of immigration are provided for in the sundry civil bill of 1894, while the commissioner of immigration at New Orleans was provided for by the act of 1907 for the first time. Under section 34 of that act it provides:

SEC. 34. That the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, may appoint a commissioner of immigration to discharge at New Orleans, La., the duties now required of other commissioners of immigration at their respective ports.

The Civil Service Commission has ruled that the verbiage of section 34, which I have just read, means that this man must be named from the civil-service list. Now, it is not time at this juncture to discuss the question why there should be any difference in the manner of naming this officer at one port from another. The same duties that are discharged at Baltimore or Seattle are discharged at New Orleans, and there is no reason why the one at New Orleans should not be appointed by the President, as the others are. But that does not go to the point of order. I was simply mentioning this as preliminary to the issue.

I take it, Mr. Chairman, that this provision comes under the Holman rule. I do not hold myself out to be a parliamentarian, and I am not here armed with any elaborate precedents on the subject, but I understand the Holman rule to mean that an amendment is in order in the consideration of an appropriation bill if that amendment is germane and if it looks to the retrenchment of public expenditures. In this case I respectfully submit that it does both. The salaries of commissioners of immigration at the respective ports are not set forth in detail by law. A lump sum is appropriated for payment of their salaries, and it is this lump appropriation which I am amending that makes provision in this bill for payment of the salaries of all these officials. Congress, instead of saying that the commissioner of immigration at New York or Philadelphia shall receive a fixed compensation, has seen fit to leave that to the discretion of the Department of Labor. The Department of Labor has in the instant case—the case at New Orleans—according to a letter that I hold in my hand of date June 17, advised me that the salary of the commissioner of immigration at the port of New Orleans is fixed by it at $3,000 per annum. I shall submit the letter to the chairman, if he so desires, though I do not care to incorporate it in the RECORD unless it is insisted on. However, it is subject to the inspection of any Member who desires to look at it.

I propose first, then, in this amendment to reduce the lump sum from $2,650,000, which is appropriated for the immigration service, to $2,649,500; and I further propose to reduce the salary of the man himself, who is to be paid out of this reduced appropriation, from $3,000 to $2,900. There is undoubtedly a retrenchment in the expenditure of the public money. It has frequently been held that it makes no difference how little the proposed amendment undertakes to reduce expenses as long as there is a substantial reduction, a reduction shown on the face of the amendment, then it is in order. In this case, I repeat, I propose a reduction of the lump sum allowed to this service, and out of abundant caution I propose a reduction of the salary to be paid to this particular official.

Now, what remains, then, to bring this amendment within the purview of the Holman rule, except germaneness? It occurs to me that it is essentially germane. It is an amendment offered to the provision for the Immigration Service. It relates to one of the commissioners of that service. It provides for a reduction of his salary. It is true that it makes a change in existing law, but it makes a change in existing law along the line of germaneness. It has been held in a decision here, for instance, that where an appropriation of $500,000 was sought to be made for completion of the park between the Capitol and the Union Station an amendment was in order which provided for the repeal of that law. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in charge of the bill made the point of order that the amendment proposed by his colleague [Mr. SISSON] repealing that law was not in order, and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] held that it came under the Holman rule, because if the law were repealed it would be a reduction in that respect.

Now, what is the difference in this case? If you can repeal a law, if an amendment repealing a law is germane, because it reduces the amount to be expended from the Public Treasury, why is not an amendment germane that proposes to change any such law, not by repealing it but by modifying it in some other way, as long as there is a consequent and necessary reduction if the amendment is agreed to? I trust that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will view the matter in that light, but I prefer that the Chair should see the matter in that light, and I respectfully submit it to his consideration. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] care to discuss the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the Chair will rule on it, I do not care to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has reexamined the rule commonly known as the Holman rule, and he will read the following portion of it:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Now, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] reduces the amount carried in the bill. It also reduces the compensation of a person paid out of the Treasury of the United States. So that there is left to the Chair only the question whether or not it is germane.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the Chair a question. In reference to the amendment reducing the compensation of the person, of course the amendment goes away beyond that, and, as I understand it, repeals a provision of law.

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. MANN. May we have that amendment reported again? I think this is a very important ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 150, at the end of line 21, strike out "$2,650,000" and insert "$2,649,500: Provided, however, That the commissioner of immigration to discharge at New Orleans, La., the duties now required of other commissioners of immigration at the respective ports of the United States shall be appointed in the same manner and for the same term as said other commissioners, and shall have the same official status as they; and that section 34 of the immigration act approved February 20, 1907, is hereby repealed in so far as it conflicts with the foregoing provision: Provided further, however, That the salary of the said commissioner of immigration at New Orleans, La., shall be reduced the sum of $2,900 per annum."

The CHAIRMAN. The decisions upon this particular rule, as is well known to gentlemen who have examined them with care, are somewhat conflicting. It is easily possible to find precedents to sustain different contentions. It seems to the Chair, however, that the legislation which is proposed in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] is germane to the section of this bill that is under consideration. It meets the requirements of the rule in other respects in that it provides a reduction of the amount carried in the bill and a reduction of the compensation of a person paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Entertaining that view, the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not make any controversy with the decision of the Chair. I am very sorry that there are two aspects to the case. I would like to have a ruling of the committee upon the question of whether a reduction of the amount carried by the bill in an amendment is sufficient authority to attach to it a provision repealing a portion of the statute. As the Chair has indicated that in his opinion that is sufficient, I have respectfully taken an appeal in order that the committee might have an opportunity to vote on the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 5.

So the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some question as to the language in the concluding portion of the paragraph. The intention was to reduce the salary to the sum of $2,900 per annum. Some gentlemen seem to think that I desire to reduce the salary of $3,000 by the sum of $2,900 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that that is the way the amendment reads.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment so as to make it read that it shall reduce the salary to the sum of $2,900 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by inserting the word "to" after the word "reduce" in the next to the last line. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I now move to amend the amendment by striking out the latter part of it which proposes a reduction in the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment striking out the last proviso, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by striking out the proviso which reads as follows:
"Provided further, however, That the salary of such commissioner of immigration at New Orleans, La., shall be reduced to the sum of $2,900 per annum."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. The gentleman can not offer an amendment that is in order under the rule and then by a further amendment so change it that it would not be in order if offered originally in that form.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that it is the universal rule that after an amendment is once declared in order it is then in order to offer any amendment to that amendment. Within the last two months there have been two or three rulings of the Chair to exactly that effect—that, after an amendment was once declared to be in order by the Chair, any amendment, whatever it might be, to that amendment was then in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ELDER. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not the precedents on the point before him; but, approaching it purely as a matter of reason, would not the effect of holding in order the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois be to really destroy, logically, the effect of the Holman rule?

Mr. ELDER. Unquestionably.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. ELDER. But I am answering my own view, and the gentleman from Illinois may present his view to the Chair after I am through. In my opinion it does to that extent destroy the rule, because the amendment is held to be in order because it is a reduction of salary. Within the short time that I have been in the House, on other appropriation bills, it has been held that, once an amendment is declared in order by the Chair, it is in order then to offer any amendment to that amendment. To be frank with the Chair, my opinion is that to that extent it does destroy the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. ELDER. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the gentleman correctly, the Chair thinks perhaps the gentleman has a different precedent in mind. It is the rule of the House that if an amendment be proposed which is not in order, but the point of order be not made to it and it remains in to be voted on, that then any amendment which is germane, whether it be in order or not, may be offered to that proposition. That is the rule of the House; but this is a somewhat different proposition.

Mr. MANN. Before the Chair decides, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. Assuming, if we may so assume, it would not be in order without the proviso, can you destroy the effect of the Holman rule by that decision? The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt whatever about the rule—that where an amendment is offered to strike out something which would make the whole matter out of order, the motion to strike out is not in order—and if this amendment had been held in order by the Chair solely because it proposes a reduction in salary, it would not be in order after the amendment was pending to entertain a motion to strike out that part, because that would be the part that gave it the privilege of being presented to the House; but the Chair has just ruled that the other part of the amendment which proposes a reduction in the amount of the appropriation carried by the bill made this amendment in order. From that ruling I respectfully appealed to the committee. The committee sustained the decision of the Chair. That was the issue which was presented by the appeal which I took. I voted to sustain the decision of the Chair. I think I should have voted to sustain the decision of the Chair if the Chair had decided the other way. I asked for an appeal because I thought it was desirable to have the House or the Committee of the Whole pass upon this controverted question in order that we might know in the future what the ruling was to be. But the Chair does not hold that this amendment was in order on that ground, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union does not sustain the decision of the Chair on that ground. It is not necessary now to say it was necessary to reduce the amount of salary in order to make the amendment in order. That being the case, it is in order to strike out the provision reducing the amount of the salary because the amendment was put in order on the ground it reduces the amount carried in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is correct. The Chair rested his decision upon two points—that it reduced the amount carried in the bill and reduced the amount of salary——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And also that it is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course it would not have been in order in any event if it had not been germane, and, being germane, it would not have been in order except by the other two conditions, or at least one of the other two conditions. Now, as a practical proposition, we want to get the common sense of this matter, and I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if the reduction in the amount carried in the bill and the amount of reduction of the amount in salary are not so intimately interwoven that they substantially constitute one single thing?

Mr. MANN. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. For instance, the reduction of the amount carried in the bill is exactly that amount which the salary is proposed to be reduced. If the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois should prevail, then there would not be in this a sufficient appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Well, this is a lump-sum appropriation of two or three million dollars, as far as that is concerned. Now, I shall not have any controversy with the Chair; I would not, anyhow, if the Chair should hold that the reduction of the amount carried by the bill is not sufficient of itself to make the amendment in order unless the amendment itself shows on its face that it does reduce the amount of expenditure. But if the Chair holds, as the Chair intimated a while ago, that an amendment which reduced the amount carried in the bill made the amendment in order repealing a portion of the statute, why, then, the rest is not anything; but if the Chair modifies his opinion and holds that, the amount carried in the bill being reduced the amendment itself further on must show that there is an actual reduction in the expenditures, it is quite a different holding and quite a different proposition. I respect the very clear-headed Member of Congress who now presides over the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and I would like to have this question, if possible, settled, to the extent that Members may know in the future on a ruling whether, if you reduce $5,000 to $4,999, that there is a legislative provision making or repealing law, or whether to do that you have got to show in the balance of the amendment where you save the $1.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the Chairman will permit, the ruling of the Chair was not stated as the gentleman from Illinois has been arguing. The Chair stated the amendment was in order because it reduced the amount carried in the bill—reduced the salary of the official—and that the language of the amendment doing such a thing was germane to the bill. An appeal was taken from that ruling and the decision of the Chair was sustained, and the decision that was sustained was as announced by the Chair. The committee did not sustain that ruling that this amendment was in order for only the reason given by the Chair. It sustained the decision the Chair had made. Now, if this practice should be followed, and amendments could be offered in order under the rule and then an amendment offered which would modify that in such a way that an amendment would be before the House that would not be in order as an original amendment, that practice would be to break down the rule. The most notable instance we had was the time when the gentleman from Massachusetts asked to call up a privileged resolution providing, if I recall, for the appointment of a committee for the investigation of the procedure of other parliamentary bodies, and when the resolution was called up he moved to strike out part of it, which left it so that it provided for a committee, if I recall correctly, to revise the rules of the House. It was held that that motion destroyed the privileged character of the resolution and such resolutions would not be privileged, and the point of order was sustained against it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Holman rule is a peculiar and unusual rule, and, in a way, out of harmony with the general legislative practice and with other rules relating to amendments. It was adopted for the purpose of making it easy to reduce expenditures. It was adopted in the interest of economy. It was adopted for the purpose of making it possible for anyone to offer an amendment which would actually reduce expenditures and have them in order. Now, having a rule of that character, it should be construed in view of carrying out the object and purposes of the rule. As it is, the rule is subject to abuses. Under the ruling just made by the Chair, which is in harmony with former rulings, any reduction in an amount carried in the bill, if the amendment is germane, makes it in order. That makes it possible to offer amendments within the rule that are really not in harmony with its spirit. Therefore the Chair, following the spirit of the rule, should be very careful not to hold that an amendment that barely comes within the rule may be immediately modified so that it is in a form that would be contrary both to the spirit and to the letter of the rule if it were offered as an original proposition. It seems to me nothing could be clearer than that the Holman rule would be subject to endless abuses if the Chair should hold that an amendment properly coming within the rule may be immediately amended so that the proposition presented, if so presented originally, could not be brought within the rule.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois should prevail, would that render the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana as amended out of order?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it has gone beyond that.

The CHAIRMAN. No; that has already been held in order. A year or two ago—I think during the Sixty-second Congress—the present occupant of the chair presided while the Post Office appropriation bill was being considered in Committee of the Whole, and an amendment was proposed by Mr. Jackson, of Kansas, reducing the amount appropriated for the transportation of mails, as I now remember it, and then adding a proviso that a certain character of mail matter should not be transported through the mails. The Chair, after the matter had been argued and after an examination of the precedents, overruled a point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and held that that amendment was in order. It was defeated, however, in the Committee of the Whole, and when the bill came into the House the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] offered a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to the Post Office Committee to report the same amendment that had been offered in the Committee of the Whole, and the matter then came before the Speaker. It was then more elaborately argued, if anything, than it was before the Committee of the Whole, and the Speaker sustained the point of order, taking a different view than that taken by the chairman, on the ground that while there was technically a reduction in the amount carried by the bill, yet it was so involved—and the Chair is not undertaking now to use the Speaker's words, but simply the reasoning of the Speaker as he remembers it—that the language was so involved that it did not appear from the face of it that it was in fact a real reduction.

So under that ruling by Mr. Speaker CLARK it would seem that there should be a more rigid interpretation of the Holman rule than had been made by the present Chairman or had been made by one or two Speakers previous to the action of the Chair, notably Mr. Speaker Carlisle.

Now, the Chair is hardly prepared to say what he would have held had there been nothing offered except a proposition to reduce the amount, and all this legislation had followed without the final proviso. The Chair is inclined to believe that the safest course on this bill would be to hold that so far as this particular amendment is concerned, anyway, and of course the reasoning would apply to any amendment of similar character, that both those elements had better be present, and the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Louisiana?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the other has already been disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to say a word, Mr. Chairman, about the amendment. The purpose of the amendment is to remove the position of commissioner of immigration at New Orleans from the classified service. That is the whole purpose of it. Under the civil-service law the President, by Executive order, can take this position out of the classified service, if he so desires. So far as I am concerned, I am not in favor of changing or modifying the civil-service law in this manner. If it be desirable to take this place out of the classified service, I think it should be done in accordance with law.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, this matter is in no sense an assault on the civil-service system. It does not even make a dent in it. It merely undertakes to settle an uncertainty in the rulings of the Civil Service Commission. There have been two decisions rendered by the Civil Service Commission on this point, one to the effect that this position at New Orleans was not within the classified service and another to the effect that it is. Now, with those two differing decisions before us, it is the duty of Congress to settle this matter and to put the commissioners at this port on a parity with commissioners at other ports. There is no reason why there should not be uniformity of administration in this matter, and I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, Mississippi is in the district over which this commissioner of immigration presides. That district is made up of Arkansas, Tennessee, Louisiana, and Mississippi. The intention of the law doubtless was that no exception should be made toward the commissioner of immigration at New Orleans over commissioners at other places. This is the only place where they have construed the law that the commissioner was under the civil service. I recall last year, when the Democrats came into control of the country, various good people applied for the good offices throughout the country, and I had a constituent, like other fellows who have constituents, who wanted the place, and this party was going to be appointed when the Civil Service Commission ruled that it was under the civil service. They then reversed themselves and held that it was not under the civil service, and about the time the appointment was to be made they reversed themselves again and held it was under the civil service. So, evidently the intention of the law was not to put this place, as in every other place of like character throughout the United States, under the civil service, and for this reason I do not think any discrimination should be made against this particular place by holding it under the civil service and making these other places appointive. I hope the amendment will prevail. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 24.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is announced in the newspapers that the Department of State is quite likely to submit to arbitration the Japanese question, which has troubled Congress and the Senators and Representatives from the Pacific coast for some time. This, I assume, would tend to relieve somewhat the necessity for appropriations for inspection with the view of suppressing Japanese immigration. I notice in the item we now have before us, which carries an appropriation of $2,650,000, that provision is made for a variety of inspectors to be engaged in various lines of employment, with a view of ascertaining whether aliens are in this country without warrant of law, and providing for the cost of their arrest, their detention, and their deportation. Now, I would like to know from the chairman of the committee whether the Department of Labor has asked for any more money this year than it received last year for this purpose?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has.

Mr. MOORE. Has it asked for approximately $100,000 more than it had last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. They asked for about $360,000 more than we carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MOORE. How much?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Three hundred and sixty thousand dollars more.

Mr. MOORE. For this particular service of enforcing the immigration laws?

Mr. FITZGERALD. For regulating immigration, and all of the service.

Mr. MOORE. More than $360,000 this year over the expenses of that service last year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The appropriation that was carried in the sundry civil bill was $2,550,000, and the estimates submitted for next year were $2,910,000, and an addition of $95,000 was provided in the deficiency bill for this year.

Mr. MOORE. Was any excess the result of a deficiency in the expenditures of the bureau?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Ninety-five thousand dollars was carried in the deficiency bill, and was claimed to be necessary, and was voted by the House.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman explain why that deficiency existed? What was the cause of it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not explain that. I did not believe it was necessary; but the House voted the item in. You can not expect me to explain something I do not know.

Mr. MOORE. Was it due to the construction of buildings that were necessary to protect the property of the Government, upon which Secretaries and departments have reported favorably to the committee, or was it for the employment of men to go out and do work for the Government?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was for a good many reasons.

Mr. MOORE. I think the House is entitled to know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not just recall now the reasons given for the deficiency item which the Committee on Appropriations did not recommend, but for which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] voted, and he must have had information upon which he voted.

Mr. MOORE. I think the gentleman from New York is entirely mistaken about my vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not.

Mr. MOORE. I think I voted with the gentleman on that occasion, if he stood by his committee. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he is extremely particular about certain items that go into the bill and has funds of information about all phases of most questions, but when we come to an appropriation carrying a $95,000 deficiency, he does not have very much information to give to the House concerning it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I had at the time the deficiency bill was before the House. I think it is unreasonable to expect me to furnish the gentleman, during the consideration of this bill, with all the information that he demands of me to furnish during the consideration of other appropriation bills.

Mr. MOORE. May I ask the gentleman if the Secretary of the Department of Labor appeared before his committee to advocate this increase of appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the Secretary of Labor did not appear before us.

Mr. MOORE. Then the rule which applies to the War Department, which requires that the Secretary of War shall appear to justify a request for the expenditure of money, does not hold with regard to the Secretary of Labor, and the Secretary of Labor need not appear before the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The conditions, of course, are entirely different. In the first place, there was no estimate for the item about which the gentleman is harping with reference to the Secretary of War, and, in the second place, there was an estimate of the amount required for this particular service. I do not know why the Secretary of Labor did not appear before the committee, but those immediately in charge of the service did appear before the committee.

Mr. MOORE. I have a rather distinct recollection that the gentleman from New York himself said upon the floor when the deficiency bill was up that the Secretary of Labor had authorized certain expenditures without warrant of law. Now, those expenditures apparently have been made up or are to be made up out of this appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD I do not think the gentleman's recollection is accurate, either with regard to the statement I made in reference to this particular appropriation or with regard to the statement I made in reference to any appropriation carried in this bill.

Mr. MOORE. Am I entirely in error when I say that a representative of the Department of Labor did appear before the Committee on Appropriations and did suggest that a part of this appropriation of $2,650,000 should be made to include the deficiency referred to?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Nothing in here has anything to do with any deficiency. This bill is for the service of the fiscal year commencing on the 1st of July, 1914. It is for a future service, not for the service of the past or for the service in the current year. It is only for past and current services that deficiencies are incurred or asked for.

Mr. MOORE. Was it Mr. O'Donnell that appeared before the Committee on Appropriations in behalf of the deficiency? I do not want to harry the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is not harrying me. The gentleman is talking to no point. If the gentleman wishes to speak, he can move to strike out the last word. I can not be put on exhibition simply because the gentleman from Pennsylvania wishes to discuss something in the bill or out of it.

Mr. MOORE. I would not seek to embarrass the gentleman in his relations with the Secretary of Labor, nor would I wish to embarrass any other gentleman on this floor in that respect.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department has asked for $2,910,000 for the next year, and the committee has recommended $2,650,000.

Mr. MOORE. A part of this item is to be used for the purpose of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation. Now, a part of this appropriation is to be spent for that purpose. Can the gentleman tell me how much is to be expended for the deportation of Chinese? I am a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and I would like to know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can explain that. A few years ago the appropriation for the deportation of Chinese and for the enforcement of the Chinese exclusion act was carried in a separate item. It amounted to $500,000. Then, as all of that money was not expended, if I recall correctly; for a year or two it aggregated about $450,000; and then, at the suggestion of the immigration officials, to the effect that it was not good and economical and efficient administration to maintain a force of inspectors exclusively for Chinese exclusion work, but that the inspectors of the department should be utilized wherever possible in that work, and that better results could thereby be obtained, the appropriation of half a million dollars for the enforcement of the Chinese exclusion act was consolidated with this particular appropriation. It has never been reduced, and there is still available for expenditure that half a million dollars, together with the compensation of all the other inspectors and employees paid for out of this appropriation. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MOORE. Well, apart from the expenses for the enforcement of the immigration laws—and I ask gentlemen not to call for a vote, because, if they do, this business will not go forward expeditiously——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman ask me a question?

Mr. MOORE. I propose to ask the gentleman certain questions for information.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman wishes information, I shall be glad to give it to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not the only one who wishes information as to why you have cut the immigration appropriation $260,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There has been no cut in the appropriation. There has been an increase in the appropriation. Gentlemen do not distinguish between appropriations and estimates.

Mr. GARDNER. How can the gentleman expect us to distinguish when the gentleman talks about the amount carried in the sundry civil bill last year, and points out that it is $260,000 more this year and does not point to the fact that you had to appropriate $95,000 more?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have said it three times, and if the gentleman had paid attention he would know that I stated that $95,000 was voted in the deficiency bill that had not been recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, and I charge the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] with having voted for it.

Mr. GARDNER. But when you give the figures——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have given the complete figures. I said that there was carried $2,550,000 in the sundry civil bill and $95,000 in the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. MOORE. I assure the gentleman from New York that I try to stand by him in not voting against expenditures for things that are not authorized by law, but I challenge the gentleman to find the RECORD showing where I voted as the gentleman charges.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman yesterday voted for a building that did not exist. That is as near to coming to a challenge as I can cite offhand.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman gets testy. The gentleman from Pennsylvania rose to ask about a lump-sum appropriation of $2,650,000, upon which the gentleman's committee has not got more than four or five pages of testimony in his thousands of pages of hearings, and then the gentleman from New York finds fault when the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes forward and asks for $17,500 for a building to save lives and property. I challenge the gentleman from New York to show me where the Secretary of Labor appeared before his committee, or where the Commissioner of Immigration appeared before his committee, to justify this enormous expenditure of $2,650,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The officials that the gentleman refers to did not appear before our committee, and perhaps that was the reason why the committee was not so hasty in granting the increase requested.

Mr. MOORE. Now, getting down to brass tacks, may I ask the gentleman how much money out of this $2,650,000 is to be spent for inspectors who are to visit the various localities of this country on the comparatively new business of discovering alien procurers and alien prostitutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is a matter of administration. I can not answer that.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman just made the charge that the Commissioner of Labor and the Commissioner General of Immigration did not appear before the Committee on Appropriations. I want to state to him that the officers who have been appearing for a long time did appear——

Mr. MOORE. Who were they?

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman has come to the relief of the chairman of the committee. Who were they?

Mr. RAKER. I saw the Commissioner General yesterday, and day before yesterday also, and he said he thought he made a mistake in that he did not personally appear with the Secretary of Labor, and that they would possibly have obtained the full amount on this appropriation bill.

Mr. MOORE. What official is the gentleman talking about?

Mr. RAKER. I am talking about the Commissioner General of Immigration, whom the gentleman says did not see fit to appear.

Mr. MOORE. Then, since the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] does not answer, perhaps the gentleman from California can tell me how many inspectors are to be engaged at this new work.

Mr. RAKER. That is a matter for the chairman of the committee, and I am speaking on another matter.

Mr. MOORE. Upward of $300,000 additional is to be appropriated for additional inspectors. I should like to know how many are to be employed and what the nature of the work is. The gentleman ought to know that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I stated that I did not know.

Mr. MOORE. I think it is a fair proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I can not say any more than that. I am not going to volunteer information when I have not got it, even to satisfy the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE. Then the gentleman votes the money of the people in this way because somebody comes from the Department of Labor and asks for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; not exactly.

Mr. MOORE. And the gentleman makes no justification of it; yet when we ask for a building for an arsenal to save money for the Government, the gentleman wants full details.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is so easy to determine that some things ought not to be granted that it is unnecessary to take up much time with them, particularly the ones advocated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment to strike out the last word.

The gentleman says the estimates of the Bureau of Immigration were for $360,000 more than the amount of the last sundry civil bill. That is true; but if he had said that they were $265,000 more than what was actually appropriated last year, he would have made the statement in better form.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I made it in practically that form, but I was not given a chance to do the arithmetic. I said that, in addition to what was carried in the sundry civil bill, $95,000 was carried in the deficiency bill. I did not get a chance to make the subtraction, because nobody can do much talking with the gentleman from Pennsylvania occupying the floor.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, the reason for that deficiency appropriation, which was opposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who for some reason always opposes appropriations referring to the Immigration Service—the reasons for that appropriation which, he says, he has forgotten were that at New Orleans they had a new immigration station, and at Galveston, Tex., another. Moreover, the Philadelphia station was opened in 1912, in August. All these stations entailed new expenses, and the same is partially true as to Chicago. Then for general Immigration Service they put on a force in the last fiscal year on the Canadian border, with additional employees drawing $14,720, and so on. That was the reason for that $95,000 extra which we gave the Bureau of Immigration in the deficiency bill.

Here is a great, growing service. Congress is appropriating for new stations everywhere, making new requirements all the time, and the gentleman proposes to give that service a beggarly $5,000 more than it had last year.

Mr. O'Donnell, the special immigration inspector, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations. He is very familiar with the details of the service, and he told the committee why the bureau needs $2,910,000. Mr. O'Donnell asked for an increase so that they can raise the pay of watchmen, laborers, and charwomen. Why? Because the watchmen are receiving only $720 to $840 a year, while the customs guards, doing pretty much the same work in another service, are getting from $840 to $1,080 a year. The charwomen get $660 a year, and it is proposed to give them $720.

Mr. O'Donnell says that they have been forced to suspend the payment of hospital expenses to the States for the maintenance of aliens, and so forth. You do not propose to give them enough money to do it. Then the time has come for another census of penal and reformatory and penal institutions as required by the immigration act of 1907. Furthermore, Mr.

O'Donnell declares that the bureau is hampered by lack of funds requisite for the investigations incident to the deportation of persons under the white-slave act. Likewise, the ever-increasing force of inspectors will be cramped in the matter of salaries. I shall not move to raise this amount by $260,000 so as to meet the conservative estimate of the Bureau of Immigration, for the reason that I realize the strength that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] deservedly has in this committee. I know there are very few Members present. I know there are a number of gentlemen who have not heard the discussion who will come out of the catacombs yonder and pass down the aisle and view the remains and defeat this extra appropriation. Therefore I propose to let the thing go by to the other end of the Capitol and see what may be done there.

Mr. MOORE. I have just found what I desired to find a while ago; and if the gentleman will permit me, I will say now that on page 1541 of the hearings it appears that the number of these inspectors in 1913 was 95, and that it is proposed to increase the number to 199, an increase of 104 in 1915.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. RAKER:

"Page 150, line 21, strike out the figures '$2,650,000' and insert in lieu thereof '$2,907,100.'"

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the committee having already stricken out the figures "2,650,000" and inserted "2,649,000," it is not now in order to strike out that sum and insert some other sum. If the Chair wishes a decision, I have it at hand.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, on the question of a point of order——

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from California wants five minutes to discuss the matter, I am willing to reserve the point of order, but I am not willing to let the discussion run on for a considerable period and fritter away time uselessly on this point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York furnish the Chair with the ruling? Does the gentleman from California desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. RAKER. I would like to have the point of order reserved.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to make some progress with this bill. I will reserve it. I know the point of order is good. If the gentleman wants five minutes to discuss the matter, I have no objection, but I do not want a long discussion.

Mr. RAKER. If such a decision was rendered, it seems that it was weak and inefficient.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; the rule is well settled in Jefferson's Manual and by a ruling and determination of the House—that after an amendment striking out and inserting words you can not move to have those inserted words stricken out and something else put in.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee having already stricken out a sum and inserted another, it is not now in order to strike out what was inserted by the committee and insert something else.

The CHAIRMAN. That the amendment came too late.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I will take the five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. If the point of order is going to be pressed, I should like to be heard on it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not only going to press it but I will furnish the Chair with the ruling and save time in discussing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important amendment. There are many important matters under the Department of Labor, and the Bureau of Immigration in particular, that ought to be done. While the number of men in the service are not enough in the department at the present time, that is a minor question. One has but to go to the department to-day to see the want of men, not only as electricians but actual assistants, in that department. A man that is acting as engineer, chief electrician, has to act as a night watch. I know that because I have seen it with my own eyes. He has to act as elevator boy, and when men are going and coming from work they have to wait. As I say, these are minor matters. The important matter is furnishing a sufficient amount of money to the Immigration Service to enforce the immigration laws; to thoroughly run down and determine those who are illegally here, those who have entered the country in violation of law; and, second, those who are illegally here under the Chinese-exclusion law, who have come over the border from Canada; and we know they are coming right along. The record shows that they pay from $500 to $1,500 to get across. Some of the smugglers are arrested and convicted. It is the same way with those who come from Old Mexico, and the same is true in regard to the white-slave trade. There ought not to be any parsimony in appropriations to supply a sufficient amount of money to enforce this law properly and legitimately in all of its phases and at all times.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. I think my colleague will bear me out when I say that I have said publicly in the House and before the committee that I favor a proper inspection system and that I favor stopping this unlawful immigration at the source.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; stop it at the ports, make the best inspection you can, and after you have made the inspection there are those that will come in surreptitiously, those that violate the law and are smuggled in; and we certainly ought not to allow the law to be disregarded and let those people stay here. They ought to be found out and run down, arrested, and deported.

Mr. MOORE. That is all right. Does the gentleman know any reason why those of us who are Members of Congress and members of the Immigration Committee should not ask for information regarding a lump-sum appropriation involving the administration of so large a fund?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has full information on the matter, or he can obtain it from the record of the Committee on Appropriations, and he can obtain it from the Bureau of Immigration.

The misfortune about this item is that if the committee had had the full information before it undoubtedly it would have given the $210,000 additional for this work, and the Commissioner General of Immigration realizes now that instead of holding so close to his office and writing some decision and looking over important matters on his files he should have come personally before the committee on this important subject, as he told me yesterday, and says it never will occur again. But this does not justify the refusal of the appropriation. These people under him are good young fellows, but they have not had the experience and do not understand the situation as does the Commissioner General as to all these important subjects involving immigration, and so forth, and the enforcement of the laws on all of these subjects.

Now, we are not taking anything out of the Treasury; we are taking no money from anybody that has been paid in. This Government, in its small charge to those who come into the country, is paying many times the entire expense of the whole Immigration Service, and sufficient money should be appropriated to carry the service with a full force so all the work can be done and the laws fully and properly enforced. And we ought to have enough inspectors, enough money, and enough men at all places to see that every word and letter of our statute, which is certainly insufficient enough as it is, is enforced and to keep those out who are trying to come to this country and take the place of those who are entitled to be here, to take the bread out of the mouths of the men and women and children who are trying to live in this country. They are willing to pay from $500 to $1,500 each to get in on the western coast, and I want to say to you that this Congress ought not to hold back one minute, but it ought to give enough money to see that those people are kept out and that they are sent back home where they belong. It is hard enough to make a living here as it is. Money is hard enough to get without bringing people from other countries who will not even assimilate with our own people, who will not become a part and parcel of the community in which they live, and we ought not to permit them to continue to come in and take the place of our American men and women, to go into the various laundries and hotels and homes and drive the young girls from their employment and from opportunities to make legitimate and honest wages, so that they may hold up their heads and be a part and parcel of this great country. The provisions of the exclusion laws and the immigration laws prohibiting the entering or remaining here are most wholesome, and the only way to make them effective is to have money enough to employ a sufficient number of men all along the line.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, just one moment before the Chair rules on the point of order. I desire to make a brief statement in reference to some of the remarks made about this item. This estimate did include, I think it was, $28,000 for the purpose of increasing compensation of certain employees of the Immigration Service. If the money were appropriated, the department could not increase the compensation, because it is prohibited from doing so under the law, so that the mere fact that money is asked to increase compensation is not always a sufficient reason for giving it. In 1913 the appropriation for the Immigration Service was $2,525,000. An unexpended balance of $30,000 was on hand at the end of that fiscal year, and for that year, 1912, the appropriation was $2,525,000. The estimates were $2,600,000. For 1913 the appropriation was $2,225,000, and the estimate was $2,575,000, and yet although the appropriation was less than the amount requested, there was an unexpended balance of $30,000.

Mr. J. I. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just one moment.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me on the question of the unexpended balance?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. That was on the 1st day of May, was it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am talking about the fiscal year 1913.

Mr. GARDNER. Oh. I was reading the evidence of Mr. O'Donnell. "The unexpended balance ascertained this morning was approximately $30,000." That statement appears in the hearing of May 1, 1914; but there were then two months left of the present fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The unexpended balance for 1913.

Mr. GARDNER. Beginning June 30, 1912?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. For the current year the estimate of $2,626,000, and the committee recommended $2,550,000. I believed when the sundry civil bill was prepared and enacted in the last Congress it was ample to properly perform the work of this service. This House provided in the deficiency bill $95,000 additional, which was $19,000 in excess of the original estimate of the department. For the next year the committee recommended $2,650,000, which is $5,000 more than is given for the current year. Among the estimates presented for the current year there was included the employees in some of these new stations, including the one at Charleston, S. C. I have been to Charleston, S. C. I have seen the station. It is built and finished. It is boarded up, and never had an immigrant in it and it probably never will. No immigrants come there, and yet we have requests for a certain force of men to man and operate that station. I am interested in the Immigration Service——

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on that Charleston station?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Was not that at the time when the State of South Carolina was herself importing immigrants into Charleston that that force was asked for there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. A station was established, and I think there was one boatload came over.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not mistaken as to the facts that I have recited. That station was erected, equipped, completed, and it never had an immigrant in it, and it is now actually boarded up, so that nobody can get into it, and it stands out, isolated, a monument——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GARDNER. How many years ago was that that it was authorized?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not a great many years ago. It was a provision put on in the Senate in my time and in the gentleman's time.

Mr. GARDNER. It was before the passage of the act of February 20, 1907, which stopped the State of South Carolina from importing immigrants.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been completed within two or three years. This committee recommended what I consider to be ample. I do not think that anyone could justify making the appropriation as requested for this service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Does not the gentleman think if more appropriations were made, especially for the inspection service, you would get more and better physicians and surgeons and that there would be better inspections at Ellis Island, and fewer insane go into the asylums of the gentleman's own State?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; because we provide for that inspection, to prevent the insane coming in, in the Public Health Service. The physicians in the Public Health Service make those examinations, and we have provided amply, and in a manner that has been highly satisfactory to the Public Health Service, for the increase of their force last year.

Mr. BURNETT. During the present session of Congress?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; we made an increase in this bill——

Mr. BURNETT. In this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In this bill.

Mr. BURNETT. I wanted to know, because there is great complaint, and the gentleman knows there have been great complaints along that line.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not only that, but the Committee on Appropriations, in the attempt to secure men who would be competent to detect these mental defectives, put a provision in last year requiring them to select a certain number of physicians who have been specially trained for that purpose, and we had a provision in this year, but it was taken out on the point of order. There is no more important question to the community in which I reside than an efficient inspection in order to eliminate and keep out, as they should be kept out of this country, mental defectives who come from other countries.

Mr. BURNETT. That is not embraced in this appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not out of this appropriation. That service is separate; and I will go as far as anybody would suggest within limits.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman knows that the certificate of the examining medical officer is supposed to be conclusive, and yet the law has been construed in such way that an appeal is taken to the Secretary of Labor in all except extreme cases. Consequently, reports of the medical examiners of the Public Health Service, as a matter of fact, are passed on not merely by a board of inspectors but also often by the Department of Labor itself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My experience has been that the certificate of the physician is conclusive.

Mr. GARDNER. Excuse me. If the gentleman will allow me to explain exactly what happens, section 10 of the immigration act provides that the certificate of the medical examining officer shall be binding on the board of special inquiry, but in one of the rules of the Bureau of Immigration is inserted the word "solely," construing that word into that particular section of the act. Only in the cases of insanity and certain other mental defectives is the surgeon's certificate binding. As a matter of fact, in the month of October, of which month we have some figures, there were nearly 4,000 persons certified as defective, mentally or physically, by the medical examiner. On appeal a good many more than half of those people were, as a matter of fact, admitted to this country, so that the gentleman will observe that the surgeon's certificate is not binding.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think most Members have knowledge that persons are certified as physically defective, and it turns out that they are suffering from some ailment that an ordinary slight course of treatment cures, and friends or relatives have them detained at the hospital at their expense, and when they are cured they are admitted. I doubt if the law ever intended that persons of that class should be excluded, but if they had a dangerous or an incurable disease, they should be excluded.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] raises a question that is uppermost in the minds of some of us in regard to that kind of immigration. A better inspection at ports of entry, perhaps, would remedy a good deal of this evil of which we complain. I call the attention of the gentleman to the testimony of Mr. O'Donnell, page 1537 of the hearings, in which he explains the need for an appropriation of $172,000 to enforce the white-slave act, and suggests that it would not begin to cover the work that ought to be done in this country. Thus arises the proposition whether we should not put some limitation on the number of inspectors who do this home-guard work elsewhere than at the ports. If these aliens are admitted—aliens who are criminals or unlawfully here—they ought to be stopped at the port. The best inspection work is to be done there. Mr. O'Donnell says in his testimony:

There are probably thousands of them in this country—

Indicating the kind of people they are—but you could easily spend half a million dollars a year in going after them, and we do not contemplate doing that. It would be too stupendous an undertaking to do it all at once.

Now, we ought to consider to what extent we are going to permit inspectors to go from city to city, and from house of ill fame to house of ill fame, perhaps, to find out whether such people are in this country or not. A great many of them could be apprehended at the ports of entry. It would be better to stop them there rather than go round searching for them after they have been admitted. The question is largely one of administration at the borders and at the ports, and as to this we are entitled to the judgment of the department.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be modified by inserting $2,907,100 instead of, as it was before, $2,010,000.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not amend it with the point of order pending. If the gentleman would ask to withdraw the amendment, he can do so.

Mr. RAKER. I will not withdraw it, but I thought this might have some bearing on the point of order; and that being the case, I wanted to be sure and relieve the situation, and that then the point of order might be decided.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman could hardly amend an amendment while the point of order is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAKER. I see there is no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment——

Mr. RAKER. That is my request.

The CHAIRMAN. By inserting the figures $2,907,100 instead of $2,910,000. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection to its being so modified, and to that amendment as amended the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] makes the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand the amendment. Does the amendment simply reduce the amount?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 150, line 21, strike out the figures "$2,650,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,907,100."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not now understand the change in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. RAKER. The change in the amendment eliminates from that lump sum the $2,900 which was provided for in the Dupré amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the point of order made by the gentleman from New York is that this amount having been modified by the committee another motion to still further modify and change the amount is not in order?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the point of order as the Chair understands it. To state it more explicitly, perhaps, the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is that the committee having voted to strike out and insert, it is now in order to strike out that which was inserted.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, that is a rather technical statement of the point of order, it seems to me; but, assuming that to be the gentleman's point of order, my notion is that it is not well taken. Now, if there is any logic in that point of order at all, it is on the proposition that there should be an end to amendments affecting a certain feature of the bill. The theory is that the House having taken up and discussed and amended a certain item or feature of the bill, that ought to be the end of it; otherwise amendment after amendment could be offered indefinitely, modifying the language, changing the amounts in an unimportant or trifling way, and much time would thereby be consumed. There can be no other theory as the basis for the gentleman's point of order except that it would prevent delay and filibuster to sustain it. However, the rules of the House should never be so interpreted as to prevent the House from carrying out its will. If amendments are offered which simply consume time and delay business without greatly affecting legislation, they may very properly and should be held out of order. But this is what an adherence to the point of order offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] would lead us to. Let us take the case before the committee.

The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] offered an amendment which, in fact, was not, so far as its main purpose went, intended to affect the amount of the appropriation. He used the Holman rule as a handle to secure a change of existing law. That was the first amendment offered. He was the first gentleman recognized. That was the first opportunity there was to offer an amendment to this item. He made his motion. It is true a motion could then have been made to substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana an amendment simply increasing the amount of the appropriation. But an amendment offered at that time, of that character, under the circumstances could not in the nature of things have fair consideration before the House, because if the substitute were adopted under the rule now invoked by the gentleman from New York, then the change of law contemplated by the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana could not have been secured. The House might wish to both increase the appropriation and make the change of law. But if the point of order made by the gentleman from New York is good, there is no possible way in which that could be done.

Now, I grant you, Mr. Chairman, that if any gentleman had offered an amendment simply changing the amount carried in the bill, and that had been debated and voted on, it would have settled that proposition, because that would be the judgment of the House as to the amount carried in the bill. It would be a waste of time, it would simply be giving an opportunity to delay and filibuster to allow other amendments directly on that point. But if a gentleman can be recognized to reduce an appropriation by 1 cent or to increase an appropriation by 1 cent, more or less, coupled with a legislative proposition, and by so doing he can prevent the House, if favorable to the legislative provision, from increasing or decreasing the amount of the appropriation—if that is to be the rule here—it would be very easy, indeed, by offering such amendments to prevent the House from carrying out its will relative to the amount of appropriations.

I have hurriedly glanced at the cases cited by the gentleman from New York. I do not think any of them bear directly on this point. They all of them relate to amendments covering practically the ground of prior amendments, either adopted or rejected. They were perhaps very properly held out of order, because their consideration would simply be thrashing old straw, going over the same old ground again, with possibly some very slight and probably immaterial change.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. MANN. What line would the gentleman draw between the amendments which the Chair would recognize in order and those which the Chair would not recognize in order, to amend an amendment which had already been agreed to—the arbitrary will of the Chair?

Mr. MONDELL. The rule of reason.

Mr. MANN. I am asking the gentleman now, being a very reasonable man, if he can draw that rule of reason? I am sure nobody else in the House can do so.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois would have no trouble at all in doing it. I am sure that the present occupant of the chair would have no difficulty in immediately recognizing the difference.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman from Wyoming said that the amendment which reduces an amount 1 cent, if that was agreed to, ought not to prevent further amendments. Now, what would the gentleman say if the amount was reduced $10, or $100,000, or $1,000,000?

Mr. MONDELL. Possibly the gentleman did not clearly understand me. I believe an amendment that either reduced or increased the amount by a single penny, if that was all there was to the amendment or was the important feature of the amendment, would express the will of the House with regard to that proposition. Thereafter there should be no further opportunity to consume time in a discussion of that matter which the House had settled. But when such an amendment, slightly increasing, slightly reducing, carries a substantive legislative proposition, the matter of reduction or increase is incidental; almost immaterial. The gentleman from Louisiana, as a matter of fact, had no real desire, I assume, to reduce this appropriation, but it became essential to reduce it in order to secure the legislation he favored. He secured his legislation. That should not preclude the House from expressing its will as to the amount of appropriation. I again beg to call the Chair's attention to the fact that if that can be done it would be very easy indeed for the Committee on Appropriations to offer amendments carrying legislative provisions acceptable to the House, reducing an appropriation by a few pennies, in order to clinch the matter so as to prevent the House from expressing its will on the main issue of how much we shall appropriate for a given object. Why, the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana related to one official. It did not take into consideration this service in all its wide reach at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wyoming permit the Chair to ask a question? There could have been an amendment offered to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ]?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand.

The CHAIRMAN. There could have been an amendment proposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] changing the amount?

Mr. MONDELL. Not by increasing it, because the Chair ruled that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana was not in order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana came within the rule because it reduced this appropriation. The Chair very properly held that a modification which did not bring the original amendment as thus amended within the Holman rule was out of order, so that there would have been no possible way in which a proposition to increase this appropriation could have been presented to the House as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana, and considered on its merits.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, so that that statement will not go uncontroverted in the RECORD——

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be glad to——

Mr. MANN. I wish to say that the Chair did not rule as the gentleman stated—that the amendment changing the amendment would not be in order. What the Chair ruled was that the amendment must show on its face that there would be a reduction in the expenditure.

Mr. MONDELL. What I meant to say was that the Chair did hold that an amendment modifying the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana in such a way that, had it been offered as an original proposition, it would not have come within the Holman rule, was not in order.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from California, if offered as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, would have been held by the Chair to be out of order, because then there would have been no reduction in the amount carried in the bill; and it was by reason of the fact that there was a reduction in the amount carried in the bill involved in the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana that the Chair held that motion to be in order under the Holman rule.

It is true that the motion also reduced the salary of a public official; but I take it that the Chair held that the two things, the two features of the amendment, taken together, brought it within the rule. One was that the amount carried in the bill was reduced. The other was that the salary of an official was reduced. I think if the amount carried in the bill had not been reduced, the Chair would undoubtedly have held that it did not come within the Holman rule.

Now, the gentleman from California proposes to increase the appropriation. Had he offered that as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana, it would have been held out of order, and properly. The proposition therefore is simply this, that while any motion which simply brings the House into a condition of thrashing over old straw, which simply consumes time in discussing a matter that has been discussed and settled, is out of order——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for just another question?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. It can not, and does not, follow that because a word or a figure, among others, in a bill has been changed by action of the House, having a certain object in view, that word or figure can not be changed when the House proceeds to seriously consider the matter from a different angle for a different purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the gentleman is contending that the amendment that the House agreed to can now be further amended. Does that proposition apply to all of the amendment, or simply to one part of it? Does the gentleman think that the Chair should agree that an amendment to one word is in order, but an amendment to another word is not in order?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think that an amendment which attempted to undo what the House did on the real point at issue would be in order, but the real point at issue was not the reduction of the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Certainly, that was the point at issue.

Mr. MONDELL. The point at issue was the status of a public official. That was the point at issue, and that was the point on which the House voted. That was the point discussed by the gentleman from Louisiana. He did not discuss the question of the reduction of the appropriation for a moment. The House did not consider it for a moment. There was not a Member who voted for the amendment because it reduced the appropriation and there was not a Member who voted against it because it reduced the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. So far as the rules of the House were concerned, however, it was only the question of the amount that served as the basis for the ruling.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; the amount; and the Chair also took into consideration the fact that it reduced the compensation of an official, because the Chair held that when a motion was made that restored that compensation, then the amendment was so modified that it did not come within the rule. The Chair decided that it was in order on the two propositions combined.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the Chair was right about it. But the present condition is that the House can not express its judgment with regard to appropriations. If we have that sort of a rule, we ought to amend it. If there is such a ruling, it ought to be overturned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Have we any rules of the House under which I can offer an amendment on page 34, changing the amount that has been agreed to?

Mr. MONDELL. I think not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's proposition is that we ought at all times to have a method by which the House can express its will.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, at the time. I grant you that the House, or Members of the House composing the Committee of the Whole at various times, might have modified their views or changed their views or altered their views in regard to a matter, and it would not be proper to go back; otherwise we never would get through with the business.

So far as the point of order made by the gentleman from New York has any force at all, or is in any way founded on logic, it is in the fact that it seeks to prevent the taking up of the time of the House uselessly. But when it is invoked to a point where it prevents the House from expressing its will at the time when a matter is under consideration, it certainly is not logical and it certainly is not consistent with good legislative procedure. The House ought to have an opportunity to express its views on the amounts carried in the bill, and the House has not had an opportunity to do that, and in fact has not attempted to do it until now.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the Chair indulge me? I do not want to exhaust his patience.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. If the Chair rules in favor of the point of order made by the gentleman from New York, will the Chair comment on this possible situation? At the time the gentleman from Louisiana was offering his amendment, which incidentally reduced the amount carried in the bill, suppose that I had sought to amend that amendment by a clause relating to some entirely different subject germane to the whole Immigration Service subdivision, and yet not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana—let us suppose that my amendment would have raised the total amount carried—obviously my amendment could not have been entertained as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana, because it would not be germane. How could this committee ever express its opinion on the amendment which I was seeking to offer unless the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana was voted down?

The CHAIRMAN. The question presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is a very difficult one. The matter is not at all free from difficulty. If it were an entirely original proposition, the Chair is not sure how he should feel constrained to rule. But there are certain precedents here that seem to be in line.

On page 388 of volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents it is stated that—

> Words embodying a distinct substantive proposition being agreed to as an amendment, it is not in order to amend by striking out a part of those words with other words.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the Chairman allow me to suggest that we do not do that in this case?

The CHAIRMAN. The matter under consideration, apparently, at the time that ruling was made, was the Philippine tariff bill. An amendment was agreed to, and shortly thereafter—on January 16, 1906, the proceeding took place—Mr. Parker, of New Jersey, proposed an amendment to strike out the latter portion of an amendment already agreed to, and a succeeding portion of the text, and to insert other words.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Olmsted, whom we all remember as a very clear reasoner and a most excellent presiding officer, ruled as follows:

The Chair finds that the amendment proposed is to strike out the words, beginning in line 5, page 3, "wholly the growth and product of the United States shall be admitted to the Philippine Islands from the United States free of duty." These words form a part of the amendment to which the committee has already agreed. While the question is not entirely free from doubt, the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment proposing to strike out what the committee has once voted in is not in order.

In February, 1913, at the conclusion of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, Mr. MARTIN, of South Dakota, moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out a certain amendment agreed to in committee and insert a sinking-fund provision. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] made the point of order that the House, having just adopted the amendment described, the motion to strike out and insert another was not in order, and the present Speaker of the House sustained that point of order.

Those two decisions are cited here as being in line.

If there had been an amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] simply to reduce the amount, say, $50, and that had carried, the Chair does not presume that it would be insisted by any gentleman that you could now strike that out and insert another set of figures. But simply because the Holman rule was invoked, and in addition to a reduction there was legislation, it is insisted that therefore there ought to be a differentiation in this instance, and that any other ruling will work a hardship. Now, that may be. It may work a hardship. The Chair can see where it may render procedure somewhat cumbersome. Nevertheless that is not the fault of the Chair; but, if there be a fault, it is a fault of the rule itself.

The Chair thinks that to hold otherwise than in accordance with the precedents that have been cited, and the plain reasoning which was suggested by the gentleman from Wyoming that some time there must be an end to these propositions, would be to throw the whole matter over to the arbitrary will of the Chair, and the judgment of the Chair would be appealed to as to what amendment might be offered, rather than a consistent line of rulings. The Chair thinks the safe ruling is to sustain the point of order, notwithstanding the fact that it may work some embarrassment. Accordingly the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARDNER:
Page 150, line 21, after the figures "$2,650,000" as amended, add the words "plus $260,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. Of course, this amendment accomplishes the object of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], only in an entirely different way. It takes advantage of a technicality in the rulings, just as the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] takes advantage of a technicality in the rulings. I refer the Chair to page 387 of volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents, section 5764, which reads as follows:

While it is not in order to strike out a portion of an amendment once agreed to, yet words may be added to the amendment.

That is precisely what I propose to do. Now, the Chairman knows very well that parliamentary rules are purely questions of form. It is the vortex of form into which amendments are drawn. Under parliamentary law it is not so much what you do as how you do it. It is perfectly obvious that the reduction of the amount carried in the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] was simply a device to bring the amendment under the Holman rule. This result was accomplished, and in consequence of the success of that device the Chairman held that a legitimate amendment was out of order, and I think held so properly under the rulings; but I think the decisions are wrong. I think the decisions are contrary to common sense. And the question I put to the Chair is this: When the gentleman from Louisiana nominally reduced the sum of $2,650,000 and then proceeded to tack on legislation, if any gentleman in this House had desired to offer an amendment to the amendment proposing quite different legislation and increasing the amount carried in the paragraph, the Chairman would very properly have ruled such motion to be out of order. After the Chairman ruled the gentleman from Louisiana to be in order, if the ruling on the Raker amendment is to hold, it ceased to be possible to offer any amendment not germane to the Dupré amendment. In other words, the moment the gentleman from Louisiana was recognized, if his amendment were agreed to, it would be impossible to consider any proposal, no matter whether in accordance with existing law or not, which affected the amount carried in this paragraph, unless such proposal was germane to the Dupré amendment. So I—trying, as we always do when there seems to be a parliamentary tangle in which common sense is in conflict with the rule—have offered an amendment which I think technically is in order, although by all the laws of common sense, if the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] ought to have been declared out of order, then my amendment ought to be declared out of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I submit that it should be declared out of order and that it is out of order. What is the effect of the amendment? The gentleman from Louisiana offered and had held in order an amendment, because one of its essential features was a reduction of the amount carried by the bill. Any amendment proposed after that was adopted which increased that amount—increased the amount carried by the bill—can not possibly be in order, because the two are inconsistent.

The rulings cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts are not similar to this—a new paragraph and proviso were held in order and amendment adopted. The language that made possible the consideration of the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana was the fact that it did two things—one to reduce the amount carried by the bill, and the other to reduce the compensation of an official. If this amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is to be held in order, an item of the bill will carry a certain amount; the gentleman in order to amend the bill makes the plea that he has reduced the amount carried by the bill and gets the amendment considered in order. Thereafter he immediately strikes out the reduced amount and increases it and adds additional money to increase the amount; and the whole theory, the whole philosophy, of the rules that have been adopted for the protection of the House is completely upset. I think this amendment, if by any possibility it could be held in order, would completely destroy the effectiveness of the rule to protect the House against legislation on appropriation bills.

It must be remembered, too, that the Holman rule is a drastic rule, and it is designed for the purpose of enabling the House to enact legislation, to effect economy, and bring about retrenchment in the public service. If such a procedure as this can be adopted, the effect of the Holman rule will be not to permit consideration of amendments that will effect economies but will bring about a procedure that simply opens the way to legislating upon appropriation bills without any attempt whatever at economy.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the statement of the gentleman from New York that the decision I cited is not parallel, I want to say that it is a great deal more parallel than the decision which the Chair cited—I mean the decision of Chairman Olmsted. Mr. Olmsted decided that a certain amendment to the Philippine tariff bill was out of order. He decided that it was out of order because it proposed to strike out an essential part of an amendment already adopted by the House.

The amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] proposes to strike out an unessential part of the amendment adopted. Now, let me comment upon what the gentleman from New York says about the working of the Holman rule. The working of the Holman rule may or may not have been designed to maintain the barrier against general legislation on appropriation bills. I refer the Chair to a decision which I do not think appears in Hinds' Precedents; at least, if it does, I have not found it. It is on page 268 of the Manual for the Fifty-third Congress, first session, one of the Crisp Congresses:

To an item appropriating for free-delivery service $10,450,000 an amendment was submitted striking out that sum and inserting $10,449,000, to be disbursed in a manner prescribed by a new provision of law.

In other words, the technicality of the reduction of $1,000 was resorted to so as to bring the amendment under the Holman rule, and in that way substantive legislation was made in order. It was held that the amendment was germane; that while it changed existing law it reduced the amount appropriated by the bill and was therefore in order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the decision just quoted by the gentleman from Massachusetts has been overruled in the last Congress and in this Congress. I cited not merely the decision in the manual, but I cited the complete proceedings on another occasion, where a similar ruling was made by a previous Chairman, and in the last Congress the Speaker held, after these matters had been discussed at length, that it was not sufficient to merely reduce the amount under the Holman rule, but that the amendment itself had to show on its face that there would be a substantial reduction in the expenditure of the Government. So that ruling is out of date.

What is the proposition now pending? An amendment was offered making a slight reduction in the amount carried in the bill and providing some substantive legislation. I do not undertake to say that after that amendment had been held in order it would have been proper to have offered an amendment changing the amount carried by the amendment, but if it would have been in order to offer an amendment changing the amount, then the House clearly had the opportunity to make that change.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Would the House have had an opportunity to change the substantive legislation carried in the amendment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. By a nongermane amendment?

Mr. MANN. No; I assume that the gentleman's amendment would be germane.

Mr. GARDNER. I was trying to find out when the House could have passed another proposition after the gentleman from Louisiana was once recognized on a proposition not germane to his.

Mr. MANN. I may be thickheaded, but I do not know what the gentleman is driving at.

Mr. GARDNER. It is the same question I asked the Chair. The gentleman from Louisiana introduces an amendment containing a substantive proposition of legislation and reducing the amount carried in the bill. Suppose I had wished to introduce a substantive proposition which would affect the amount carried in the paragraph, a proposal in accordance with existing law, but not germane to the proposition offered by the gentleman from Louisiana—at what point could it have been done?

Mr. MANN. Clearly it would have been in order to offer a substitute to the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana and increasing the amount. I still have not understood the gentleman's question. The gentleman talks about offering a nongermane amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. Not germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. MANN. Then it has nothing to do with the bill, because such an amendment would have been germane. The gentleman might offer an amendment declaring that the moon was made of green cheese.

Mr. GARDNER. Is the gentleman from Illinois trying to discuss the question or to confuse the issue?

Mr. MANN. Well, that is in accordance with the assumption that no one uses common sense unless he argues on the side of the gentleman. I do not agree with that proposition either. What is this proposition? If it were in order on that motion, the gentleman from Louisiana could have moved to increase the amount. That was within the control of the House. That is a very plain proposition. If it was not in order at that time to move to increase the amount, then the gentleman's amendment would not have been in order as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana. That is perfectly plain. The gentleman now offers an amendment which is not in order technically, because it proposes to change the amount, $2,650,000, carried in the bill, when there is no such amount carried in the bill at this time.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I am sure the gentleman does not want to misstate the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I am not misstating it.

Mr. GARDNER. But the gentleman has misstated it.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman said "as amended." If the gentleman would not go off half cock, but would wait until he heard a discussion, we would get along better. I did not interrupt either one of these gentlemen, although both talked until I was very tired; and I will not, if they will not interrupt me. The gentleman proposes to insert in place of the amendment, the sum named in the bill—$2,650,000—although there is no such sum named in the bill, and saying "$2,650,000, as amended," means nothing, because that sum is not amended. The bill is amended. If the gentleman's amendment be agreed to, no clerk on earth would know what it meant or how to enroll the bill. Where would the plus-sum amount come in? I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, if both of these amendments were agreed to, where would it come in? The gentleman did not even propose to insert his proposition at the end of the amendment already agreed to. Where would the amount come in?

Mr. GARDNER. After the figures "$2,650,000," as amended, wherever they were found.

Mr. MANN. But $2,650,000 is not amended. That amount has been stricken out and a new sum has been inserted. Where would the gentleman's amendment come in—at the end of the amendment already agreed to or in the middle of the amendment already agreed to?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. At the end of the figures which now replace $2,650,000. The amendment is clear enough, and I think the engrossing clerk would be intelligent enough to know what it meant.

Mr. MANN. I think the engrossing clerk would not be intelligent enough, because the gentleman himself has now offered an amendment to the amendment already agreed to—to insert in the middle of that amendment a provision—and the gentleman can not find a rule or a ruling anywhere in any book which authorizes him to insert in the middle of an amendment already agreed to a new amendment. The citation which the gentleman gave was that having agreed to an amendment you might provide another amendment to come in at the end of that amendment, and I said when I heard the amendment read that I could not tell where it would come in. The gentleman says he proposes to insert this proposition in the middle of the other amendment. So it is precisely the same thing over again as proposing to change the amount already agreed to and make it a greater amount.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. MONDELL. If the Chair will permit me, I am sure the Chair does not get tired listening to gentlemen, even if he does not agree with them, although some gentlemen may. I want to make one suggestion to the Chair. The Chair sustained the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], as he said, from a strictly technical viewpoint. The Chair admitted that such a holding would undoubtedly lead to embarrassment and would render it difficult for the House at times to express its will. I have no quarrel with the decision of the Chair on the strictly technical view that the Chair must have a fixed rule to follow and must not be left to exercise his judgment in every case as to whether or not a rule applies which is somewhat indefinite. Taking that strictly technical view of it, the Chair held good the point of order made by the gentleman from New York. If that be true, it seems to me the Chair must follow the same line of reasoning in further passing on this question.

If he felt that it was necessary to be technical, even though to do so would prevent the House from expressing its view in carrying out its will, certainly it is the duty of the Chair to hold technically when to do so will give the House an opportunity to express its will. There is no question but that the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York prevented the House from passing on the size of this appropriation, for that question was never clearly raised by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana. The gentleman from California attempted to raise it. The Chair held his amendment out of order on technical grounds. The gentleman from Massachusetts now offers an amendment to increase the amount of the appropriation, but it does not increase it in a way which conflicts with any rule of the House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] did not discuss the question at issue. He discussed the question of the form of the gentleman's amendment. No one has raised the question in regard to its form. There may be some difference of opinion as to where the amendment could be inserted, if adopted, but that is not the point at issue. The question is whether an amendment to increase this appropriation or to amend it be in order, and if the House is ever to have an opportunity to express its will on the amount of this appropriation it must be held in order, although I grant you that it is getting around, plowing around, the former ruling, just as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] plowed around the ordinary rules of the House by invoking the Holman rule. He did it not with a view of affecting the amount, but with a view of changing a statute. If the House is to have an opportunity to vote on this question at all at any time it must be done in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair pointed out before, if there be trouble here, it is the trouble of the rule and not the fault of the Chair. The Holman rule does render it more difficult to reach a particular end perchance under a situation such as has arisen now than would be the case if we had no Holman rule. But we have the Holman rule. That is a part of the rules of the House. It has as much force and vitality as any other rule of the House, and it is the duty of the Chair, whatever his private opinion may be about the Holman rule and its efficacy, to enforce that rule as much as any other. The Chair is not prepared to say that you could not get at the result in any way even with the Holman rule, but if you could not, still that is the rule, and it is the duty of the Chair to enforce the rule.

Now, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is, of course, simply doing by indirection that which admittedly can not be done by direction. It is a very novel form in which to present an amendment of figures, but the Chair thinks clearly it is not in order and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER. Suppose while the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] was pending, I had moved to amend his amendment by providing that there should be an increased appropriation, the excess amount to be spent for deporting Chinese under the law, would that have been admissible at that time or any other?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that he prefer not to pass upon that.

Mr. GARDNER. The Chair is not prepared——

The CHAIRMAN. That would be obiter at any rate.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 150, line 21, after the word "labor," insert "$260,000 and the further and additional sum and amount of."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order, and I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. To what point does the gentleman offer the amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is adding $260,000——

The CHAIRMAN. This is the same proposition, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refund to the Toyo Kisen Kaisha (Oriental Steamship Co.) of amount overpaid to the United States for hospital treatment of two aliens in the Angel Island immigration hospital for the period from July 10 to 24, 1912, $35.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 151, line 16, after the word "thirty-five," the following, which I offer as a new paragraph:

For an additional appropriation for the miscellaneous objects of the Department of Labor, $260,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not germane at this point. We have passed the paragraph to which that appropriation would apply.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. We have not passed the paragraph; I stopped the Chair as the reading was proceeding to the next paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. An amendment germane to a particular paragraph must be offered at that paragraph. We have passed that point, and the gentleman is too late.

Mr. GARDNER. I ask the Chair's attention to the fact that the subdivisions on page 149 begin "Immigration station." Then comes "Immigration Service." Then comes "Naturalization Service." At the end of the provisions for the Immigration Service and before the beginning of the provision for the Naturalization Service I offered my amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The paragraph to which I called the attention of the Chair contains this language:

For all expenses of the enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States—

And so on.

Now, lines 10 and 11, page 150, say:

And for all other expenses authorized by said act.

Now, this is the paragraph to which any amendment for the expenses in the enforcement of the immigration laws and the expenses of the Immigration Service are germane, and it is a well-settled matter of procedure in the House that amendments that are germane to a particular part of a bill must be offered to that paragraph and can not be offered at any other place in the bill. The amendment proposed by the gentleman is germane to the paragraph which has been passed by the committee, and not having offered his amendment at that point it is not in order at any other point.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, these subdivisions are perfectly clear. First comes "Immigration stations." The next subdivision reads, "Immigration Service," and at the end of "Immigration Service," if this amendment is held out of order because it does not apply to this particular paragraph, I am going to offer an amendment, as follows:

For additional appropriation, Immigration Service, $260,000.

Now, clearly, if the committee itself in this bill includes all these items under "Immigration Service" it can not possibly be held that such an amendment is not germane to the portion of the bill to which it is offered. That is the rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no subdivision at all.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not mistaken.

Mr. MANN. While there is the heading "Immigration Service" and another heading "Naturalization Service," we passed some time ago the paragraph beginning at the bottom of page 149, which reads:

For all expenses of the enforcement of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States.

Now, there was the paragraph which carries the expenses of the Immigration Service, less a specific appropriation in the way of a claim, but that is the only place where an amendment relating to the expenses of the Immigration Service or the enforcement of the immigration laws was in order. After that paragraph had been passed we passed a paragraph having legislation authorizing the execution of a lease. Then we passed three paragraphs to pay claims, all four of which, by the way, were subject to the point of order as being claims. Now, the gentleman offers an amendment which is germane to the paragraph under the Immigration Service, but is not germane to any one of the four paragraphs which have been passed by the committee, and the gentleman now seeks to have it come in after these paragraphs. We might just as well say because the Immigration Service is contained in this bill you can offer an amendment at any place in the bill relating to the Immigration Service. The rule is that an amendment, to make it germane to a bill, must be germane to the part of the bill to which it is offered, and the only place where the amendment is germane in this bill, or to the language to enforce the laws regulating the immigration of aliens, is here immediately following the paragraph on that subject.

Mr. GARDNER. I call the Chair's attention to the fact that the rule is that a new paragraph must be germane to that portion of the bill to which it is offered, not to any particular paragraph. Now, the mere fact——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will read the rule——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will read the note, page 385 of the Manual:

Under the later practice, an amendment should be germane to the particular paragraph or section to which it is offered.

Mr. GARDNER. It is offered as a new paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Ah, but there is a paragraph in the bill referring to that subject matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman give the Chair the section rather than the page?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is section 777. This is the bill which is considered by paragraphs. Some bills are considered by sections. Now, we have in this bill a paragraph carrying the appropriations for all of the expenses incident to enforcing the immigration laws. That paragraph has been passed by.

Mr. GARDNER. This is an additional paragraph, and the gentleman has pointed out the fact that the word "section" is to be taken as the equivalent of the word "paragraph." That is well known. And if the gentleman will read the very next section, it says:

An amendment inserting an additional section should be germane to the portion of the bill to which it is offered.

Now, that is perfectly clear. It has been decided over and over again.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some bills are considered by paragraphs and some are considered by sections. The gentleman is offering an additional paragraph, not an additional section. We are now on section 1 of the bill, composed of an innumerable number of paragraphs. Now, then, his particular amendment must be offered to the particular paragraph to which it would be germane.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman knows very well that is not the case. That word "section," in the ruling, has always been construed to mean "paragraph" when the bill is being read by paragraphs.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman has not refreshed his memory on these questions for some time.

The CHAIRMAN. Under general parliamentary law, as the Chair understands it, an amendment does not necessarily have to be germane, but the rule of the House, adopted very early, perhaps at the very beginning, did provide for germaneness, and there is very good reason for it. It is in the interest of orderly procedure not only that they should be germane to the subject matter, but that the amendments proposed should be germane to that portion of the bill to which they are offered. The Chair thinks the amendment is subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For what purpose?

Mr. MOORE. I wish to discuss the paragraph—the naturalization paragraph.

Mr. MANN. We have not read that yet.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE. Have we not reached page 152?

The CHAIRMAN. We have not.

Mr. MOORE. Then I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of Labor, of examiners, interpreters, clerks, and stenographers, for the purpose of carrying on the work of the Bureau of Naturalization, provided for by the act approved June 29, 1906, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1913 (Stat. L., vol. 37, p. 736), and for their actual necessary traveling expenses while absent from their official stations, including street-car fare on official business at official stations, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe; actual necessary traveling expenses of the officers and employees of the Bureau of Naturalization in Washington while absent on official duty outside of the District of Columbia; telegrams, verifications to legal papers, telephone service in offices outside of the District of Columbia; not to exceed $3,800 for rent of offices outside of the District of Columbia where suitable quarters can not be obtained in public buildings; carrying into effect section 13 of the act of June 29, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 600), as amended by the act approved June 25, 1910, including an allowance to the clerk of the supreme court for Bronx County, N. Y., for clerical assistance, to be made in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor for the fiscal year 1915; the expenditures from this appropriation shall be made in the manner and under such regulations as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe, $250,000.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the point of order?

Mr. MANN. He reserved it.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, last night the distinguished Representative from North Carolina, a member of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. PAGE], made reference to the efforts of some of us to obtain appropriations for the Frankford Arsenal; and in the course of his remarks, assuming that an attack had been made upon the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], he said:

I felt it my duty, Mr. Chairman, not that I think that the gentleman from New York needs anybody to come to his defense in this House, but as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I felt it was my duty to say that no man can truthfully charge the chairman of the Appropriations Committee with favoring items in the locality in which he lives to the exclusion of the district of any other gentleman in this House.

Whereat there was applause. Later on the gentleman from North Carolina, extolling the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] for abstaining from obtaining any appropriations for the locality near by which he lived, condemned in severe terms those Members of the House who undertook to obtain appropriations for any public work near the districts or within the districts represented by them, and said that during the efforts to obtain appropriations in the earlier part of the day:

It was perfectly apparent to any man who observed the procedure at that time that there was on the floor of the House a cohesion of gentlemen for the purpose of public plunder.

Now, the term "public plunder" might be regarded as a very offensive term, and might, as applied to individual Members of the House, be accepted as a fair subject for a personal explanation. If the gentleman from North Carolina had indicated that Members of the House evidenced a cohesiveness here with a view to private plunder, of course, it would have called immediately for a personal explanation. But the term "public plunder" as used by the gentleman from North Carolina, in the sense that he applied it, may also be interpreted, in a sense, as complimentary. Representatives who in their public capacity here undertake to get what is coming to be known as "public plunder"—that is to say, the securing of appropriations for public works for the districts in which they live, as well as for the general welfare of the country—are not generally to be despised.

Now, I have a very great deal of pride in my acquaintanceship with the gentleman from North Carolina, and I know his public spirit, and I know how he would gladly say a good word for the chairman of the Appropriations Committee if it were necessary. We have evidence of it in the statement made by him last night, when he rose, without suggestion from the chairman, to make his very able defense of him as one Member of this House who would not use his official position to obtain unduly an appropriation for the community in which he lived. Now, it happens that in the bill which we have before us, and in this particular paragraph relating to the naturalization service, tucked away most delightfully on lines 14, 15, and 16, on page 152, close to the bottom of the page, where the ordinary reader might not see it, is this paragraph:

Including an allowance to the clerk of the supreme court for Bronx County, N. Y., for clerical assistance, to be made in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor for the fiscal year 1915.

Here is a case in point. I absolve the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of this committee, in deference to the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], from any personal interest in this paragraph at all. I do not believe the gentleman from New York had anything whatever to do with the inclusion of it in this paragraph relating to the naturalization service. I suspect he knew absolutely nothing about it, because no department chief came before the committee to urge its admission. No Secretary from the President's Cabinet appeared before the committee to ask that allowance should be made in this paragraph for the clerk of the Supreme Court for Bronx County, N. Y., for clerical assistance, even though it be something not conceded to any other clerk of any other supreme court. I assume, therefore, that this provision was put in this bill without the knowledge of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. It is subject to a point of order as new legislation, but I shall not make the point. I merely bring the matter to the attention of the committee with the view of showing how it is possible on the great Appropriations Committee for these little items to slip in without the knowledge of the chairman. It may be that his next friend and colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], may have had some knowledge of the manner in which the supreme court clerk of Bronx County, N. Y., was thus provided for, but not the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in this bill that was put in there without my knowledge. If I found anything in there that I did not know anything about, there would be trouble when we reached it. Under the law this appropriation is to make an allowance to certain State courts to enable them to obtain clerical assistance in naturalization work.

The city of New York is divided into boroughs. Four of the boroughs are coterminous with the counties. The Borough of Brooklyn is coterminous with the county of Kings. The Borough of Richmond is identical with the county of Richmond. The Borough of Queens is identical with the county of Queens. The Borough of Manhattan was formerly coterminous with the county of New York. The Borough of Manhattan and the Borough of The Bronx were included within the county of New York. By legislation the county of New York was subdivided so that the county of New York should consist of the territory within the Borough of Manhattan, and a new county was erected, designated as the county of the Bronx and consisting of the territory within the Borough of The Bronx. It has a population of 600,000.

Under the law the county clerk is the clerk of the supreme court within the county. The allowance for assistants for these naturalization purposes made to the clerk of the county of New York—the supreme court sitting in the county of the Bronx—is independent of that for the office force in New York, and after this year under the existing law it will be possible to make an allowance.

Now, the county of the Bronx was erected and came into existence on the 1st of January. They are collecting fees for naturalizations in the supreme court in Bronx County at the rate of from $12,000 to $14,000 a year. If an entire year has passed during which this had been done, the department could make an allowance of one-half of the collections in excess of $6,000, which would amount to one-half of from $6,000 to $8,000. But the county will have been in existence only six months by the 1st of July, and the collections up to that time are estimated to be $6,800. The department has authority to allow one-half of $800, or $400, which means that it can make practically no allowance for clerical assistance.

The purpose of this amendment was to permit the department during this fiscal year to make an allowance which would be equivalent to one-half of the estimated receipts above $6,000 a year, and after that it will come under the general law.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. I think I understand the situation. The gentleman's explanation is perfectly satisfactory to me. I know the growth of business in that district. But I should like to ask the gentleman whether Philadelphia, being coterminous with some other community, just as he says Bronx County is, and the same argument applying, desired to have this same provision made with reference to the Supreme Court in our section; we would have to get a secretary of a department to come before the Committee on Appropriations; or could we have it done merely by going to the chairman and having him do it in this way?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law the gentleman could have it done if he were sufficiently active.

Mr. MOORE. It may be possible that we shall have to have that done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. While, as a matter of fact, it is only about 6 miles from where I live to the county of Bronx, yet there are about 14 Members of Congress with districts between my residence and that county, so that the gentleman can see that this is not vital to me or particularly affects me or my district.

Mr. MOORE. I wish the gentleman to know that that same congestion of naturalization business exists in my State and the same question with regard to the compensation of clerks may arise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department has authority to allow the clerk of the court in Philadelphia which has jurisdiction of naturalization cases an amount for clerk hire equal to one-half of the receipts in excess of $6,000.

Mr. MOORE. Is this provision for extra compensation over and above that one-half now authorized by law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The county has been in existence for only six months. There is no yearly basis on which it can be computed at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, in reserving the point of order I do not wish to be considered as being a party to the contest or the rivalry between the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I reserved the point of order to that part of the paragraph which the gentleman from New York has just explained. I understand that it is an emergency provision, and that it will not be continued in the next appropriation bill; that it is merely to tide over existing conditions, because the court has not continued more than a few months.

Now, responding to the suggestion of my friend from Philadelphia [Mr. MOORE], I would say to him, Mr. Chairman, that I consider the courts at Philadelphia very derelict. Unlike the State courts in most other parts of the country, they absolutely refuse to undertake this work of naturalization.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall be glad to.

Mr. MOORE. The common pleas courts have refused to do that work, and for a very good reason: The Federal courts were there to do it; and the Federal courts have been doing it to the best of their ability. But the illness and death of a judge and the delay in appointing his successor caused a very great congestion of business.

The gentleman asked me this question before. I believe the common pleas judges of Philadelphia are now considering whether they shall not take up this naturalization business, and I shall certainly help them to do it if possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the exigencies of the approaching election, does not the gentleman believe it is a public duty on the part of the judges of the courts of common pleas to attempt to relieve the great number of aliens seeking naturalization and awaiting the final disposition of their petitions?

Mr. MOORE. I will answer the gentleman by saying this: I know of certain civil causes which have been pending over there for a long time in which the litigants have been waiting for a decision. They deserve to have their causes decided, and it may be that if this naturalization business were taken over into the business of the common pleas courts it would further delay that business. The litigants in the civil courts are entitled to have their cases adjudicated.

Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Under the law and practice is it not true that it is just as much the duty of the State courts to naturalize as it is the duty of the Federal courts?

Mr. STAFFORD. It has always been considered the province of the State courts to do this work, and before we passed this naturalization law the work was done almost exclusively, so far as my State is concerned, in the State courts. In my city to-day more of that work is being done in the State courts than in the Federal courts.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know any other large city in the country where the local courts are so selfish that they will not perform this necessary service to the people?

Mr. STAFFORD. Unless it might be in some other burg in Pennsylvania. Perhaps Pittsburgh may adopt a like policy, but I can not say whether it does or not.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin know any city in the Union where the naturalization of aliens is so much encouraged as in the city of Chicago?

Mr. STAFFORD. I know that no city in the country has been doing more work in the way of naturalization, as was disclosed in the consideration of the codification bill, than in the State courts in the city of Chicago.

Mr. MANN. Except in the city of New York, which is the largest city in the country. Chicago is the next. Philadelphia at one time was the rival of Chicago, but we have forgotten it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am speaking of naturalization work performed in the State courts.

Mr. BRYAN. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Copyright and patent branch office, Panama-Pacific International Exposition: To defray all the expenses connected with the establishment, equipment, and maintenance (including necessary printing) of the branch office at San Francisco, Cal., provided for in section 2 of the act approved September 18, 1913 (Public, No. 14), $30,000, of which sum $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended under the direction of the Commissioner of Patents, and $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be expended under the direction of the Register of Copyrights, each of whom is authorized to pay to the Public Printer the cost of any portion of such printing and binding required for the said branch office which may be ordered by him from the Government Printing Office; to designate from among the employees of the Patent Office and Copyright Office, respectively, such employees as may be actually necessary for the service of the respective divisions of the said branch office, one of the employees so designated from each of said bureaus to act as his disbursing officer; and to select and employ from time to time at San Francisco such additional persons as the exigencies of the work there may require. All persons from the Patent Office and Copyright Office thus designated for service at San Francisco shall receive no compensation other than their regular salaries, but while absent from Washington, D. C., and engaged upon the business of the aforesaid branch office shall be allowed their actual and necessary traveling expenses, together with a per diem allowance in lieu of the cost of subsistence to be fixed by the commissioner or register designating such persons, not to exceed $3 per day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 153, in line 5, strike out the words "Commissioner of Patents" and insert the words "Secretary of the Interior."

In line 7, strike out the words "Register of Copyrights" and insert the words "Librarian of Congress."

On page 154, in lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "Commissioner or Register" and insert the words "Secretary of the Interior or Librarian of Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the vote will be taken on all these amendments at once.

There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing and binding, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the International Bureau of American Republics, the Executive Office, and the departments; for salaries, compensation, or wages of all necessary employees additional to those herein specifically appropriated for, including the compensation of the foreman of binding and the foreman of printing; rents, fuel, gas, electric current, gas and electric fixtures; bicycles, horses, wagons, harness, electrical vehicles, and the care, driving, and subsistence of the same, to be used only for official purposes, including the purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles for official use of the officers of the Government Printing Office when in writing ordered by the Public Printer; freight, expressage, telegraph and telephone service; furniture, typewriters, and carpets; traveling expenses, stationery, postage, and advertising; directories, technical books, and books of reference, not exceeding $500; adding and numbering machines, time stamps, and other machines of similar character; machinery (not exceeding $100,000); equipment, and for repairs to machinery, implements, and buildings, and for minor alterations to buildings; necessary equipment, maintenance, and supplies for the emergency room for the use of all employees in the Government Printing Office who may be taken suddenly ill or receive injury while on duty; other necessary contingent and miscellaneous items authorized by the Public Printer; and for all the necessary materials and equipment needed in the prosecution and delivery and mailing of the work, $4,463,820.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 157, line 16, after the word "care," to insert the words "for the carriage of printing and printing supplies only."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HOWARD:
Page 157, in line 16, amend by inserting, after the word "care," the words "for the carriage of printing and printing supplies only."

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment reaches an evil that is being practiced by certain subordinate officials in Washington that ought to be stopped, and that evil is this: I understand that the present Public Printer has at his disposal two magnificent $4,000 electric passenger coupés. One of them is a brand new one, and the other, I think, was handed down to him by the former Public Printer, Mr. Donnelly.

In a former Congress I had occasion to say something about this abuse under the former administration. Lo and behold, it develops that under this administration the Public Printer, not a member of the Cabinet, not having the high official position that members of the Cabinet have, instead of having one magnificent electric vehicle to carry him around he has two; and how he can ride in both of them at the same time I do not know. It is an abuse that the people of the country, my constituents and your constituents, ought not to be made to pay for. He is nothing in the world but the head of a printing establishment; and this Public Printer has no more right to a passenger vehicle to carry him around at Government expense than the Clerk of this House or any other official.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. How did the Public Printer come to get this second $4,000 electric automobile, and out of what appropriation was it paid for?

Mr. HOWARD. The Lord only knows how the Public Printer got it. I should like to know how they all get them; but they do get them, and it is a diversion of the funds from some source or other, as I know there is no direct appropriation made for them. One of the most flagrant and palpable abuses of this privilege is in the War Department; and when I had occasion to say something about it before the Committee on Military Affairs, and it got out here and it was in the RECORD that we knew how flagrantly they were abusing this privilege, whereas they used to have the letters "Q. M. D." on these depot wagons, since this agitation has taken place they have put a little black paint over the red letters "Q. M. D." on these magnificent depot wagons, and now you can no longer identify them.

Now, why has the Public Printer two magnificent electric vehicles for his private convenience at the public expense? Talk about official convenience. He can go anywhere he wants to go or has any business on a street car, and I think the time has arrived when if the Speaker of this House thinks this practice is such an abuse that he refuses to use an automobile other public officials ought not. The Speaker of this House does not use an automobile, although he has a right to do it and there was one handed down to him from Speaker Cannon—he has never used it, and he never will, because he believes, as I believe, that it is not right to use the people's money for such purposes.

Mr. MANN. He has a right to do it, but he has not the automobile.

Mr. HOWARD. That is true. He has not the automobile; but he could have had it and used it, because there was one left him, as I have stated.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Georgia and I have a right to ride in automobiles.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes, that is true; but we have not a right to do it at the public expense. Now, I know a little something about electric vehicles, and I know something about what they cost; and I have seen one of these vehicles going around with this gentleman, not on official business, but on purely private and pleasant affairs, and it is unwarranted and it ought to be stopped; and I hope that the gentlemen present will vote for this amendment, so that we can stop the abuse of this privilege. These officials have these vehicles, and they are riding around in them when they have no authority in the world to do it and it is not fair to my constituents or your constituents. Now, what has made the Public Printer so great, the head of the Government Printing Office, that he has got to have two $4,000 automobiles at his beck and call day and night, and two great big buck chauffeurs at his command day and night? I think it is time to stop it. I think it is time to use emphatic language in describing these abuses as they exist. I know this abuse exists, because I have seen it with my own eyes. He has got the coat of arms of the Government Printing Office on these automobiles as big as a soda biscuit, a great big coat of arms of the Government Printing Office on the doors in magnificent colors.

I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] will agree with me that this privilege is being abused in this city by officials, not only the higher officials but the little fellows as well. Why, even the veterinary surgeons will be getting to the point where they will want $4,000 or $5,000 automobiles to go out here to see a sick cow at the Soldiers' Home. They have all got to ride. The Cabinet officers, the generals, the captains, the lieutenants, the chiefs of divisions, and all; but, Mr. Chairman, the people who pay for all this show and extravagance have to walk. If you were to kill off all Washington by automobiles, 50 per cent would probably be killed by Government officials driving cars paid for with the people's money.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no more criticism for the Public Printer than for any other official. I am simply consistent. I fought this extravagance under the Republican administration, and it is just as reprehensible and subject to criticism under a Democratic administration. I shall continue to pursue this sort of foolish waste of the people's money so long as I remain here, and I hope that a Democratic Congress will have the courage to put a stop to it in every department of the Government.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. There are two electric vehicles for this office. There was one prior to the advent of the present Public Printer, and he has purchased a new machine, the list price of which is $4,000, but it was bought for $2,800, because the owner died shortly after buying it.

These machines are used for a number of purposes. One of them is to carry a sum of between $75,000 and $100,000 from the Treasury Department to the Printing Office to meet the weekly pay roll. These machines are used by a number of employees in connection with the distribution and collection of manuscripts. Whether there is any abuse in connection with the use of them I am not prepared to say. There is pending in the legislative appropriation bill a provision which it is hoped will very largely eliminate the abuse which has resulted from the use of automobiles in the Government service. It has not yet been perfected. It was put on the legislative bill in the Senate. It has not been agreed to because they are at work attempting to perfect it so that it will effectively do its work.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia is adopted, it is difficult to say what its effect will be. I know that they have 4,000 employees there, and it is a serious question to handle the currency from the Treasury Department for the Printing Office on the weekly pay roll.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. That is done four times a month. The taxicab fare, if the disbursing agent would take the trip by cab, would be $1.30. If he has to bring it in an automobile, why could he not hire a cab?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law they are entitled to utilize horses and carriages for strictly official purposes. All the horse-drawn vehicles were dropped from the Government Printing Office service because they had a place where they could put in electrically operated vehicles and charge and store them at a cost insignificant compared to the cost of maintaining horses. I do not know whether there is any abuse connected with the use of these automobiles or not.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman think, as the economist that he is and guardian of the Treasury as he is shown to be, that there is any justification on the face of the earth for the Public Printer to have two $4,000 electric automobiles at his disposal? Does not the gentleman think he is stretching it powerfully when he gets two? Does not the gentleman think he ought to be modest about it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. My own opinion has been that there is no necessity for two passenger motor vehicles for the Public Printing Office.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me ask the gentleman from New York. The Government Printing Office is a machine shop, where there is a great deal of machinery. They have two physicians regularly employed in that office, and there are a great many casualties which occur there in the course of the year, and quite a number are taken to the dispensary or to their homes or to a hospital. If they did not have some vehicle to transport them, it would be necessary to hire vehicles outside.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will yield, I venture the assertion that the new machine they have got is never used for that purpose. In the first place, it is not a rapid machine; it is an electrical machine. It is not a machine that you could put a cot into or anything of that kind. It is a coupé, with the most magnificent trimmings and trappings of any car in Washington except one, and that belongs to the Russian Legation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As far as the trimmings and trappings are concerned, the car described by the gentleman was bought from an estate at a large discount, because of the sudden decease of the person who had purchased it. I think the character of the car is not a proper subject for criticism.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under the law, if the Public Printer or any of his subordinates ride in a street car or in a taxicab, that can not be charged up against the Government or the District of Columbia. Am I right?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think they can. I think those are legitimate disbursements.

Mr. MANN. My opinion is that officials in the District may not employ vehicles for hire and charge it to the Government. Hence, we buy them where we need to use them, even if only once a month, when we might get a taxicab for $2. It is cheaper for the individual but not for the Government; but we buy the automobile and employ the chauffeur.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from New York a question. Out of what fund has the Public Printer paid for this automobile?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Out of this appropriation; and it was approved by the Joint Committee on Printing of the two Houses which supervised it.

Mr. HAWLEY. When the appropriation was made there was no intention on the part of the committee that an automobile for the Public Printer should be purchased out of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; they have a number of automobiles; they have several trucks. They have more motor vehicles than any other branch of the public service in Washington.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman does not answer my question. I say it was not intended by the Committee on Appropriations, when they made the appropriation out of which this automobile was paid for, that any part of it should be used for such a purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not say that myself.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman would know if such was the intention.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My information is that automobiles have been purchased as the result of a decision that was made. The Committee on Appropriations in providing appropriations did not intend that they should be automobiles for official passengers, except where there was such specific and unquestioned language. In the Government Printing Office there was one. They had several teams of horses and wagons.

The Public Printer, I understand, with the approval of the Committee on Printing, sold these driving horses and carriages and purchased this Rauch-Lang car for $2,800, because as they generate their own electrical power at the Printing Office and have the space to store the car, and also have a number of electric trucks, he deemed it more economical to buy that car and keep it in that way than to maintain the horses and carriages.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman knows, and he has so contended for many years, that the control of the expenditure of funds should be in the hands of Congress, and the approval of those expenditures should be made by Congress. I would like to ask the gentleman further if when this appropriation was made out of which this automobile was paid for and the matter was pending before his committee any departmental chief told the gentleman or his committee that part of the money was to be used for the purchase of this automobile?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not remember. There was a different man at the head of the Public Printing Office when the appropriation was investigated and when the purchase was made, so that you could not hold one official responsible for the failure of another to call attention to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee—and particularly the attention of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] to this paragraph which has been inserted in the legislative appropriation bill in the Senate, and which will be enacted into law in some form. It is intended to eliminate the abuses in connection with the use of motor vehicles in the Government service. That provision is as follows:

No appropriation made in this or any other act shall be available for the purchase of any motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the service of any of the executive departments or other Government establishments, or any branch of the Government service, unless specific authority is given therefor, and after the close of the fiscal year 1915 there shall not be expended out of any appropriation made by Congress any sum for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for any branch of the public service of the United States unless the same is specifically authorized by law, and in the estimates for the fiscal year 1916 and subsequent fiscal years there shall be submitted in detail estimates for such necessary appropriations as are intended to be used for purchase, maintenance, repair, or operation of all motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, specifying the sum required, the public purposes for which said vehicles are intended, and the officials or employees by whom the same are to be used.

This is a provision which it is believed, with perhaps some modifications, will so regulate these matters as to eliminate the abuses.

Mr. HOWARD. That provision has in it the language "or any other act." I do not see how they can extend it to any other act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; we can do that. That is why it was put in, so as to apply not only to the appropriations carried in the legislative bill, out of which the heads of the departments are reached, but also to appropriations made in any other bill. For instance, there is one bill reported by a committee, for field service, and an automobile has been purchased out of that, and is being used by the head of a department in this city, and that is an abuse. I think the gentleman and myself are in thorough accord in respect to the matter.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to say to my good friend that I will be perfectly willing to withdraw my amendment or anything of that sort affecting this abuse; but I am as confident as that I am living that that provision which he has just read will never be agreed to, and that some sort of a loophole will be left by which these men can continue this abuse.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman understands that this is not a provision that was put in by the House?

Mr. HOWARD. It was put in by the Senate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and is now being examined by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], so that they may be sure that it is so worded that it will not have a loophole in it. This amendment will be adopted in some form, without any question, because we are very glad of this opportunity to adopt it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York I know is heartily in favor of that provision, and as a forerunner of this great reform that ought to have been inaugurated years ago I hope that, in view of the fact that this particular officer, the head of the printing office, has been so immodest as to get two of these $4,000 automobiles, he will accept this amendment striking at him as an indication of what is going to come later for these other men who are guilty of these abuses. I ask unanimous consent to so modify my amendment that it will come in after the word "vehicle," in line 15, in place of after the word "cars," in line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt but that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is perfectly sincere in trying to legislate so as to prevent abuses; but it looks to me that providing for a $4,000 automobile for the Public Printer is in itself an abuse and misuse of public funds. I do not see any need of encouraging any such useless and unnecessary extravagance. I am absolutely surprised to hear it put forth as an argument in favor of an automobile for the Public Printer that they have to carry money out there to pay off the employees once a week, and need a $4,000 automobile to carry it in; just as if the employees would strike if they did not have their pay brought to them in a $4,000 automobile. My opinion is that they will accept their money in any way they can get it. What did they do before they had automobiles in order to pay off the employees? What do you gentlemen do? How is the money brought to the office of the Sergeant at Arms by which the Members of the House are paid? I do not think any of you would resign your seats if you had to accept money that was brought here in something besides an electrically driven machine.

The very fact of authorizing such an instrumentality is an abuse in itself, and I think that the Democratic simplicity that we talk so much about ought to be put in practice. You might just as well get an automobile to carry Members backward and forward from the departments to this Capitol, where they are compelled to go, as to give an automobile to the Public Printer to go where he is compelled to go. We would not vote for such a thing for ourselves, and why should we vote for it for subordinate officials in the executive departments? Why is it incumbent upon us to carry the head of a bureau from his home to his office, when we have to walk or ride on a street car and pay our own expenses? Now, I do certainly think when we refuse to appropriate for an automobile for the Speaker of the House, and he heartily approved our course, and yet it seems we are quite content to authorize one or two for a chief of a bureau—I am seriously contending that such an authorization is an abuse within itself, even though it is used only for official purposes, and I hope that the amendment will be adopted, and that never again will we provide these high-power expensive machines, which tend to encourage these gentlemen to think that because they are favored by legislation that they are a preferred class of public servants. I hope, in the interest of Democratic simplicity, we will vote to strike this item from the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Tennessee should make such a vicious attack upon the chief headsman of the Democratic Party. These gentlemen certainly can not realize the good work this official has done for the Democratic Party——

Mr. HOWARD. I thought the gentleman said "herdsman"; I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, that would apply also. The gentlemen evidently have not heard of the splendid service this gentleman has rendered to the Democratic Party down here in the Printing Office. But before I refer to that I want to talk about this matter of automobiles for a moment.

Mr. COOPER. Two of them.

Mr. MONDELL. There are two electric automobiles. There was an electric when the present Public Printer came into the office which he calls an electric cab. It was old and somewhat out of date, and the Public Printer is not a cheap guy; he is no piker, and he bought one of the best electrics that could be found on the market. It is a $4,000 machine, but the Public Printer got it at a bargain; he paid $2,800 for it.

But, mark you, this Public Printer is an official mindful of the law, and in that he differs from some other public officials who buy automobiles. He bought this automobile, after consulting people high in authority in the administration, out of an appropriation for "electric appliances." [Laughter on the Republican side.] And is not an electric automobile an electric appliance, even though it is likely to be used partly for private purposes? Now, there is another way in which the Public Printer differs from some other public officials. The Public Printer is an honest man, and I do not think that he would deny that this is, to a certain extent, a vehicle used for private and family purposes. It is a swell rig, and the gentleman from Georgia knows, as he says he has seen it recently. It is beautiful, and it is beautifully kept at public expense. I am of the opinion, however, that the Public Printer does have quite a bit of use for an automobile for official business. If we are to deprive officials of automobiles, we should begin with some official having less real official need of a machine than the Public Printer. This Public Printer is a good official, and in addition to being a good official he is a good Democrat. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] talks about Democratic simplicity. The Public Printer is a Democrat, but he is not so simple as some people might imagine. He was interrogated by members of the committee as to the manner of making promotions down in the Government Printing Office, and he said in reply to a question propounded by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] as to what his method was—

> Why, if a vacancy exists, the preference would be given to a Democrat if he were equally competent.
> Mr. GILLETT. In saying that, did you understand that you were representing the administration?
> Mr. FORD. No, sir; I was representing the Public Printer.
> Mr. GILLETT. And that was your personal view?

And Mr. Ford answered—

> Yes, sir.
> Mr. GILLETT. You think that is obedient to the civil-service law, do you?
> Mr. FORD. I think so, because the Civil Service Commission does not recognize Republicans or Democrats, and neither do I, but I have a sort of preference for the Democrat if he can fill the bill and there is a vacancy existing. If there is no vacancy, then, of course, it is all off.

Of course, it is a matter of judgment with the Public Printer as to whether two or more candidates are equally competent, and with his views, as expressed with regard to his preference for Democrats, it is fairly possible, honest man as is the Public Printer, that a Democrat always gets the benefit of the doubt, and I am surprised at my friend from Georgia, good Democrat as he is, believing in the faithful securing all the jobs, should pick out this one man who has been conspicuous in this respect and complain of him.

Mr. QUIN and Mr. FOWLER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is recognized.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I noticed what the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] had to say about the Democracy of the Public Printer. I am glad we have a Democrat in that office. I am a plain, simple Democrat. I believe the party that is in power ought to hold what jobs there are. I know if I were a Republican and the administration were Republican, I should want to kick the Democrats out, and if I had my way about it there would be a lot of Republicans packing their baggage and getting out of these departments around here. In fact, every postmaster of the United States would be a Democrat. But I do not happen to have my way.

This Public Printer is a Democrat, and a good one. He is a good man, a straight man, and an honest official, who is running that department in a nice way, but I am against this automobile business. I think it is time for this Congress to stop all this tomfoolery of our public officials riding around in great, big automobiles, at the expense of the taxpayers. In fact, sometimes I think you would have two-thousand-dollar men riding in four-thousand-dollar automobiles. The people of this country have to pay the taxes, and if we propose to set the example of extravagance by permitting the officials here to ride at the Government expense in these extravagant automobiles, you will be setting an example that will come up like Banquo's ghost to haunt us.

It is true that a few thousand dollars for this official and that official do not amount to much, but by the time you aggregate it all it will run up into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. There is where the trouble is; and this talk about it being necessary to transfer a little pay roll over here is worse than tomfoolishness. The idea of a few employees of this Government having to have money carried to them in an automobile! I am glad to walk in order to get mine. I think the people of my district are glad to walk up to the desk and get their money. What business have we got to have two automobiles for a public official to transport a little money over to certain employees? I think it is a reflection on the Democracy; and, as one Democrat, I will vote to take the automobiles away from all of them. The Congressmen do not have automobiles furnished to them by the Government, and they ought not to ever want such things at the expense of the people. You pay a street car fare to get to the departments, and when you get there you have to wait an hour sometimes to see anybody. Since I am a Democrat, I want to see men in these positions bearing the manners and methods of Democrats. I want to see the Democrat in Congress, the democrat in nature, the democrat in life, exercise all the functions of his office in a democratic manner. That is the type of Democrat, if the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will yield to me, that I want to see in office. And I love to see that type of Republican and Bull Mooser in office; and if your party, sir, ever comes back into power again, I hope that you will have good Republicans who will run their departments economically, wherever they may be. I consider it, when we let these two battleships we sold here yesterday, one of them bearing the name of my own State, the grand old State of Mississippi, go to a foreign Government, perhaps at 30 per cent of their value, as a serious reflection on the economy of this House. It was a scheme to sell these two battleships and put the money into a big dreadnaught and give the Armor Plate Trust some more money out of the pockets of the people of this country. That is what the scheme is. I am afraid that a great many men who voted for it voted for it on sentiment instead of knowing the real issue that is involved. You talk around here about the need for a big Navy, and yet you sell two of your battleships; and a lot of men fell into the trap and let the trusts proceed to plunder the toiling masses of America out of $51,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in opposition to the amendment now pending; that is, to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, as a Democrat, I can not see any use for an automobile for a Democrat. Now, a Republican may see some use for an automobile for a Republican, but the Republican agrees with me that he can see no reason for an automobile for a Democrat. That far we go together as brothers. The only thing I desire to see is the Republicans get far enough along to see no use for an automobile for a Republican. Now, I do not know just what kind of fiber our Public Printer is made of. It is said he is made of good Democratic fiber. If he is, he stands with me against extravagance and against the purchase of an automobile with public funds. I can not see any reason for the Public Printer having an automobile any more than for the Representative of the twenty-fourth congressional district of Illinois having an automobile.

Mr. BRYAN. Two.

Mr. FOWLER. My good Bull Moose friend from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] says two. And he is a friend of mine, because he is going to vote against this allowance, and I will vote against it, and I want every Member to vote against it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Just for a simple question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Has not the gentleman been here long enough so that he knows that if this item is stricken out of the bill now it will be in the bill when it becomes a law? Does not the gentleman know that?

Mr. FOWLER. I have been a student of that character of legislation for some time, and I am surprised that in America we sometimes have legislation that has not been enacted by a majority of Congress, but put in the bills while in the hands of the conference committee, a committee which had its origin in the necessity of the occasion undoubtedly, but, in my opinion, which has sadly abused the privileges that were originally conferred upon it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand that this good Public Printer has been rendering most valuable services to his country, but I understand also he has been rendering good services to himself and his family by using that magnificent electrical automobile to carry himself, his family, and friends and others to the ball games—a place where no man has a right to go during the hours his Government has a claim upon him for service and duty.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; for a short, civil question.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know what kind of automobiles these are? Are they Ford machines?

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, no. I understand that the Ford machine is made for common people.

Mr. MANN. I understood that the Public Printer had a number of Ford machines. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, yes; that may be. But the machine we are discussing is the cream of machines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in two minutes.

Mr. MANN. Oh, if the gentleman is going to stay here, we have already had time enough wasted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not trying to foreclose anybody, but——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman is going to stay here to-night, I think we have wasted enough time in talk like this. I am not willing to stay here all night for the purpose of hearing such talk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate close in two minutes. I wish to yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that all debate close in two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment close in two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that all debate on the pending amendment close in two minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to state to the committee that section 5 of the legislative bill deals with automobiles in all the governmental departments here in Washington. I promised when the legislative bill went to conference that that amendment would be brought back so that the House could have an opportunity to discuss it, to amend it, and to vote on it. I expect to call up the conference report on the legislative bill to-morrow morning, and that will give the membership of the House an opportunity to pass such legislation as may be desirable touching automobiles in all departments of the Government.

Mr. MANN. If we strike this out now?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Smithsonian Institution: For printing and binding the annual reports of the Board of Regents, with general appendixes, $10,000; under the Smithsonian Institution: For the annual reports of the National Museum with general appendixes, and for printing labels and blanks, and for the bulletins and proceedings of the National Museum, the editions of which shall not exceed 4,000 copies, and binding, in half morocco or material not more expensive, scientific books and pamphlets presented to or acquired by the National Museum Library, $37,500; for the annual reports and bulletins of the Bureau of American Ethnology, and for miscellaneous printing and binding for the bureau, $21,000; for miscellaneous printing and binding for the international exchanges, $200; the International Catalogue of Scientific Literature, $100; the National Zoological Park, $200; the Astrophysical Observatory, $200; and for the annual report of the American Historical Association, $7,000; in all, $76,200.

Mr. FESS rose.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] moves to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. FOWLER. I have reserved it.

Mr. FOWLER. On page 160.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, may I proceed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does the gentleman want? Is a point of order reserved?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is it? Who reserved it?

Mr. FOWLER. I reserved the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to know what the situation is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know what it is that the gentleman from Illinois has reserved his point of order for.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] undoubtedly rose before I did. I wanted to reserve a point of order, and at the same time I wanted to show my respect for the gentleman from Ohio, and for that purpose I was willing to yield the floor to him. The Chair recognized him, and for that reason I have not pressed my desire to be heard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I demand the regular order, Mr. Chairman. The regular order is the disposition of the point of order. What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois state for the benefit of the Chair what his point of order is?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] off the floor at all. I desired to reserve the point of order, in order that I might get some information as to whether there is a duplication in this paragraph as to certain items.

My position is——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I object to the gentleman speaking until the Chair has disposed of the matter. What is the point of order?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not have to answer the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] reserves the point of order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] does not wish to speak to the point of order, but to the pro forma amendment of striking out the last word. The regular order is to determine whether or not the paragraph is subject to a point of order. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, in line 16 the paragraph carries an appropriation for the Astrophysical Observatory of $200. I understand that this is for the benefit of the Smithsonian Institution. Am I correct about that? I will ask the chairman of the committee. Is this for the aid of the Smithsonian Institute?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. This is for the Astrophysical Observatory.

Mr. FOWLER. It is in connection with the Smithsonian? Is that true? I understand it is under the supervision of the Smithsonian Institute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. GARDNER. To insist on the regular order. The regular order has already been called for. The gentleman must either make his point of order or drop it. He has not made his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. So far the gentleman has reserved his point of order. Does he make the point of order?

Mr. FOWLER. I am trying to get information.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a point of order?

Mr. FOWLER. If I be required to answer, I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires the gentleman to address himself to the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman tell what his point of order is, so that we can understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has asked the gentleman to state his point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I will do so. The paragraph carries an appropriation for the Astrophysical Observatory. The same work that is done by the Astrophysical Observatory is done by the Weather Bureau, and an appropriation has been made therefor.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the gentleman has made no point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks he has.

Mr. GARDNER. I respectfully ask the Chairman what is the point of order made by the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has made a point of order against the item which is contained in lines 16 and 17, amounting to $200.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Illinois has not stated the ground of his point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. What point of order has the gentleman made? Why is the item out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes the gentleman is endeavoring to state it.

Mr. GARDNER. But he has made no point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair differs with the gentleman from Massachusetts, and the Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the Chair state for the benefit of the committee what the point of order is?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will please state his point of order, and the Chair will hear him.

Mr. FOWLER. The point of order I am making against this appropriation is that it is a double appropriation for one and the same purpose, whereas there ought not to be carried in any appropriation bill a doubling up of appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the contention of the gentleman from Illinois that this appropriation is carried in another part of the bill?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the other item precede or follow the item to which the gentleman now addresses himself?

Mr. FOWLER. I am not so sure that it is carried in this bill, Mr. Chairman; but I am sure that it has been appropriated for.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman making the point of order that this item is not authorized by law?

Mr. FOWLER. It is not authorized by law, but I was trying to get at a reason for not allowing this appropriation to be carried in this bill; and that reason is because there has already been an appropriation made, under another bureau, for the same purpose, and to make the appropriation here is to make a double appropriation, which ought not to be tolerated by Congress. The only purpose that can be served by this duplicate method of appropriation is to get more money out of the Treasury of the United States, at the whim and caprice of certain designing men, who think they know more about the heavens than the ordinary man ought to know about the earth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that the gentleman's procedure should be by a motion to strike out, rather than by a point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. While there is no authorization for this appropriation, yet I am trying to show another reason whereby it should not be carried in this bill; that is, that it is a duplicate of what has already been provided for.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the only place where appropriations for printing are carried for any establishment of the Government. This $200 that these "designing men" are trying to get out of the Treasury is for certain printing for the Astrophysical Observatory, and this is the only place in any bill where appropriations are carried for printing for this institution. The gentleman is mistaken. It is for printing. There is no other item, no other manner, and no other place where money is carried for printing of reports in detail as to the results of the observations.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, there is a lump sum carried for this same purpose in two other appropriation bills. One is for the Smithsonian Institute, a lump sum, and the other is for the Weather Bureau, another lump sum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order that it is a duplicate appropriation is insufficient.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, there is no authorization under the law, as I understand, for this item.

The CHAIRMAN. It is incumbent upon those who have charge of the bill to produce the law; but the Chair feels, without the act itself being produced, that he is sufficiently familiar with the Smithsonian Institution act to be of the opinion that this is authorized.

Mr. FOWLER. If a lump sum has been appropriated for this work in another bill, then it is not proper to keep this sum in this bill. There has been such a diversity of the use of funds under the "lump-sum" appropriations that it would take the greatest philosopher that ever lived on earth to figure out what was intended by an item in an appropriation bill under the "lump-sum" clause, and I am trying to save my Government the humiliation of such misappropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The recollection of the Chair is that the blanket appropriation in the Smithsonian [illegible]stitution act is unlimited. The Chair sympathizes with the object which the gentleman from Illinois has in view, but the Chair is of the opinion that the legal situation is as the Chair has stated it.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the Chair rule that the appropriation here provided for can not be paid out of the original lump-sum appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair will undertake to decide such matters as come before him in this appropriation bill and will not undertake to go back and revise the rulings on other appropriation bills.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair will permit, the fact is there is no other appropriation which carries a lump-sum appropriation of any kind for the Smithsonian Institution out of which printing is allowed. The gentleman from Illinois is proceeding under an erroneous assumption.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, my colleague is always ready with information, whether it be correct or incorrect; he is familiar, by a long experience of 16 years, with the fact that a system of diverting money from the purpose for which it is appropriated, even in the purchase of automobiles without authority, has been in practice for a long time. Why he should say that I am proceeding under an erroneous idea, with such custom staring him in the face for 16 years, I am led to the mountain of doubt as to the sincerity and purpose of the gentleman in making the criticism. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I did not rise to speak upon the point of order. The appropriation for this item last year was $74,900 and this year $76,200. I think it is perfectly clear that this item for printing is in order, and that the other sum, referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], is for an entirely different purpose. What I want to call attention to is the work that the Smithsonian Institution is doing. I think it is one of the best, if not the finest, examples of what can be done in the way of research by any single institution in the United States, if not in the world. For years I have been interested in the character of work done by this organization.

I have casually looked over the work of the Smithsonian Institution within the last few years and I find that it has an official connection or affiliation with at least 60,000 people scattered the world over. I think it has an official connection with every learned society on earth. Its work of research has reached to various parts of the world, in which it initiated investigations. I think through the Smithsonian Institution, largely, Washington has become the greatest scientific center over and beyond any other city in the world, not even excluding Berlin and Paris, both of which are noted as centers of scientific research.

I notice that through the Smithsonian Institution we have had more than 10,000 titles of original research in the time it has existed, from 1846, when, as I remember from reading history, Mr. Smithson made this great bequest. Financially it is one of the most splendid examples of the growth of a fund so bequeathed and protected, for the original gift was only $515,000. To-day it amounts to within $2,500 of $1,000,000, and yet there has been no effort to add to the fund.

Besides that, through the mere matter of governmental exchange, which is practically without expense, there is property in the way of collections that would amount to more than a million dollars. I would have no way of measuring the money value of such collections as are housed there. Besides, there are buildings to house these splendid collections, which probably approach very near a million dollars. The original gift by this Englishman of a half million dollars has grown into one of the most valuable treasures in the world.

The Museum alone in the Smithsonian Institution added to its rare collection over 300,000 specimens last year. The matter handled in the way of books, pamphlets, specimens, and so forth, in the international exchanges alone amounted last year to 600,000 pounds. It seems to me that here is an expenditure of money for the work that is being done, when ganged by its national significance, that is not duplicated in any other single center of scientific activity in this country or in any other. The complete publications, including the contributions to knowledge, the miscellaneous collections, and the annual reports, constitute the best body of knowledge extant. I think largely under the influence of the Smithsonian Institution we have gathered here a group of scholars that no other center has. We need but recall Henry, Baird, Powell, Newcomb, Goode, Langley, and others to realize the stamp of investigator attracted here to the Capital by this opportunity. I think when you recall that the Weather Department, now so prominent and important, was started in the Smithsonian Institution as a mere incident of investigations in the subject of climate, that it has grown into the proportions of a magnificent governmental department, it gives us an idea of what it does. Who can fully measure the work of the Nautical Almanac Office of the Government, inaugurated by Newcomb, or who can estimate the worth of the investigations in geology conducted by Powell? The most recent work of research was that of Langley in demonstrating aerial navigation.

When we remember that splendid Fish Commission, that has attracted attention the world over, the work accomplished there being observed by the biologists of all the world—when we remember that that Fish Commission started as a mere division in the Smithsonian Institution some years ago and now has been turned over to the Government as a special department, it gives us some idea of what the Institution is doing. One of the earliest activities of the Institution was the collection of scientific books for the use of collaborators and the public. These books became useful to legislators, and the work was soon transferred to the Government and became the germ of our Library of Congress. Naturally, next to books, objects illustrating human progress are most important. Henry began the collection, which was carried on by Goode and matured in the Museum.

It seems to me that while we are interested in economy, and are justified in keeping down appropriations for needless luxuries as emphasized by the expenditures for automobiles for Government departments, and so on, all of which I am in sympathy with, yet while we talk enthusiastically and almost indignantly, as if the destiny of the Nation hung upon our denial of such accessories, we ought not to pass without notice this splendid institution of research, which comes in this bill immediately after the item for automobiles. This item is for printing the results of investigation of this group of scientific scholars. This item looks to the publication of the annual reports; the publications and bulletins of the National Museum; the publications of the Bureau of American Ethnology, one of the most valuable works of research under the Government; the publications of the Astrophysical Observatory; of the International Exchanges of the International Catalogue of Scientific Literature; of the National Zoological Park; and the publications of the American Historical Association.

Here is a piece of constructive work. I do not believe that there is any other like it in this country. Its nearest approach is the Carnegie Institution for Research. I rose to call attention to it, and to commend the committee for the recognition of the noted work that this splendid center is doing in the way of research.

You are carrying one item of $7,000 for the American Historical Association, that was organized in 1884, and which has given an annual report ever since. To-day those reports constitute a splendid library. Among other most valuable contributions of this association of history students there are certain documents in the American Historical Association publications that are simply beyond estimate, such, for example, as the letters and writing of James K. Polk and the letters and writing of John C. Calhoun and others that would have been totally lost to the scholarship of this country and the students of United States history had it not been for an organization like the American Historical Association. Such valuable writings could not possibly be preserved any other way than by Government assistance, and I desire here and now to compliment the committee for its position in making it possible to continue this good work. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, may I be permitted to ask the gentleman from New York a question? What is his purpose in respect to continuing the session during the evening?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are going to try and finish the bill, and I think we can do it without any trouble.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is the intention to continue in session until late to-night?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think we can finish the bill shortly. I hope so.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Supreme Court of the United States, $15,000; and the printing for the Supreme Court shall be done by the printer it may employ unless it shall otherwise order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Chairman of the committee why the provision is carried that the printing for the Supreme Court shall be done by the printer that it may employ. Why is not that printing done by the Public Printer?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, for a number of years the United States Supreme Court has had a special printer who prints its decisions. The value of advance information of these decisions would be such that they have to take every precaution to prevent any leaks.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did not this provision follow some very important leaks?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some years ago there were some leaks, and then the Chief Justice requested that this authority be given; and since that time, I understand, there has been no premature information furnished.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no more than an allotment of one-half of the sum hereby appropriated for the public printing and for the public binding shall be expended in the first two quarters of the fiscal year, and no more than one-fourth thereof may be expended in either of the last two quarters of the fiscal year, except that, in addition thereto, in either of said last quarters the unexpended balances of allotments for preceding quarters may be expended; and no department or Government establishment shall consume in any such period a greater percentage of its allotment than can be lawfully expended during the same period of the whole appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Would the chairman of the committee be kind enough to tell us what is meant by the provision commencing on line 16, after the word "expended"—

And no department or Government establishment shall consume in any such period a greater percentage of its allotments than can be lawfully expended during the same period of the whole appropriation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the whole purpose of this paragraph has been to require the apportionment of the appropriation for printing in the various governmental services so as to prevent appropriations for printing being all used up in the first part of the fiscal year and large deficiencies created and pressure exerted for additional sums because important printing had to be done for which there was no money. This plan has been worked out, and it has been found that under its operation the departments, being compelled to make allotment of their work and distributed over the entire year, that it is one of the most corrective provisions in the prevention of waste and useless expenditure that public printing ever devised.

Mr. COX. It is new, is it not?

Mr. FOSTER. No; it is not new. It simply provides that these executive departments having charge of these appropriations must apportion them to the different periods and that no more than the apportionment for a particular period can be used in that period.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is all; and then if there is any unexpended balance from any one period, it may be used in the next period.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HARRISON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5861. An act to amend the postal and civil-service laws, and for other purposes; and

S. 5295. An act to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

June 19, 1914:

S. 55. An act for the relief of Daniel Hampton;

S. 2069. An act for the reimbursement of Jacob Wirth for two horses lost while hired by the United States Geological Survey; and

S. 2226. An act for the relief of Joel J. Parker.

June 16, 1914:

S. 4352. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

June 18, 1914:

S. 2590. An act to reimburse Charles C. Crowell for two months' extra pay in lieu of traveling expenses.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5295. An act to amend existing legislation providing for the acquisition of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, customhouse, and other governmental offices at Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 5861. An act to amend the postal and civil-service laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

No money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used for maintaining more than one branch of the Government Printing Office in any one building occupied by any executive department or departments of the Government, nor shall any branch of the Government Printing Office be established hereafter unless specifically authorized by law.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against this paragraph. First, I desire to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman can not do both. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is reserved.

Mr. HOWARD. I intended to reserve the point of order myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman can not do both.

Mr. HOWARD. Then I offer the amendment, as the gentleman from Illinois has reserved the point of order, if I may be permitted to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. While the point of order is pending nothing else can be done except to dispose of it.

Mr. MANN. What is the purpose of this provision?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was ascertained that employees were detailed from the Public Printing Office to the various departments of the Government——

Mr. FOWLER. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is, Is the point of order made?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 163, after line 8, insert the following: "No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any person employed in the Government Printing Office while detailed for or performing services in any other branch of the public service of the United States unless such detail be authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know just what effect that would have even upon Andy Smith.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He is not detailed here.

Mr. MANN. He is detailed here; that is exactly what he is. He is detailed to the Capitol; he is not in the Government Printing Office, but he is detailed to the Capitol.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He is the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, both by title and appropriation, and this does not affect him.

Mr. MANN. That is all true enough; he is CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, but he is detailed to the Capitol, paid by the Government Printing Office, and I think that amendment will cut him out. He is not the only one.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He is the only one in the category.

Mr. MANN. In the beginning of the last Congress the Democratic side of the House, in a moment of hysterical reform, cut off a number of employees who they said were useless; among them was the printing clerk. Ever since that time we have had, or shortly after that time, we have had a man detailed from the Government Printing Office to do work in part that the printing clerk used to do. I do not know just how we would get along; I suppose it is possible you might get the Democratic side to reverse its action; but it would be with great chagrin on their part if they had to do it. You can not run the House without somebody who has charge of the printing. That is not all. I only give these illustrations because I am familiar with this; I do not know how many others there are in the Government service. Usually at the close of a session of Congress the Committee on Accounts brings in a resolution providing for the employment of additional clerks by the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and we allow them, on the supposition that those clerks when employed temporarily are the ones who really make comparisons of enrolled bills; but what they do in fact is usually to employ somebody who does not know proofreading or an enrolled bill from an original copy; and the Public Printing Office details some men, who come up here and read the proof of the enrolled bills so that they may be correctly enrolled. Now, this amendment prohibits all that. In the last Congress there did slip through and was presented to the Speaker, to be signed as enrolled, the public-buildings bill, although it never passed. There were 100 Senate amendments never agreed to by this body. Now, what will happen when it comes to enrolling the sundry civil bill and the legislative bill and various other appropriation bills in the next few days before the 1st of July with nobody permitted to read proof who knows how. Why, what is the purpose of cutting off the right——

Mr. FITZGERALD. These people read proof where they are employed, and——

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The purpose is to cut off the detail of employees as was disclosed in the departments where they should not be.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is all right; I do not know as to that practice or not, but I know what the effect of this will be. The Public Printing Office people read the proof and make a comparison with the original copy and engrossed bill and conference reports and Senate amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We provide by legislation every year for additional clerks for the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. MANN. I have said that; but they are not the ones who read the proof and make the comparisons.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, they should do it; and if that practice were broken up this money would have to be paid to the people who do the work and not to the men who do nothing.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman again is somewhat in error. We have a very excellent engrossing and enrolling clerk under the present administration of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not criticizing him.

Mr. MANN. But, after all, there is a limit to what one or two men can do. Proof is supposed to be read by the Committee on Enrolled Bills, and the same comparison is supposed to be made by the clerk in charge of enrolled bills. But they have to have a detail sometimes from the Printing Office. The gentleman's amendment would prohibit that, and I do not think they ought to do it.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. HOWARD. I read the hearings on this particular item, and is it not a fact that all of these men that are detailed at these departments are paid out of the fund of that department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I would like the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It would obviate the objection of the gentleman if we would modify the amendment so it would provide that during the last two weeks of the session——

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman put in his amendment the executive departments?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I think it ought to go further than that.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the gentleman knows that you never can tell the last two weeks of a long session of Congress. Now, the situation is right here, that we will have the sundry civil bill, the legislative bill, the Agricultural bill, the naval appropriation bill, and probably the Diplomatic bill, all to be enrolled within possibly 48 hours' time, if they get them along far enough so that these bills become laws by the 1st of July. But you could not say it is the last two weeks of the session, and we could not if we were morally certain now that we were going to adjourn on the 1st of July.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask to modify the amendment by inserting the word "executive," so as to make it read "executive branch of the public service."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by inserting the word——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Inserting the word "executive" before the word "branch."

The CHAIRMAN. Insert the word "executive" before the word "branch."

Mr. BRYAN. I ask that it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GARDNER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the amendment reported as it would read if modified.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as it will read if modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any person employed in the Government Printing Office while detailed for or performing service in any other executive branch of the public service of the United States unless such detail be authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment being so modified? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question now is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, on this matter I want to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. In some of these executive departments is it not a fact that details are now transferred to help out in emergencies, and that in such cases the expense is borne by the particular department to which such employees are temporarily transferred?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are charged to the allotment of the printing fund of the department.

Mr. BRYAN. I am not sure, but I think some employees are at times transferred from the Printing Office to the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have been in a number of the departments. An investigation was made by the committee, and the committee reached the conclusion that they were merely obtaining clerical service at the expense of their printing allotment instead of value in printing for the service rendered. We want to stop that. All of the departments are given ample clerical service.

Mr. BRYAN. If there were a lot of extra clerks in the Printing Office, it seems to me there would be only economy to permit them to work in other departments in case of an emergency.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Most of the employees aimed at here are not per annum employees. They are paid by the hour. If there is no work, the pay ceases. This is a desirable reform.

Mr. BRYAN. Would it not require also each department to keep the employees of the department up to the maximum number all the time, and tend to increase expenditures on account of keeping the roll up to the maximum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. BRYAN. I think it would, and I hope you have fully considered the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mail-carrying system: To enable the Public Printer to install mechanical mail-conveying apparatus for conveying mail from the mailing section within the Government Printing Office to and through a tunnel from the Government Printing Office to the new city post-office building and to connect with the mail-conveying system of that building, including all necessary appliances and tunneling in the street, $30,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suppose that is subject to a point of order. It looks to me a little bit queer that the Public Printer is the one to have charge of the installation of mail-carrying devices to connect with mail-carrying machinery in the new post office. I supposed the Secretary of the Treasury, probably, or the Supervising Architect, had jurisdiction of the mail-carrying machinery in the new Post Office Building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This tunnel was under the control of the Public Printer, and an appropriation was given to him, if I recall correctly. This apparatus is to be utilized in the transfer of the public documents from the superintendent of documents to the cars and loading stations, and its installation reduces very perceptibly the force——

Mr. MANN. I am not objecting to the installation of the machinery, but it seemed queer to me that the Public Printer was the one to be authorized to go into the new post office and interfere there with mail-carrying machinery, or even to determine where this should end in the new Post Office Building.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The apparatus starts at the Government Printing Office and goes through the tunnel to the new building, and then they have these carriers in the Post Office Building. The intention is that these will be so built that they will deposit on the other carriers in the Post Office Building. It is not to give any authority to interfere there at all. I think the thing is to be worked out between the two services.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that it will be worked out between the two services; yet it would be better to have some one in control in the new Post Office Building, to determine how it would be worked out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the new city Post Office Building.

Mr. MONDELL. This is really an adjunct of the Government Printing Office. It is furnishing them with the means of reaching the post office.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

First. For salaries of officers and employees of the Isthmian Canal Commission, including assistant purchasing and shipping agents, and all other employees in the United States, $150,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To change the name of the Panama Canal Commission.

Mr. MANN. To strike out "the Isthmian Canal Commission"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order. I did not know but that the committee wanted to continue that commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 166, in lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "Isthmian Canal Commission" and insert the words "Panama Canal."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fifth. For the purchase and delivery of material, supplies, and equipment, including cost of inspecting material and of paying traveling expenses incident thereto, whether on the Isthmus or elsewhere, and such other expenses not in the United States as the commission deems necessary to best promote the construction of the Panama Canal, and such expenses as are incurred in assembling, sorting, storing, repairing, and selling material, supplies, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased or acquired for the construction of the Panama Canal, which are unserviceable or no longer needed, including the amount necessary to continue the construction of the two colliers provided for under the act approved June 23, 1913, subject to the limit of cost therein fixed, and including the payment of damages caused to the owners of private lands, or private property of any kind, by reason of the grants contained in the treaty between the United States and the Republic of Panama proclaimed February 26, 1904, or by reason of the operations of the United States, its agents or employees, or by reason of the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the said canal or of the works of sanitation and protection therein provided for, whether compromised by agreement between the claimant and the chairman of the commission or allowed by a joint commission, and the payment for land and land under water as authorized in section 3 of the Panama Canal act, for the departments of construction and engineering, quartermaster's, subsistence, disbursements, and examination of accounts, and including also payment to the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co., of Wheeling, W. Va., of the sum of $9,076.21, to carry into effect an equitable settlement with that company, which could not be made by reason of the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, this sum having been deducted as liquidated damages on the various contracts, and being in excess of the actual damages to the commission, $9,000,000.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to inquire about the item of $9,076.21.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. had some very extensive contracts on the Isthmus; and under the contracts it was provided that there should be certain deductions if the work was not completed within the time fixed. That, I think, was the form in which the first contract was made. The others provided that there should be certain deductions if the work was not completed within the time fixed, provided the Government was put to any expense or suffered any damages as the result of the failure to complete. There was over $100,000 involved in the adjustments, because the first contract was worded a trifle differently from the others. The sum of $9,076.21, which would have been waived because the Government has suffered no damage on account of the delay if the additional provision had been in the first contract, could not be waived; and the officials in charge of the work recommend that these allowances be made, because there was no damage sustained.

Mr. BARTON. That is the point I wanted to make, that it was recommended by the officials there that this reimbursement be made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; it was recommended by Col. Goethals, and that is the amount that he fixed. I have a letter here that I will ask leave to insert in the RECORD. It will explain the item so that there can be no question about it. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to insert the letter in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

PANAMA CANAL, WASHINGTON OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 20, 1914.

Mr. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
Chairman of the Appropriation Committee,
House of Representatives, United States., Washington, D. C.

SIR: I inclose herewith copy of letter from Col. Goethals, the governor of the Panama Canal, in connection with a request made to you by the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co., of Wheeling, W. Va., for the insertion in the sundry civil bill of a clause permitting payment to them of approximately $9,000. It is noted that this letter from Col. Goethals commences with quoting a cablegram from the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. indicating that the clause was not included in the sundry civil bill, which cable, of course, was incorrect in view of the fact that the sundry civil bill had not yet been reported out of your committee.

In brief, the amount which the governor feels should be paid to the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. is $9,076.21, but under the present contracts this amount can not be paid. It is thought that a brief clause could be inserted in the bill to the following effect:

"For payment to the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co., of Wheeling, W. Va. of the sum of $9,076.21, to carry into effect an equitable settlement with that company, which could not be made by reason of the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury, this sum having been deducted as liquidated damages on the various contracts and being in excess of the actual damages to the commission."

Very respectfully,

F. C. BOGGS,
Major, Corps of Engineers, United States Army,
Chief of Office.

P. S.—It is noted that I am addressing this letter to you instead of to the chairman of the Senate Appropriation Committee, in view of the fact that it was apparently Col. Goethals's impression that the sundry civil bill had already been reported out of your committee.

W. O. 2403S, 2650S, 2660S-A, 2660S-B, 27467, AND 27467-B. RELIEF FROM LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

CULEBRA, CANAL ZONE, May 8, 1914.

Maj. F. C. BOGGS,
United States Army, General Purchasing Officer,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of the following cablegram from the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co.:

"Item nine thousand not included sundry bill. We explained Fitzgerald according your instructions. Would you cable him our behalf?"

The matter referred to is set forth in my letter of October 3, 1913, and subsequent correspondence. Briefly reviewed, it is as follows:

The Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. had six contracts with the Isthmian Canal Commission for fixed irons and machines for moving gates and valves in the locks of the Panama Canal, the total consideration of these contracts amounting to $1,699,208.68. All of these contracts provided for payment of liquidated damages in case of delinquency in time of delivery on the part of the contractor. One of these contracts—for 90 gate-moving machines—provided that any delay which did not cause damage or inconvenience to the Government might be waived by the commission in computing the liquidated damages. The remaining contracts would have contained such a provision had it not been for a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury in force at the time such contracts were drawn to the effect that such waiver provision would vitiate the entire liquidated-damage clause and render it impossible to collect damages for delays which did actually cause damage or inconvenience to the Government. This ruling was reversed before the contract for the 90 gate-moving machines was made, and the optional waiver clause was therefore inserted in that contract.

A tabulated statement of the contracts is below:

W. O.	Subject.	Circular No.	Liquidated damages deducted.	Release signed.	Remarks.
2403S	Fixed irons for valves, etc.	594	$12,204.46	No.	No waiver clause.
2660S	2 cylindrical and Stoney valve machines.	614	2,905.29	No.	Do.
2660S-A	118 cylindrical valve machines.	614	3,215.15	No.	Do.
2660S-B	114 Stoney valve machine	614	23,058.48	No.	Do.
27467	2 gate-moving machines..	627	2,407.96	No.	Do.
27467-B	90 gate-moving machines.	627	55,427.95	No.	Optional waiver clause.

The quotations of the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. in all of these contracts were reasonable, and it is especially to be noted that the contracts under W. O. 2660S, 2660S-A, and 2660S-B, which aggregate $795,950.01, were less by a total of about $500,000 than the cost of the same work based on offers made for about one-third of it at a letting attempted some few months earlier. The early bids were rejected, the work readvertised, and given to the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. at the above-stated very large saving.

The Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. was delinquent in time of completion of the different contracts and liquidated damages were assessed against the company, as tabulated above. It protested against the deductions, the principal grounds being that the Government had not suffered damage by reason of delay in completing delivery, and that the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. had suffered damage by reason of the Government not making final payment for the machines as promptly as the contract called for. In point of fact, much of the delay in delivery had caused no damage or inconvenience to the Government, and liquidated damages for such delay would have been waived had the contract permitted it. Further, the Government had been necessarily slow in making final inspection and payment for the machines after they arrived on the Isthmus, for reasons beyond its control; and the company had a just and unliquidated claim on that score.

Nevertheless, the Government had suffered to a certain extent by reason of the delay. Taking all circumstances into consideration, and offsetting the contractor's counterclaim on account of delayed payments, it was estimated that out of a total of $102,857.48 assessed as liquidated damages all but an amount of, say, $22,500 could properly be remitted. Had the contracts been drawn in the usual form, giving the Government authority to waive delays from which no damage had resulted, settlement would have been effected with the contractors on this basis. There being no such authority in the contracts, however, except in the case of the one for 90 miter gate-moving machines, a supplemental contract was prepared along these lines and submitted to the Comptroller of the Treasury, who, under date of October 9, 1913, ruled against its legality. Through subsequent action by your office, set forth especially in your letters of January 16 and February 4, 1914, and in a decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury dated January 27, 1914, sent under cover of your letter of February 3, 1914, payments were made to the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. until the sum remaining withheld from them was reduced from $102,857.48 to $31,576.21, or to a sum greater by $9,076.21 than the sum in which it was estimated that the Isthmian Canal Commission had suffered damage or inconvenience through the delinquency of the contractor.

For relief from payment of this sum of $9,076.21 the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. has sought aid from Congress. From the tenor of the cable dispatch quoted in the first paragraph of this letter it appears that the sundry civil bill does not contain the item which the company desired to have included. The company asks that I cable Mr. FITZGERALD on this subject. Such action would, I think, be too late to serve its intended purpose. I believe, however, that this sum should be remitted to the company, and, as heretofore stated, I should have remitted it had it been legally in my power to do so. I therefore request that you take the matter up with the chairman of the Senate committee, which has the bill in charge, in order that during consideration of the bill the committee may have its facts at hand and may be in a position to introduce the item in the bill, should it concur in my opinion that the allowance of this sum to the Wheeling Mold & Foundry Co. is just and reasonable.

Respectfully,

GEO. W. GOETHALS,
Governor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 167, in line 13, after the word "elsewhere," insert ": purchase, maintenance, and repair of motor cars, fire-fighting apparatus, towing locomotives, and other motor-propelled vehicles"; and in line 14 strike out the word "Commission" and insert the word "Canal."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the vote on the two amendments will be taken together.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Seventh. For pay of officers and employees of the department of civil administration, including foremen, subforemen, skilled and unskilled labor, watchmen, messengers, and storekeepers, of the departments of civil administration and law, including those necessarily and temporarily detailed for duty away from the Isthmus, $500,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 169, in line 14, after the word "Isthmus," insert "and for expenses of the official representation of Congress attending the formal opening of the canal."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the canal is to be formally opened some time in March after the adjournment of Congress. It is assumed that some arrangement will be made so that there will be official representation of Congress on that occasion. This will enable whatever expense is connected with it to be paid out of this particular appropriation, which is the one out of which it should be paid.

Mr. MOORE. That would come out of the $500,000 provided for here?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Twelfth. For material, supplies, equipment, construction and repairs of buildings, medical aid and support of the insane and of indigent persons permanently disabled while in line of duty and in the employ of the Isthmian Canal Commission from earning a livelihood, and contingent expenses of the department of sanitation on the Isthmus, including not exceeding $75,000 for removal of quarantine station from Culebra Island to the vicinity of Balboa and for converting the hospital at Colon into a quarantine station and for new equipment for both, $375,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 170, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "Isthmian Canal Commission" and insert the words "Panama Canal."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in connection with that amendment may I ask the gentleman is there any specific appropriation made, or necessary if not made, for the payment of compensation to employees who are injured on the canal work?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will find that in lines 4 and 5, on the next page, the paragraph commencing—

The foregoing sums so far as necessary shall be available for * * * payment of claims arising out of injuries or death of employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $20,718,000, the same to be immediately available and to continue available until expended: Provided, That all expenditures from the appropriations heretofore, herein, and hereafter made for the construction of the Panama Canal, including any portion of such appropriations which may be used for the construction of dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances, for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies, for the construction of office buildings and quarters, and other necessary buildings, exclusive of fortifications and colliers, and exclusive of the amount used for operating and maintaining the canal, and for the permanent organization after the canal is opened for use and operation, may be paid from or reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds authorized in section 8 of the said act approved June 28, 1902, and section 39 of the tariff act approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order against the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against the proviso. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Except in cases of emergency or conditions arising subsequent to and unforeseen at the time of submitting the annual estimates to Congress, and except for those employed in connection with the construction of permanent quarters, offices and other necessary buildings, dry docks, repair shops, yards, docks, wharves, warehouses, storehouses, and other necessary facilities and appurtenances for the purpose of providing coal and other materials, labor, repairs, and supplies, and except for the permanent operating organization under which the compensation of the various positions is limited by section 4 of the Panama Canal act there shall not be employed at any time during the fiscal year 1915 under any of the foregoing appropriations for the Panama Canal any greater number of persons than are specified in the notes submitted, respectively, in connection with the estimates for each of said appropriations in the annual Book of Estimates for said year, nor shall there be paid to any of such persons during that fiscal year any greater rate of compensation than was authorized to be paid to persons occupying the same or like positions on the 1st day of July, 1913; and all employments made or compensation increased because of emergencies or conditions so arising shall be specifically set forth, with the reasons therefor, by the chairman of the commission in his report for the fiscal year 1915.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 173, line 3, strike out the words "chairman of the commission" and insert the word "governor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Obstacles—
Two thousand five hundred coils of barbed wire, at $3 each, $7,500.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what is the purpose to be served by this barbed wire?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is to be used for obstacles to prevent the rapid advance of Infantry.

Mr. HAWLEY. Like the famous trochas in Cuba during the Spanish War.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To make obstructions to passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all funds collected by the government of the Canal Zone from rentals of public lands and buildings in the Canal Zone and the cities of Panama and Colon, and from the zone postal service, and from court fees and fines, and collected or raised by taxation in whatever form under the laws of the government of the Canal Zone, are hereby appropriated until and including June 30, 1915, as follows: The revenues derived from the postal service to the maintenance of that service; the remaining revenues, including any balances unexpended in prior years, after setting aside a miscellaneous and contingent fund of not exceeding $10,000, to the maintenance of the public-school system in the zone; to the construction and maintenance of public improvements within the zone; to the maintenance of the administrative districts; and for the expenses of the subdivisions of the Canal Zone after they are established under section 7 of the Panama Canal act; to the maintenance of Canal Zone charity patients in the hospitals of the Isthmian Canal Commission; and to the maintenance of administrative district prisoners: Provided, That if the revenues of the Canal Zone government are not sufficient for the purposes herein specified, the necessary part of the amounts appropriated for the departments of civil administration and law, under items 7 and 9, may be used therefor. A detailed and classified statement of all receipts and expenditures without the duplication of items under this paragraph shall be submitted to Congress after the close of the fiscal year 1915.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 176, in lines 6 and 7, strike out the words "Isthmian Canal Commission" and insert the words "Panama Canal."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What was the amount expended for these purposes at the last date that the gentleman has? Here we make a definite appropriation out of certain receipts, and then say that if those receipts are not enough for the purposes we are authorized to take out of two other items any amount that they may see proper to take. What is the total of these expenditures, if the gentleman has them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will state the amount in a moment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will recall that there have been efforts made down there to construct some very expensive and unnecessary roads, which progressed at one time far enough to require Col. Goethals, now Gov. Goethals, to set his foot down pretty hard. Of course there is no limitation to the amount they may expend in that way, if they get the head of the government there to approve it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They actually expended in the civil government in 1913 $81,000. The receipts for 1913 were $212,266.83. The estimated receipts for 1915 are $86,075. They expect a very material falling off next year.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That during the fiscal year 1915 all moneys received by the governor of the Panama Canal from any services rendered or materials and supplies furnished to employees of the United States or of the Panama Railroad Co., to the Panama Railroad Co., to the Canal Zone government, to the Panama Government, and to other departments of the United States Government from hotel and hospital supplies and services; from rentals, wharfage, etc.; from labor, materials, and supplies and other services furnished to vessels and to those unable to obtain similar labor, materials, supplies, and services elsewhere; from the sale of scrap and other by-products of manufacturing and shop operations; from the sale of obsolete and unserviceable material, supplies, and equipment purchased or acquired for the operation, maintenance, protection, sanitation, and government of the canal and Canal Zone; and from exchanges of typewriting, adding, and other machines, shall be credited to the appropriation from which payments for the materials, supplies, labor, or other services were originally made. Moneys heretofore or hereafter received from the sale of material, supplies, and equipment purchased or acquired for the construction of the Panama Canal, after deducting all expenses of assembling, sorting, storing, repairing, and selling such material, supplies, and equipment, which deductions shall be credited to the appropriations from which such expenses are paid, and the moneys received as a reimbursement for the expenditures incurred in constructing waterworks, sewers, and pavements in the cities of Panama and Colon, including interest on such expenditures, excluding payments on account of the expenses for maintenance of such waterworks, sewers, and pavements incurred under agreement with the Panama Government, and otherwise herein disposed of, shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. After the canal is opened for use and operation the net profits accruing during the fiscal year 1915 from the operations herein authorized shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, as provided for the profits accruing from the business authorized in section 6 of the Panama Canal act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on section 3. I see that it is proposed to credit to some appropriation, whatever it may be, the proceeds of the sale of all the scrap and also the proceeds of the sale of obsolete and unserviceable supplies and equipment. Why should not that go into miscellaneous receipts?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it should ordinarily, but the gentleman from Illinois will remember that a different policy was adopted in regard to the canal. As these materials were all purchased out of the different appropriations, the proceeds from the sale of them is credited back, so that the total appropriations for the canal will not be more than it actually cost.

Mr. MANN. That is all very well, but the canal construction work is done. The locks are finished. Suppose they sell some obsolete material there, and they have a large amount of both material and machinery, what good does it do to credit that in the Treasury to this fund? They have more or less material down there purchased from the French Government, not very much.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; they have considerable.

Mr. MANN. What are you going to credit that to, the original purchase of $40,000,000? There it is in the Treasury, and there is no way to get it out without an appropriation. I understand they expect to sell a very large amount of this material.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They do. The cost of all this material is charged to the cost of the canal.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And if they sell a part of it, they have saved that much from the total cost.

Mr. MANN. They are entitled when they sell any of it, or transfer it to the Alaska Railroad Commission, to a credit of that amount. They get the benefit of that credit, but you say "credited to the account."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under this they get the benefit of the proceeds also. They are in the finishing-up stage there.

Mr. MANN. We have machinery there that ought to sell for millions of dollars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not, but it may, however.

Mr. MANN. Of course I do not mean hundreds of millions but millions. Now, does the committee propose to have that brought in and credited to the different items in the appropriation bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been a continuing appropriation. These appropriations are not affected by the covering-in act.

Mr. MANN. I understand that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In one way it is a sort of protection for these funds against the possibility of not having sufficient money when Congress is not in session. We have done this on the other material that was sold.

Mr. MANN. That material was sold down there, but I do not think I shall be arbitrary about it. Here is a large amount of material to be sold, and there comes a great temptation, perhaps, to some officer to sell it for a lower price than he would otherwise get in order to credit it to some fund under his control.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This only applies to this year. We have been urged to give them authority to extend it over a period of years and permit the employment of a business concern to handle all this material, but the committee refused to do that.

Mr. MANN. The same people have been to me about that part of it. While this only applies to this year, it may make it more urgent upon some one to sell it this year at a low price, because during this year they get the credit for it. But I do not wish to have anyone think I am in the attitude of criticizing these officials down there, for whom I have the utmost respect and in whom I have the greatest confidence, but I do not think it is a good business proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the next fiscal year we will practically complete the construction period. Beyond that the uniform policy that has been adopted for the canal I believe should be changed.

Mr. MANN. I feel a little modest on this subject, because yesterday when I took exception to some sort of a proposition I was not able to lead by own side of the House. They voted in favor of gentlemen who gave me nothing but personal abuse, so I feel a little modest about making a point of order against the gentleman's proposition when I can not even take care of my own people.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I heard the gentleman's speech and I knew what was in the bill.

Mr. MANN. So did I. I made the speech and I knew what was in the bill. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the consolidation of the functions of receiving, disbursing, and accounting for the funds of the Canal Zone government and the Panama Railroad operations on the Isthmus with the functions of receiving, disbursing, and accounting for the funds appropriated for the Panama Canal shall be and is hereby authorized in so far as may be practicable: Provided, That separate accounts shall be kept of the transactions under each fund.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee some questions in respect to it. It seems to me that the following language is ambiguous:

That the consolidation of the functions of receiving, disbursing, and accounting for the funds of the Canal Zone government, etc.

"Functions of accounting" is the language that I desire to direct attention to. In the accounting there are practically two divisions of the government, the administrative accounting, which is done by regular bookkeeping processes in the various administrative offices, by which they may at all times be acquainted with the debits, credits, and balances and of all the moneys under their jurisdiction, and then there is the Treasury accounting, which is done by the Treasury Department here, and, as I understand, a committee of three was sent from the Treasury Department to make a report, and the report was accepted by the Treasury Department, embodying the ideas of the department and of that committee, setting out forms that they would advocate and approve, and this, it seems to me, would put the functions of auditing in the hands of the men who have the disbursement of the money, and take it out of the power of others.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This particular paragraph has reference to this situation. We have at present on the Isthmus two separate organizations, one in connection with the Panama Railroad——

Mr. BARTON. I understand that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And one in connection with the canal. This is to consolidate those functions as much as possible.

Mr. BARTON. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And to make one organization. The next paragraph is the one which I think perhaps the gentleman from Nebraska has in mind.

Mr. BARTON. I have some points on the next paragraph, and unless it is amended I expect to make a point of order to it. I think the functions of receiving, disbursing, and accounting mean the Treasury Department of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is true; but it is to abolish the two organizations and just have one organization.

Mr. BARTON. Yes. To make this a matter of record, will the gentleman say that this does not in any manner conflict with the authority of the Treasury Department in auditing?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. BARTON. That is all I want. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. There is a typographic error in the paragraph which should be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that will be corrected, without objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the collecting officers of the Panama Canal shall render their accounts in such detail, and shall transmit with their accounts to the accounting officers charged with the settlement thereof all such papers, records, and copies relating to their transactions as collectors as shall be prescribed in regulations approved by the President.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Nebraska that the Comptroller of the Treasury raised the question suggested by the gentleman from Nebraska about this paragraph.

Mr. BARTON. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. After a conference it was suggested that an amendment, which I intend to present, be offered, which obviates the objection that he has. It is to add after the word "President" the following:

And in his judgment not incompatible with the methods of accounting prescribed in the so-called Dockery Act, approved July 31, 1894.

The Dockery Act prescribes certain forms of accounting and puts the methods under the comptroller. I understand that the so-called Warwick committee, which the gentleman has in mind, and the canal officials are working in harmony, and this proposed amendment meets the objections of the Comptroller of the Treasury upon whom, under the law, would fall the duty generally of prescribing forms and methods of accounting.

Mr. BARTON. There is another ambiguous proposition in the language in this section:

Accounting officers charged with the settlement thereof—

And so forth.

What accounting officers? Would the gentleman object to saying "of the Treasury"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The accounting officers charged with the settlement thereof.

Mr. BARTON. Yes; that is the question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is satisfactory—of the Treasury.

Mr. BARTON. If the gentleman will say that, that will satisfy me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what was intended, and I will offer that amendment and also offer the following amendment. I will ask first to offer an amendment to insert after the word "officers," in line 17, the words "of the Treasury."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 178, line 17, after the word "officers," insert the words "of the Treasury."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, I offer the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 178, at the end of line 20, after the word "President," strike out the period and insert the following: "and in his judgment not incompatible with the methods of accounting prescribed in the so-called Dockery Act approved July 31, 1894."

Mr. MANN. Is there a comma after the word "judgment"?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not.

Mr. MANN. There ought to be. I move to insert a comma after the word "judgment."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the appropriations herein made for the Panama Canal, other than those for fortifications, or balances thereof, may be available, during the last half of the fiscal year 1915, for expenditure for the purposes indicated by the several titles enumerated in the foregoing section, namely, construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and civil government, and be accounted for at the end of that year in such detail or classification, respectively, thereunder as may be determined by the Governor of the Panama Canal, or hereafter required by Congress; and such balances may, on and after January 1, 1915, constitute one fund for expenditure under said respective titles.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this section. The law—Statutes at Large, volume 26, page 413—provides:

SEC. 4. That hereafter all disbursing officers of the United States shall render their accounts quarterly, and the Secretary of the Senate shall render his accounts as heretofore, but the Secretary of the Treasury may direct any or all such accounts to be rendered more frequently when, in his judgment, the public interests require.

Why should this section provide for an annual statement rather than comply with the present law and render the statements quarterly, or oftener if called for by the Treasury Department?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The object of this is——

Mr. BARTON. This section says the funds are to be accounted for at the end of the year, when in every other department they have to make these statements quarterly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On the completion of the work of construction there will be a balance in the various funds, and the purpose of the language of this provision is that in the last half of the fiscal year 1915 one lumped-sum appropriation may be expended for these purposes. It is to clean up a great construction job, and it does not change in any way the final settlements of account by the auditor, but it is to be consolidated in one fund at the finish of scattered and various funds, so that the work may be cleaned up and ended expeditiously.

Mr. BARTON. Can the gentleman state any reason why that should not be accounted for at the end of each quarter the same as all other Government funds are accounted for?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This does not affect the accounting at the end of each quarter at all.

Mr. BARTON. It does not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; but instead of maintaining these eight funds separately after half the fiscal year they are all made one fund.

Mr. BARTON. And those in authority in the zone are supposed to make quarterly statements the same as the others?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We do not take away any limitation in respect to the quarterly accounting. There is no intention in any way to remove the limitation for accounting.

Mr. BARTON. With that statement, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But if there should be any question of that, I will be very glad to make that as specific as it can be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That section 196 of the Revised Statutes is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 196. The head of each executive department or other branch of the public service and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall furnish to the Public Printer copies of the documents accompanying their annual reports on or before the 15th day of October of each year and copies of their annual reports on or before the 15th day of November of each year. Complete revised proofs of the accompanying documents and the annual reports shall be returned to the Public Printer on or before the 10th and 20th days of November of each year, respectively. Annual reports which do not conform to the provisions of this section shall be transmitted in manuscript to Congress, accompanied by a full statement explanatory of such failure, and shall not be printed except upon the express authority of Congress."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon that section. What does the gentleman expect to accomplish by this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The purpose is to enable Members of Congress to obtain copies of the annual reports of the various heads of departments some time before the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Well, but suppose a head of a department does not furnish a report within the time? He has no penalty put upon him. The Government may be put to the expense of getting out of the Government Printing Office a proof and having it copied in longhand in order to send it to Congress in manuscript, or he may have the printed copy of these documents in his possession, and he can not even use the printed copy he has got, but he must have that reduced in longhand again after it has been reduced from longhand to type.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not say that.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what a manuscript copy is, possibly, but it certainly is not a proof. They send the manuscript copy to the Printing Office; it is set up in type, and the manuscript copy is cut up for the benefit of the typesetters. That is gone. They furnish proof copies of it. But that will not do. He has to reduce it to manuscript before he can send it to Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That proof is manuscript.

Mr. MANN. That is not manuscript. Everybody knows the difference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Everybody knows the difference between manuscript and a proof copy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not a printer.

Mr. MANN. Well, I have been.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it will be effective. In short sessions of Congress, as the gentleman from Illinois is aware, by the time the committees preparing appropriation bills have finished their work, the annual reports commence coming in.

Mr. MANN. I am one of the numerous Members of Congress who have these annual reports laid on their desks. I want to say that I go through them all, and I suppose the rest of the Members do. And I cited here that not long ago the law required the Interstate Commerce Commission to present its annual report to Congress on the first Monday of December of each year, and that they never had done it, although it criticized severely in its last annual report other people because they did not furnish their reports in the time required. But it is not done and it is not likely to be done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But it will be done.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. Here are a lot of documents to come with the reports. It is not feasible always to have them in at the proper time, and if they were all presented at the Government Printing Office at one time the office could not print them all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We know these reports do not come in on time, and that they do not come in because the departments do not prepare the manuscripts in time. We got a statement from the Public Printer as to the date when he received his manuscripts and when he sent his proofs back. We got an annual report some time the latter part of May that should have been out in December or earlier.

Mr. MANN. The custom has been in the past where the department sent the manuscripts to the Printing Office, and after they got to the proof reading a man from the Government Printing Office went to the department to assist and read the proof so as to expedite the thing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not what they were there for.

Mr. MANN. And you cut that out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They went up there ostensibly to arrange these matters. Some of the men of these departments who are preparing manuscripts for printers have such peculiar notions as to how material should be arranged that the Public Printer said he thought it was an advantage to send a man who knew something about the printing establishment to arrange their copy for them.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; and you cut that out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was a wise thing to cut out. I would like to try this once. I have been criticizing these departments——

Mr. MANN. I would like to know more about it before we try it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You never will know any more about this item than the gentleman does now if we do not change it.

Mr. MANN. But put in a provision providing some other penalty upon them in some way, without fixing it so they have got to do an impossible thing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The biggest penalty to these men is not to give publicity to their reports. The report is the one thing they look forward to. One of the reasons these reports are not sent to Congress in time is that the department makes the suggestion of the date on which the report of the heads of the departments will be given to the public, and you can not get a copy of their report in advance of the day the newspapers of the country are to carry in blazing headlines the astounding record of the accomplishments and the expression of the hopes of the head of the bureau for the ensuing year.

Mr. MANN. I would say to the gentleman that if I were the head of one of these departments I would be greatly tempted to follow the provisions of this proposition and send my manuscript to the House of Representatives, where it would be ordered printed, as a matter of course, and paid for out of the congressional printing fund, and have that much more money in that department to spend for something else.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But Congress might not print the report.

Mr. MANN. It goes as a matter of course.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not go as a matter of course.

Mr. MANN. Every document of that sort that comes here is ordered printed. It does not take the action of the House, even.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It provides it shall not be printed except by express authority of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. All these things are printed by the express authority of Congress.

I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is merely a limitation, not to print them.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. Appropriations herein for printing and binding shall not be used for any annual report or the accompanying documents unless the head of each executive department, or other branch of the public service, or the Commissioners of the District of Columbia making such a report shall furnish copy to the Public Printer in the following manner: Copies of the documents accompanying such annual reports on or before the 15th day of October of each year; copies of the annual reports on or before the 15th day of November of each year; and complete revised proofs of the accompanying documents and the annual reports on the 10th and 20th days of November of each year, respectively. The provisions of this section shall not apply to the annual reports of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Regents do not meet prior to the first Monday in December.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I say the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution represent that they do not meet before the first Monday in December, and it would be impossible for them to comply with the provision.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with it. They have nothing to do with the printing of the annual report. However, I do not think it ought to be done. If you are going to put it in, you ought to put it in as section 9. Is that the idea?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. Make it section 9.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That it shall not be lawful hereafter to pay to any person, employed in the service of the United States under any general or lump-sum appropriation, any sum additional to the regular compensation received for or attached to any employment held prior to an appointment or designation as acting for or instead of an occupant of any other office or employment. This provision shall not be construed as prohibiting regular and permanent appointments by promotion from lower to higher grades of employments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the section. What does it mean?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have discovered a situation like this: Where there is a vacancy at the head of an office and the assistant is designated as the acting head he has been paid the compensation of the head of the office.

Mr. MANN. I do not quite get it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will give a specific instance. The commissioner of immigration in the city of New York receives compensation of $6,500 a year. The deputy receives $4,500 a year. The deputy is in the classified service. The commissionership has been vacant since the 1st of last July. An order was signed by the head of the department designating the deputy commissioner of immigration as the acting commissioner of immigration, and he is paid at the rate of $6,500 per year.

Mr. MANN. He performs the duties, does he not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He is performing the duties that would devolve upon him naturally as deputy, but this is the only branch in the entire Government service where anything like that could be done.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that in the Diplomatic Service it is provided for by law in that very way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a specific provision of law for that purpose. That is where a minister or an ambassador is absent from his post of duty.

Mr. MANN. Would not this provision repeal that law?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No, sir.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because the statute specifically provides for that in the Diplomatic Service.

Mr. MANN. For the salary, you mean?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is only to apply to general lump-sum appropriations. It is only out of such appropriations that the prohibition is made against paying to the deputy the salary of the chief. A short time ago, as the gentleman will recall, there was a vacancy in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the deputy acted as Comptroller. He could not receive the compensation.

Mr. MANN. He has not received it, you mean? The gentleman said "he could not."

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has not.

Mr. MANN. But he is trying very hard to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If he had been in the Immigration Service, paid out of this lump-sum appropriation, he would have received it.

Now, I have received information that there are some other lump appropriations in which, according to the statute, these designations were made, but I have not information sufficiently accurate to state the instances.

Mr. MANN. If the committee has been over this subject carefully, I will withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraws his point of order.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the report on the bill amending the general dam act.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the report referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the report referred to:

[House Report No. 592, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

"CONSTRUCTION OF DAMS ACROSS NAVIGABLE WATERS.

"Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 16053:

"The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16053) to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

"Before acting on the subject, as per the bill herewith reported, your committee gave long, thorough, and patient attention to every phase of the subject, considered all the different views and shades of opinion entertained and advanced by many people, who have discussed the question from various angles and viewpoints. Your committee has endeavored to find a true basis or common ground on which those entertaining various and divergent views on minor details might agree, in order that legislation might be secured and progress promoted toward the accomplishment of the purposes of the bill.

"It was not the original intent of those who conceived and framed the general dam act to deal with all water power, nor all questions affecting water powers, nor was it originally intended to deal with questions affecting water-power sites on the Government public lands, nor with projects promoted by the Government at the expense of the Treasury for the promotion of navigation solely, though incidentally providing in many cases magnificent heads of water for the generation of power and hydroelectricity. There were many thousands of miles of shoally streams affording sufficient water to maintain navigation if the water could be controlled, canalized, and thrown into slack-water pools. The cost of such work, if undertaken by the Government, to promote navigation only would obviously be prohibitive. No commerce was borne upon the streams or the parts thereof to be affected by such legislation; they were not in condition for navigation, yet the resources of the contiguous country were so abundant as to call for transportation facilities, and those offered by railroads, if any at all, were totally inadequate.

"Many communities needed light, fuel, and power for manufacturing purposes and the electric force and heat to extract from the air elements for fertilizers realized in the manufacture of calcium cyanamid or atmospheric nitrogen. Many other possibilities of profitable commerce appealed to private capital to develop power on those shoally streams. The lands belonged to private individuals; they were located in States which could charter corporations, authorize development of water power, tax them, and regulate their practices and charges, but those streams were all under the jurisdiction of the United States Government in so far as the right of navigation was concerned. The owners of the land were prohibited by law from obstructing those streams without the consent of Congress. It was to the interest of the public to secure navigation, which the Government could not, or would not, furnish on account of the high cost, and the owners of the property could not develop the water power and promote navigation without the consent of the Government, and would not do so unless the consent of the Government was granted on terms sufficiently attractive to invite capital to invest under the hope of reasonable profit. So the original legislation was framed to accomplish two objects: First and primarily to promote navigation on streams which otherwise would never be navigable. The navigation could be secured by inducing private capital to construct locks and dams in the same manner under the approval and direction of the War Department as they would be constructed by the Government if the Government would do the work at all; and, secondly, to permit the development of the resources and the progress of the industries of the countries through which those streams ran by encouraging the development of possible water power on those streams. Possibly the smallest use to which the water power would be devoted would be the generation and transmission of hydroelectricity, but even the value of that to the public would be incalculable. It is in every respect a successful competitor of all kinds of fuel, as it affords heat for warmth, cooking, and culinary purposes, and light more cheaply, more cleanly, more conveniently, and more safely than can be done by means of any other known element or method.

"Certain patriotic and benevolent persons, whose motives were no doubt good, obviously misunderstood the purposes of the general dam act, confounded it with the interests of the General Government in other respects, confused it with propositions connected with the public domain, and raised objections which have retarded progress and perhaps for many years banished capital from the country which, if encouraged in accordance with the purposes of the general dam act, would have secured the completion of many projects valuable to our people. In fact, a great many of the projects authorized by law have entirely failed on account of opposition, misguided and ill grounded, as we believe. Other projects on which the investors have struggled against a rising tide of criticism and opposition, although in a measure completed, have proven unprofitable because markets have not been found for their light and power. In some cases when the investors sought to create a market by enlarging their plants through other developments they have been defeated in the effort and have thus failed to realize on their investments.

"In reporting this bill to amend the general dam act we have tried faithfully to protect all the interests of the Government in every project for which the consent of Congress may be granted, at the same time imposing such fair and moderate terms and conditions of the consent of Congress as may induce capital to relieve the Government of the expense of promoting navigation by furnishing the capital and constructing the works in the hope of reasonable returns on investments. We conceive the prime consideration of the Government to be the promotion of navigation, and we believe there are streams on which several thousands of miles of navigation can be promoted under the terms of this bill without any expense to the Government. Next to that our care has been to provide that the public shall be treated fairly by the grantees, and we have provided, therefore, for prompt and certain as well as just and reasonable regulation as to rates and practices; and to this end it is provided that if any State in which a project is chartered fails to protect the public by such regulation the Secretary of War shall do so.

"We have not provided for any specific tax upon the business of the enterprise. If the Federal Government should conclude that it is necessary to take away from the States the matter of water power as an object of taxation, we consider that a proper and safe way to do that is for the Ways and Means Committee to report a bill for levying a uniform excise tax upon all water power or hydroelectric development, or upon water-power sites developed or undeveloped. We have deemed that course proper in order to secure a bill that will promise development, which would be entirely prevented by adopting the other course. We have also provided against monopolies and combinations, and provided every precaution to protect not only the Government but the people of the United States in any possible contingency arising from operation of projects under this bill.

"Yielding to the pressure from many directions we have included in the present bill authority for the Secretary of War to accommodate communities and derive some revenue for the Government from projects constructed wholly at the expense of the Government by leasing on satisfactory terms, with proper safeguards, the surplus water not needed for navigation at such projects. For the same reason we have also included a provision permitting the use of public lands for dam projects on terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of War where the structure proposed is to be in a navigable stream, for be it remembered that this bill deals only with portions of streams which are only theoretically navigable, but which could be made navigable, as we believe, under the operation of the legislation proposed.

"Your committee has deemed it proper to print the bill, for convenience of examination and ready understanding, so marked and distinguished as to show the existing law brought forward and the new law proposed by the amendment.

"Your committee will briefly analyze and state, as follows, the new provisions of this bill:

"The bill reforms existing law by collocating and paragraphing all provisions relating to particular parts of the subject, so that it may be more conveniently examined and understood. The changes in existing law are substantially as follows:

"Section 2 provides that at the time of original approval the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall determine whether or not they shall require the owner, at his expense, to construct a lock as a part of that original project. If not then required, Congress may direct afterwards that a lock shall be installed at public expense, in which case title to land required for construction and power for building, operation, and maintenance may be required to be furnished by the owner of the dam.

"Section 3 changes existing law so that the comprehensive plan required by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall consider the use of water for all beneficial purposes, and that plan shall be adopted which best utilizes the water resources of the region.

"Section 4, paragraph (b), changes existing law by providing that the compensation required from the owner of the dam on account of benefits accruing because of headwater improvements, the erection of reservoirs, etc., shall be collected to an amount not exceeding 5 per cent per annum upon the total investment cost of such improvements to the United States, in addition to the annual expenses of maintenance of the headwater improvements, all of which shall be divided among all the dams on the stream receiving benefits from the increased flow, and shall be equitably apportioned among all the beneficiaries.

"Paragraph (c) provides for payment to the United States for the use of any of its lands or property to an amount not exceeding 5 per cent of the value of the lands, as may be fixed by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers. In fixing such charges there shall be considered the benefits to the interests of navigation as well as to the business of the owners of the project.

"Paragraph (d) changes existing law by providing that the United States may exact security for payment of such sums as may be required to restore the condition of the stream as to navigability as existed at the time of the approval of dam proposed, but that as a basis for action the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers must determine that navigation is injured by reason of the construction and operation of the dam.

"Section 5 changes existing law in providing that in the use of the navigation facilities afforded by the construction of any dam the interests of navigation shall be paramount to the use of the dam for power.

"Section 7 changes existing law in limiting the fine allowed to be imposed to not exceed $1,000; and if the unlawful maintenance and operation shall be such as to require a revocation, the court shall so provide in its decree and may determine the sale of the dam and its appurtenances to persons who must then operate it under the provisions of this act.

"Section 8 is a new paragraph and provides that no dam constructed under this act shall be assigned or transferred except upon the written consent of the Secretary of War unless by a trust deed or a mortgage for financing the business, but that any successor or assignee, through foreclosure of such security, must hold the property subject to all the provisions of this act.

"Section 9 changes existing law in providing that after the expiration of the term of 50 years that such term shall continue until compensation shall be paid to the owner for the fair value of his property.

"Section 10 is new and provides that after the expiration of the term of 50 years the Secretary of War may terminate all rights by giving the owner one year's notice in writing and by taking over the property by the United States or by any person authorized by Congress. In taking over the property the United States or any person authorized by Congress must pay the fair value of the property, including the costs of the works required by the United States, and must assume the contracts for service entered into prior to the receipt of notice of termination, which shall have the approval of the duly constituted public authorities having jurisdiction of public utilities in that territory, provided that these contracts were entered into in good faith and at a reasonable rate. The fair value of the property and the reasonableness and good faith of the contracts shall be determined by an agreement between the Secretary of War and the owners of the property, and in the event of disagreement by proceedings in the district court of the United States having jurisdiction. In determining the value of the property no value shall be allowed for the consent of Congress granted according to this act nor for good will, profit in pending contracts, nor other conditions of current or prospective business.

"Secton 11 is a new section, and provides that all rates for public service shall be just and reasonable and that discriminatory practices shall not be allowed. The bill provides that every rate and practice must be just and reasonable, and every unjust or discriminatory charge is declared to be illegal. Whenever the Secretary of War shall be of the opinion that the rates or services are unjust, upon complaint and hearing he is authorized to prescribe maximum rates and charges, and in case of the violation of the order of the Secretary of War the provisions as to forfeiture apply. For the purpose of rate making the value of the property may be considered in connection with the requirements for the expenditures required by the authorities of the United States. The Secretary of War is further authorized to fix these same conditions as part of his approval of the plans of any other project. This section provides that when any State in which a project is situated provides adequate regulation as to rates, charges, and service, and whenever such shall be established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, then the provisions of this section shall not apply. Any State may control the subject, if it will only do its duty. If it fails to regulate, the Secretary of War will regulate.

"Section 12 provides that the grantee shall commence the construction of the dam and accessory works within one year from the date of the approval of his plans, and shall within a further period of three years complete and put into commercial operation such part of the development as the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall deem necessary to supply the available market. If the dam and accessory works can not be completed within the further period of three years, the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may, if the public interests will be promoted thereby, grant a further extension not exceeding two years; but as to the ultimate development for the service of the public, aside from the dam and accessory works, the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers may regulate such ultimate development and require facilities installed within such time as they may prescribe, and the orders of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall be complied with in the time specified therein until such ultimate development shall be completed.

"Section 13 provides that the right to alter, amend, or repeal is reserved whenever Congress determines the conditions of consent have been violated.

"Section 14 is a new section authorizing the Secretary of War, with the approval of the Chief of Engineers, to lease to any applicant who has complied with the laws of the State in which the dam may be located any surplus power developed by a dam that is constructed or owned by the United States for the purposes of navigation. In making these leases preference shall be given to the applicant whose plan is approved by any act of Congress or by the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers as best adapted to the interest of navigation or to conserve the water-power resources of the region. All such leases and the parties thereto and the terms and conditions thereof shall be reported annually to Congress.

"Section 15 is new, and prohibits any dam constructed under this act becoming a part of any trust or combination or entering into any contract to limit the output or distribution of electric power, but provides that current and power may be interchanged with other power companies, so as to facilitate the giving of efficient service. Such interchange to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

"Section 17 provides that all requirements of this act shall apply to dams already constructed and in operation."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the gentleman from Illinois that the committee have gone over this matter very carefully. Here is a perfectly good job that might properly be filled by some good, loyal Democrat which is being filled by a civil-service employee. Now, if that is not an outrage, I do not know how you could conjure up or imagine one. Here are the unterrified in countless numbers seeking jobs, hungering for places at the public crib, and a good job that pays well is being filled by a civil-service employee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, just to be honest among ourselves, does not the gentleman from Wyoming really believe, as I believe, that these exempt positions under the Federal Government ought, under a Democratic administration, to have Democrats placed in them?

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, and I am trying to explain that I do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And under a Republican administration they ought to be filled by Republicans. We agree on that.

Mr. MONDELL. I never disagreed with the gentleman on that proposition at all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And if we had our way we would put them in.

Mr. MONDELL. I am only pointing out what an outrage it is that the administration refuses to take advantage of this splendid opportunity to give some good, patriotic Democrat, desirous of serving his Government and the people, an opportunity to do it at a good salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If this situation continues much longer, my health will be seriously impaired.

Mr. MONDELL. We do not want it to continue. In the interest of the Democratic Party and the public service we ought to put an end to it as soon as possible. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with either the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] or the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that all places in the Government service not covered by the classification service should be filled by Democrats.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not mean all.

Mr. MANN. What I rose for was to commend the President of the United States for some of his appointments. I see the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] is about to leave the Hall, and I should like to have him wait a moment. I have noticed that from time to time the President has robbed the majority of the present House of some of its brightest lights, and he recently made an appointment which I am sure meets with the hearty approval of every person in this House, including Bull Moose, Republicans, Democrats, Independents, and I believe of everybody in this District.

I desire to express my appreciation of the appointment which the President made when he appointed the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] to be chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. [Applause.] He might have searched the world over, but could not have found a better man for the place, or any other good place. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. And do not forget there are a number of others almost if not quite as good.

Mr. ADAMSON. If there are any more good places, tell him to pass them around, and we will brag on him every time he does it. [Laughter and applause.]

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will return to the part of the bill which was passed over.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, CONSTRUCTION AND SITES.

For sites, commencement, continuation, or completion of public buildings within the respective limits of cost authorized by law, including rent and removal expenses in cities pending extension and remodeling of buildings, as follows:

Mr. FITZGERALD. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, in line 5, strike out the word "including"; and in line 6, after the word "buildings," insert the word "severally."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alliance, Ohio, post office: For completion, $25,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Are all of the items in this bill in relation to public buildings to carry out authorizations heretofore made?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and all estimated for, and for the amounts stated to be necessary by the department for work during the ensuing fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. So that the committee has performed nothing more than the ordinary function of making appropriations where estimates have been made under authorization.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Except in two cases, where we did not make the appropriations requested.

Mr. MANN. The committee have done nothing more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have simply carried the amounts that the department said were required to carry on the work during the ensuing fiscal year on authorized buildings.

Mr. MANN. When we passed over these items the gentleman suggested that they be passed over because there might be items come in from the department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have a number of amendments to offer for estimates which have come in.

Mr. MANN. And in each of those cases the authorization has been made?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; and the department states that it requires for the ensuing fiscal year the sums proposed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amarillo, Tex., post office and courthouse: For continuation, $15,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after line 12, insert the following:
"Andalusia Ala. post office: For site, $5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chanute, Kans., post office: For commencement, $18,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Chariton, Iowa, post office: For site, $5,800."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Delavan, Wis., post office: For completion $14,500.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, after line 2, insert the following:
"Denver, Colo., post office: The appropriations heretofore or that may hereafter be made for construction shall be available for installation of mailing devices in said building within the present limit of cost therefor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Edwardsville, Ill., post office: For completion, $31,000.

Mr. BALTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, after line 15, insert the following:
"For an addition to the Federal building at East St. Louis, Ill., $240,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. To that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BALTZ. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up the time of the House at any great length in discussing the merits of this amendment. The omnibus public-building bill, which passed March 4, 1913, carried an item of $125,000 for building an addition to the Federal building at East St. Louis, Ill. The Senate raised the amount to $240,000.

The city of East St. Louis is one of the fast-growing cities of this country. The population of that city has quadrupled in the last 20 years. The population in 1890 was a little over 15,000; in 1900 it was nearly 30,000; and in 1910 it was nearly 60,000. At that ratio, in 1920 the city will contain a population of 120,000.

The hearings had upon that proposition disclose the fact that the building was not large enough to carry on the business of the city. I will read from the hearings had upon that proposition, in which the Supervising Architect testifies to this fact.

Mr. WENDEROTH. Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would be well for me to read a letter from the postmaster at East St. Louis, Mr. Merrick, addressed to the First Assistant Postmaster General, under date of January 4, 1913.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Is that the same letter you read yesterday, Mr. COPLEY?

Mr. COPLEY. Yes.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Then, I would think there would be no necessity for reading it.

Mr. WENDEROTH. The department is advised that the following desire space in the building: Civil Service Commission, 1,500 square feet; Department of Commerce and Labor, 500 square feet; Bureau of Animal Industry, 2,000 square feet. The Department of Agriculture states that if the last-named bureau can secure accommodations it will effect a saving of approximately $1,500 per annum in rental. In addition to the above, the following, now located in the building, desire additional space, as noted: Post office, 2,536 square feet; United States courts, 1,028 square feet.

The total additional space desired is, therefore, 7,564 square feet; but the postmaster estimates that in 10 years' time the business will have grown so that he will require nearly double the amount stated in his report as now available—namely, 15,000 square feet instead of 8,314 square feet.

The department's report to the committee of January 18, 1913, was based on additional space of, roughly, 12,000 square feet, to be provided in the extension, at a cost, including changes in and remodeling of present building, etc., of $240,000. This allowance of space provides for the necessary corridors, stairways, etc., and for a reasonable future growth.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not the Bureau of Animal Industry occupy a building down near the stockyards, where they are paying rental? Is that not a branch office?

Mr. WENDEROTH. It is a branch station, or substation, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that down near the stockyards?

Mr. WENDEROTH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And that will be retained?

Mr. WENDEROTH. I understand not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it not true that the animal-industry business ought to be conducted as near to the stockyards as possible?

Mr. WENDEROTH. According to the letter from the postmaster of East St. Louis, the St. Louis National Stockyards are just across the street from the post office.

The CHAIRMAN. But the stockyards themselves are not?

Mr. WENDEROTH. That I do not know. I could not answer that, Mr. Chairman; I take it from the postmaster's letter that they are. He says the post office at the St. Louis National Stockyards is just across the street. The total additional space desired is 7,564 square feet, but the postmaster estimates that in 10 years' time the business will have grown so that he will require nearly double the amount stated in his report as now occupied, namely, 15,000 square feet.

The CHAIRMAN. In what time?

Mr. WENDEROTH. In 10 years the space required would be nearly double the space now occupied. We have arranged, or suggested, that the building be extended 4,000 square feet, which will relieve the congestion in the post office on the first floor and will furnish the necessary additional space on the second and third floors.

I will not read all the hearings. It seems that the Supervising Architect in his testimony before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds says that that building is entirely too small to do the public business.

Now, Mr. Trotter, of the Post Office Department, also testified before the committee, and he said, in answer to a question put by Mr. BARNHART, as follows:

Mr. BARNHART. Did those plans contemplate any contingency for growth in that office?

Mr. TROTTER. I presume they did. They usually plan for a 10 years' growth, but the growth of that office has been abnormal in 10 years. The receipts of that office have increased from $51,261 to $122,621, and in the same period the number of employees, including clerks and carriers, has increased from 36 to 64.

It seems to me that this is conclusive evidence that this appropriation should be made at this time. I know it is the policy of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to hold down the appropriation. I stand for economy, but here is a case where it is an urgent necessity to build this addition. The city of East St. Louis is one of the largest railroad centers in this country. It is a great city; it has the largest horse and mule market in the world. It is also a manufacturing city, and within its district is located the St. Louis National Stock Yards. There is nothing to stop its growth, and I hope the chairman of the committee will accept this amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this item is authorized by law. The committee recommended every appropriation where it would be possible for the Treasury Department to use the money between now and the 4th of next March when the next bill will become a law. Before any money can be used for these buildings it is necessary to prepare the plans. As soon as the plans for the addition are prepared, and the Treasury Department says it is ready for the money, the money will be appropriated. If the money was appropriated now, it would not help the gentleman.

Mr. BALTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. BALTZ. How long would it take the Architect's Office to complete these plans?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know. I did not inquire particularly about this building, but we inquired very carefully into the matter, and in every instance where they stated they would require money and stated the sum that would be required, the committee included that amount in the bill. I understand the number of the gentleman's project is 221, and they must be near it, I would imagine, because I notice in the bill that Duquoin just above it alphabetically is included in the bill, although the site for Duquoin was authorized in 1908 and the building in 1910. There is no question about the need for additional facilities in East St. Louis, and just as soon as the Treasury Department is ready for the money the committee will do its share in furnishing it.

Mr. BALTZ. Mr. Chairman, I am a new Member of the House. I do not know what the purpose of this House is in making authorizations four and five years before plans can be drawn up by the Architect's Office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That has been the subject of controversy here for a long time. The gentleman has an addition which he desires which they seem to differentiate from a new project. If I were in the gentleman's place, I would insist that the Treasury Department treat the matter as an emergency case; that it ought to be taken up out of its order and plans prepared at once. Then the money would be appropriated.

Mr. BALTZ. Mr Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I saw the Supervising Architect, and he told me that those plans could not be reached for the next three years. It seems very strange to me that these authorizations are made so long in advance of the time when the plans can be prepared. It seems to me that some of those authorizations are made for political purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not say that; but Members this next year will get authorizations, and before those buildings can be constructed a new crop of Congressmen comes in, and they can not wait until those other buildings are out of the way, but have to look after the needs of their districts, and they get authorizations, and they keep getting authorizations and authorizations until we get alarmed; but as the plans could not be prepared and the money could not be utilized, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 102 for the purpose of offering an amendment which was overlooked in the heat of battle.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to page 102 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the amendment? Let us have the amendment read for information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] and Dr. Holmes, of the Bureau of Mines are vitally interested in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 102, after line 8, insert the following: "Not exceeding 20 per cent of the foregoing sum and not exceeding 20 per cent of the sum for investigation as to causes of mine explosions may be used during the fiscal year 1915 for personal services in the District of Columbia, and for the fiscal year 1916, and annually thereafter estimates shall be submitted specifically for all personal services required permanently and entirely in the Bureau of Mines at Washington, D. C., and previously paid from lump sum or general appropriations."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to page 102 for the purpose of offering the amendment read?

Mr. MANN. I would like to know from some gentleman interested in this. I see my colleague here, the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining. Can he tell us why he wants this?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; certainly, I will do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think this is what he wants, but this is what he has taken.

Mr. FOSTER. This is for the purpose of permitting that part of the Bureau of Mines which does experimental work in the District of Columbia—that is, laboratory work to be done here—and under some decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury it has been decided these men had to go out of the city of Washington——

Mr. MANN. That is, that out of the lump-sum appropriation you could not pay for personal services in the District of Columbia unless specified otherwise.

Mr. FOSTER. That is it.

Mr. MANN. Will they need these men in the District?

Mr. FOSTER. They can not get along without them.

Mr. MANN. I remember when we passed an appropriation for the enforcement of the white-slave act in the first place we were in that position here, and they moved their offices over to Baltimore. Could not they do the same thing with the Bureau of Mines?

Mr. FOSTER. They could move over to Pittsburgh.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But that would not be as convenient to the doctor.

Mr. FOSTER. And would not be as economical as having it here, convenient to the other branches of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Considering that if these personal services are had in the District, it will be more convenient for our colleague, Dr. FOSTER, to come in contact with these gentlemen, I will raise no opposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is another reason we expect as a result of this amendment, that hereafter the gentleman from Illinois will conduct himself along those well-known and highly appreciated lines——

Mr. MANN. As he has heretofore. I recognize the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, Dr. FOSTER, as one of the ablest, most efficient, useful, and valuable Members of the House. I am perfectly willing to give $150,000, if necessary, out of my own pocket. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. UNDERWOOD, having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendations that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], adding $100,000 to the appropriation for the Geological Survey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Is a separate vote demanded on other amendments? [After a pause.] If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER JULY 4.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on July 3 next, that it adjourn to meet on the following Monday, July 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I will simply say that the bill proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to certain lands to the town of Myton for cemetery purposes and a water reserve, and the town authorities would like to have these improvements made this summer if possible. Mr. SHAFROTH. This bill is of a similar character to the one which has just been passed, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It has passed the House. It simply pays one year's salary for the injury which was occasioned to the party while working in the Gunnison Tunnel, one of the reclamation projects in the State of Colorado. FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. CUMMINS. I present five amendments which I intend to propose to House bill 15613, being the trade-commission bill, and I ask that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

The SECRETARY. In the case of Alexander D. Wales, plaintiff, against John P. White, as president of the United Mine Workers of America.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not know what relevancy that has to anything that is pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be printed.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUPREME COURT, BROOME COUNTY.

Alexander D. Wales, plaintiff, against John P. White, as president of the United Mine Workers of America, defendant, before E. Day Clark, Esq., referee.

NEW YORK, May 27, 1914—11 a. m.

Hearing held at the office of the Outlook Co., 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

Examination of Hon. Theodore Roosevelt, under order of Albert H. Sewall, Esq., dated April 7, 1914.

Appearances: E. Day Clark, referee; Alexander D. Wales in person. John J. Irving, attorney for United Mine Workers of America, with Senator H. D. Hinman and Roger P. Clark of counsel.

It is stipulated that the oath of the witness be waived.

Theodore Roosevelt, a witness called on behalf of the defendant, testified as follows:

Direct examination by Mr. HINMAN:

Q. Col. Roosevelt, in 1902, at the time when you were President of the United States, the anthracite coal strike, so called, in Pennsylvania was on and was settled in October of that year. What do you know about the causes which lead up to the settlement of that and what part did you take in the settlement of that strike?

Mr. WALES. I have not a particle of objection to the colonel's stating just what happened between him and other parties, giving, if he can, the date of the transactions. The colonel himself probably understands that any conclusion that he may draw would be improper, and require me to draw out on cross-examination facts that he ought to testify to before.

Col. ROOSEVELT. Facts that I ought to—what, sir?

The REFEREE. You go ahead and answer the question in whatever form you wish to, and if he wishes to question you in detail he can.

Mr. WALES. Therefore I can say, if you see fit to give a conclusion, which would not be evidence in court, you would be playing into the hands of the distinguished gentlemen on the other side, who desires conclusions and not facts, and I leave that to you. You have a right to answer just what you please so far as legal rules are observed.

The REFEREE. Have you any further objections to the question?

Mr. WALES. I object to the question as it calls for a conclusion—I have no objection whatever—on the contrary, I greatly desire to have the Colonel's detailed statement of what occurred, but I object to any conclusion in the question as improper in form and calls for a conclusion with the hope——

The REFEREE (interrupting). I am not going to take any of these things.

Mr. WALES. I suppose you will take what I say in an objection.

The REFEREE. I will take your legal objection and nothing more.

Mr. WALES. My legal objection is——

The REFEREE. I have it——

Mr. WALES. I have got more—that it calls for a conclusion on transactions that the Senator himself knows that it is improper, and it is an effort to use prestige instead of the facts.

The REFEREE. You go ahead and answer the question in what form you see fit, and then the court will rule on it. You will understand that I can not rule.

Col. ROOSEVELT. I understand in the spring of 1902 a coal strike—a strike came on in the anthracite coal regions. A very little time convinced me that it was a serious strike and full of menace to the country—certainly to all the country east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio and Potomac.

I began to get into touch with the situation by ordering Carroll D. Wright, who was then the Commissioner of Labor, and possibly one or two other of my subordinates to make investigations and from time to time report to me. I can not give you the dates as to such reports, but I——

Mr. WALES (interrupting). I object to anything based upon these reports; that the reports are the best evidence and should be produced.

Col. ROOSEVELT. One or two of the reports, if I remember, were in writing, and they may have been put into the Anthracite Strike Commission. Four or five of them were verbal and can not be produced.

Mr. WALES. I object to anything but the verbal reports.

Col. ROOSEVELT. We will strike out the written reports, then.

The REFEREE. Answer the questions and I will take the objections.

Col. ROOSEVELT (continuing). These reports showed the seriousness of the situation, both because of the seemingly irreconcilable hostility of the two parties and of the threat of the welfare of the people of the Northeastern States, especially the Seaboard States, in the event of a coal famine occurring in the winter. In consequence I, throughout the summer and early fall, was carefully considering and making plans in my mind as to what I should do in the matter.

In September the situation began to grow acute. Men as conservative as the governor of Massachusetts, the mayor of New York, Seth Low, came to me or wrote to me—I can't tell you which.

I think they came to me to say that action had to be taken or we would be faced with a fuel-and-famine riot, and with untold misery and untold disaster throughout the winter.

I summoned or asked to appear before me—summoned is not the word, really—I asked to appear before me two or three representatives of the railroads and Mr. Mitchell and two or three of his lieutenants.

Mr. WALES. Now, if that summons was in writing I object that the writing is the best evidence, and if you allude——

Col. ROOSEVELT (interrupting). It must have been in writing, because I could not have made the summons in any other way, but I have not the vaguest idea where the writing is.

Mr. WALES. I can give you the New York Tribune of October 4, when I think all the conferences to which you are referring occurred.

Col. ROOSEVELT. I can not give you the exact date, but I should say it was early in October, but I can not give you the exact date. It is possible Mr. Mitchell may remember the exact date.

Mr. HINMAN. The 3d of October.

Col. ROOSEVELT. At that meeting I regarded Mr. Mitchell's attitude as entirely reasonable. I regarded the attitude of the representatives of the coal operators as entirely unreasonable, not only unreasonable but offensive. We parted. The coal operators made public themselves what their attitude had been. It excited much indignation in the country. That is not a conclusion. I am saying that——

Mr. WALES. I have no objection to it whatever.

Col. ROOSEVELT. Because I received countless letters about it, among others a letter from ex-President Cleveland, who was very strong in his denunciation and in his indignation against the attitude taken by the coal operators.

Mr. WALES. I object to that letter. If you can produce the letter—I would be glad to have that letter produced so as to be sure of the date.

Col. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Wales, I will try, if you wish, I will try to learn if that letter can be found.

Mr. WALES. I would like to have that letter produced.

Col. ROOSEVELT. I received hundreds of those letters while I was President, and I can not be sure that I have it.

Mr. WALES. As you can not be sure of the date, I would like to have the letter. I do not doubt but that it corresponds to your statement.

Col. ROOSEVELT. If you will write to Mrs. Cleveland, she will have a copy of the letter or my reply to it, it is possible.

Mr. WALES. Have you got Mrs. Cleveland's address?

Col. ROOSEVELT. I haven't an idea. I wrote him in response expressing my great pleasure, and asking him to become the head of the commission of arbitration, and be accepted. I at that time was very doubtful whether I would call another meeting of the operators and miners. Dozens of plans of action had been suggested to me. They, none of them, in my judgment, met the situation, and I had made up my mind that I would have to take very drastic action unless the operators and miners agreed themselves to individual action that I felt would meet the situation.

I intended to send in the United States Army to take possession of the coal fields. I only wanted a method of getting the Army in and then I would have run the situation as I thought it ought to be run.

I spoke accordingly to Senator Quay and told him that I did not wish him—to give even to him the details of my plan, but that I was going to take drastic action, and I would guarantee that the people of the eastern seaboard would have coal and have it right away, and I think I also told him that he would help in the action, and that he was perfectly welcome later to vote to impeach me if he ever chose, but that all I wanted him to do was to arrange with the then governor of Pennsylvania, whose name I think was Stone, who, when I gave the signal, would notify me that he was unable to keep order and asking the Federal Government to assist him to maintain order. I told Mr. Quay substantially that, but not the details of what I intended to do.

I then went to Maj. Gen. Scofield and told him that I thought the situation had become such that I might have to interfere to prevent a social war. That in that case I intended and I had the concurrence from the governor of Pennsylvania to send in the Regular Army to notify the miners on the one hand that work was to be resumed, and that I would go to any length necessary to prevent any violations that would interfere with the resumption of the work; and on the other hand to dispossess the operators and run the mines with Gen. Scofield practically as a receiver, having meanwhile this commission with the ex-President, Grover Cleveland, at its head to act as the commission actually appointed to act and decide on the rights of the case, and I said to Gen. Scofield, "You have got to know just what my ideas are," and I sailed in, and I said, "I am not going to send in any general unless he understands that this will be equivalent to action taken in time of war, and I bid you to pay no heed to any other authority, no heed to a writ from a judge, or anything else excepting my commands," and he said, "I will go in and I will do what you say and I will pay no heed to anything except your orders," and I said, "All right, that is enough."

I was meanwhile being called up by hundreds of people with all kinds of plans. I do not remember one in fifty of the people who were calling me up—sometimes it was over the phone and sometimes it was by letter and sometimes it was by personal interview. Among the people who came to me were naturally men of my own Cabinet. I remember Mr. Root, Mr. Knox, and Mr. Payne were three of the members of the Cabinet who were in close communication with me; although I did not tell any of them my plan, because a council of war never fights, and I thought it a great deal better, if I had to take such action, the Cabinet should not know until I took it. Also, Mr. Bacon came down several times to see me, to speak of the trouble—of the terrible nature of the situation. There were several other men; I have forgotten what men they were. I do not remember whether there were any labor representatives who came to see me or not. I do not remember any of them coming to see me at that time. All of these men had plans.

None of their plans commended themselves to my judgment. Specifically, Mr. Wales, if it is proper, I may say that nobody suggested to me the plan that you are said to have offered.

Mr. WALES. I haven't a doubt, Colonel—I never had—and I expected to prove it out of your lips if I had the chance.

Col. ROOSEVELT. Nobody suggested your plan to me—nobody at all, so far as I know, ever mentioned your name.

Mr. WALES. That is just exactly what I proved by Gov. Odell.

Col. ROOSEVELT. Neither Mr. Mitchell nor any other labor man ever suggested to me a plan to act upon. All of the Cabinet members of whom I have spoken here at different times informed me that they saw at different times other people mostly directly or indirectly connected with the operators' side, to talk with them and see if they could get them to take any action. I was often asked by them and by other men who came what they might say from me. I always said to them I hope that action will be taken between the miners and operators which will excuse my having to take drastic action, but understand, if action is not speedily taken, I will act myself, and I will settle this business.

Finally both sides showed a willingness to come to an agreement to have a commission of arbitration. The operators showed considerable temper toward me. That is not a conclusion. I can not give you the exact method that they showed it, but they showed considerable temper toward me.

Mr. WALES. I do not care how you say it, Colonel.

Col. ROOSEVELT. When they accepted the proposition for the arbitration they insisted that they would not object to any of the personnel which up to that time was leaking out, who would be on the commission, if I had to name it without regard to their wishes. To my great amazement, it was the operators who objected to Grover Cleveland. My memory is, Mr. Mitchell, although I can not be positive, that the labor people were content with Mr. Cleveland, but the operators objected to Mr. Cleveland, and I remember I had intended to put on Judge Buffington, and they then insisted that they would not have Judge Buffington. They wanted a judge from another district, and I appointed Judge Grey. I had intended to put on Mr. Kernan, of Utica—John D. Kernan—and they objected to him. I think they objected simply because I put them on the commission and, of course, it was perfectly——

Mr. WALES (interrupting). That is a conclusion.

Col. ROOSEVELT. That is a conclusion that I withdraw—that is a conclusion perfectly, and I had no business to put it in, although it is my opinion.

Mr. WALES. An opinion is a conclusion.

Col. ROOSEVELT. Yes; at any rate they did each object to all these men. I did not care. All I wanted was to get the right type of men, and all that hitch came to was that they did not want me to put on Archbishop Spaulding or a labor man. They wanted a commission of five. The commission finally was of seven. On the other hand, Mr. Gompers and the miners said that as the other men really represented or were in close connection with the capitalists' class (I think I am saying substantially your objection), that they both thought that they ought to have on one labor man.

Mr. HINMAN. You said "Mr. Gompers."

Col. ROOSEVELT. I beg your pardon. I should have said "Mitchell." That would be objected to as an "irrelevant conclusion."

Mr. WALES. You do not want to assume, Colonel, that I shall object.

Col. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Mitchell and the other miners' representatives stated that they felt that they were entitled to have a labor man on. I thought that they were entitled also. I believe I told them, and I certaintly told the other men at the time, that whoever I put on, labor man or capitalist, would be put on because I thought he was such a man that he would decide wholly without reference to his affiliations, if they are labor or capital.

However, I felt that it was a matter of common justice, and not so much with reference to the decision, but with reference to the feeling of confidence that would be engendered in the commission to have a representative of labor on; and I insisted upon having him.

I can not give you the night or the day of the night on which this decision was finally reached, but it came to somewhere about the 10th of October. I can not tell you the exact date. I remember that Mr. Bacon was there, and I think Mr. George Perkins, and probably several members of my cabinet, as coming from the operators; and the operators had said "no"; they would rather break up the whole business than have a labor man put on; and I explained then I was very sorry for it, but I thought it would be a very bad thing for everybody; and I thought it would be an especially bad thing for them, and they would reduce me to the necessity of acting at once on my own initiative—not telling them what I was going to do, however. It was after midnight, and after we had repeated the same conversations for hours and hours, that I finally found that they did not care a rap whether I put on a labor man, provided I did not call him a labor man. They had asked me to put on an eminent sociologist, and I then said to them—I can give you substantially what I said. I said: "Good Heavens; then you are sticking on the mere question of name! Well, if by merely committing an absurdity in name I can bring about the right result, I will bring it about at once. I will put on as 'eminent sociologist' the head of the conductors' union—Mr. Clark. I am also going to ask Archbishop Spaulding and announce that I had added him; and if you choose to break it up on the ground that you do not like Archbishop Spaulding, you go ahead and do it." I was not very sure that they would not object to it, and so, accordingly, I put on Mr. Clark, head of the conductors' union, as "eminent sociologist" and Archbishop Spaulding, and that made up a commission of six; and then their feelings got soothed down a little. But a few days afterwards, without asking anybody's permission, I increased it to seven, and put on Carroll Wright, who, of course, was the "eminent sociologist" that I originally intended to put on. So we have got the "eminent sociologist" in another name—I did not know why—and we have got the labor man on as an "eminent sociologist," and everything was pleasant and smooth and went fine. The commission met, the miners went back to work, and everything went fine.

Mr. WALES. I am perfectly willing to stipulate right here that the proceedings of the commission as printed either by the Senate or any of the departments—I guess the Department of Labor has it—may be considered in evidence. Mr. Irving has agreed to that.

Mr. HINMAN. We do not need to bother the colonel with that. That is a matter for the trial.

Col. ROOSEVELT. Now, Mr. Hinman, as well as I remember, I have given you the essential facts.

Mr. HINMAN. I think it covers the ground, Colonel, of the case.

Just one question. You have referred to a conversation that you had with Senator Quay. State whether or not that was before you had received word from the operators that they were willing to part, or anything of that kind.

Col. ROOSEVELT. It was before I had received word. It was shortly after the first interview, that broke up without any result.

Mr. HINMAN. Nothing further.

Cross-examination by Mr. WALES:

Q. Was there anybody—I ought to say that this is the same question I asked Gov. Odell, who was examined as a witness for me; I think you have already said it, and I desire to have it perfectly clear—you did not hear of me in the matter at all?—A. I beg your pardon; I did not hear of you.

Q. You did not hear of me at all?—A. I did not.

Q. You did not hear of my plan?—A. As far as I know, I never heard of your plan.

Q. You had no communication from me?—A. No.

Q. This is the first time you ever had the pleasure of meeting me?—A. This is the first time I ever had the pleasure of meeting you.

Q. You know what my plan was?—A. I have seen it stated that your plan was to summon the Legislatures of New York and Pennsylvania and get laws passed by them about this situation.

Q. Now——A. Just wait a second; you are refreshing my memory. I believe that some one suggested to me substantially that plan and that I rejected it at once.

Q. You can call these legislatures together?—A. I did not want to call them. I said I can not call them, because I did not want to and I would not pay any heed. It was a proposition like getting Congress together and putting coal on the free list.

Q. You propose that whatever action you took should be legal in accordance with the Constitution?—A. I proposed that every action I took should be in accordance with the Constitution as Abraham Lincoln construed it.

Q. Abraham Lincoln what?—A. As Abraham Lincoln construed it.

Q. Well, you were aware that before you could intervene in a domestic broil in a State the Constitution required an application from the governor of that State?—A. I have testified that for that reason I spoke to Senator Quay, so that we might be sure to get them.

Q. Did you ever meet Gov. Stone?—A. Will you let me finish? So that I could get Gov. Stone's application whenever I wished it, and Senator Quay said I should have it whenever I called for it.

Q. You had met him when?—A. I can not tell you.

Q. You did not meet him during the strike at all?—A. I did not meet him during the strike.

Q. Did you have any communication by letter or telegram from him?—A. No.

Q. You had no such communication from him?—A. No such application from him. I knew the political system that prevailed in Pennsylvania at that time.

Q. I would be glad to hear that, because I knew the situation, too.—A. You did? In that case you knew that—if you knew the situation or knew anything about it, you knew that when I spoke to Senator Quay that was enough. I would not have given you my conclusion, but you asked for it.

Q. I am perfectly willing to take it. It might not have been enough?—A. It would have been.

Q. To that I object.—A. Well, we did not.

Q. As a conclusion?—A. If you mean was intended as a question, it has given me the right to answer.

Q. Now, who represented the miners in all these conferences?—A. Mr. Mitchell was the spokesman. There were present also, I think, a Mr. Nichols and one or two other gentlemen, whose names I forget.

Q. E. D. Nichols?—A. He was a Congressman, I think.

Q. He was at that time next in authority, as I understand it, in the miners' union, after Mr. Mitchell?—A. That I can not say. I know he was an officer, but what officer I do not know.

Q. Mr. Mitchell probably did all the talking for the miners and announced the decision, did he not?—A. He probably did; and when the others tried to talk I endeavored to prevent them from talking, because I thought that Mr. Mitchell talked very sanely and wisely.

Q. Did you learn the number of miners that Mr. Mitchell represented?—A. I did know substantially the numbers from conversations with Carroll Wright and Charles P. Neil and others, whom I have now forgotten, the number that he represented.

Q. Was it in the neighborhood of 150,000 that were on strike?—A. I can not give you that.

Q. Who represented the operators in the conferences?—A. Different people. I can not remember the names of the gentlemen that came to see me first. I think one of them was Mr. Truesdale; then there was a man who talked a great deal.

Mr. HINMAN. Mr. Baer?

A. It was not Mr. Baer that I am thinking of. Some one told me that he was an independent operator.

Mr. HINMAN. Mr. Markle?

A. Mr. Markle; that was it. It would be a conclusion if I said he seemed to have a prejudice against me.

Mr. WALES. You think you have given all the men of prominence who took a prominent part in the settlement of the strike?

A. I am confident that I have not. You did not ask me to give the names of the prominent men who took part in the settlement of the strike. I am giving you the men who talked to me. You are asking for my conclusion in a case like that?

Q. I mean who took part, in talking to you?—A. I understood that Mr. Bacon and Mr. Perkins both came as a sequence of conversations with Mr. Pierpont Morgan. I understood that Mr. Root and perhaps Senator Quay had seen Mr. Morgan, but I can not tell you that for certain. I know Senator Quay had seen a number of these men. I know Mr. Root, Mr. Knox, and Mr. Payne saw a number of the big financial men here in New York, and besides Mr. Markle and Mr. Truesdale there were certainly three other coal operators or railroad men whom they saw.

Mr. HINMAN. Thomas and Fowler—Mr. Thomas, of the Erie.

A. I remember Mr. Thomas was there and two others—Mr. Fowler.

Mr. HINMAN. Fowler was the Ontario & Western man.

A. Fowler was; yes.

Q. Mr. Oliphant?—A. Oliphant was there.

Q. Was Underwood there?—A. I do not know, but there were five or six of them there. I do not remember all of them now, and I haven't a doubt, Mr. Wales, that other men called upon me whom I do not remember.

Q. Didn't Mr. Morgan come down with Mr. Bacon?—A. I do not think so.

Q. The papers announced at the time that he did?—A. I think I would remember if Mr. Morgan was there, but that I am not certain of.

Q. Mr. Morgan at that time was regarded as a leading financier of the country?—A. He was.

Q. And that his influence was as powerful in finance as yours was in politics?—A. I think he would have objected to the comparison.

Q. You have a right to object to the comparison now, but I did not intend it in any such sense.—A. If you will put it in this way—that in financial circles he was, in my judgment, as a conclusion of mine——

Q. (Interrupting.) I take it.—A. As a conclusion of mine I should say that Mr. Morgan was regarded in financial circles as the greatest financial power of that time.

Q. And that in any important financial matter his word would go further than that of any other man?—A. That was my understanding.

Q. And you understood he was taking an active interest in the strike?—A. Now, Mr. Wales, I have got to answer that purely from information that I got secondhand. The information that I had at secondhand was that he was taking an active interest in the strike; that he was very much discontented with the attitude of the coal operators, and was also uneasy as to what I was going to do if the coal operators did not act. Now, that may be an entirely erroneous impression on my part, and I would not have given that in answer to any question from Mr. Hinman, but that is as near as I can answer with correctness your question.

Q. I have no doubt but that information in that form—I do not mean in that literal form, but something in that line was given you?—A. Yes.

Q. And wasn't it your impression it was given you by Mr. Bacon?—A. My impression is it was not given by Mr. Bacon, but by a member of my Cabinet, but I would rather not say a member of my Cabinet—well, I have the man in my mind, but I can not be sure. I might say there were several different men.

Q. Isn't it your impression it was Mr. Root?—A. As I told you, sir, I would rather not give the name.

Q. I am only asking your impression.—A. I won't give you my impression, because I am not sure of it.

Q. Have you got the impression that Mr. Root was one of these men?—A. I would not say that he was not and I won't say that he was.

Q. All the way through from the beginning you were more or less in touch with Mr. Mitchell or with your men after October?—A. I talked with Mr. Carroll Wright and the others and saw Mr. Mitchell, but I had no direct communication with Mr. Mitchell as far as I remember until about the 1st of October. I may not be correct, but that is my memory.

Q. Well, throughout the entire matter—I do not want to misstate it—Mr. Mitchell, with the operators, was perfectly willing to arbitrate these terms before any fair tribunal, as you understood it?—A. Before what?

Q. Before any fair tribunal?—A. I believe that was his attitude, although, I think, specifically—now I have got to state my memory, and it may not be correct—Mr. Mitchell is, fortunately, here and can himself correct if I am misstating.

Q. I object to Mr. Mitchell's corrections of the questions. If he wants to testify let him come on the trial.—A. He has not made any correction.

Q. I do not object to his correction on any grounds with regard to you——A. I am not concerned with the grounds on which you object. I believe that Mr. Mitchell said that they would give me entirely—that they would abide by an arbitration commission which I name, without any qualifications as to who should go on.

Mr. HINMAN. Mr. Mitchell gave you that in writing.

Mr. WALES. If he gave that to you in writing, I would like to have that writing.

Col. ROOSEVELT. I do not think you can have it, Mr. Wales, because I do not think it is in existence. It is a public document and you can get it.

Q. Was it published in the press at that time?—A. I will say that, at any rate, it was a part of the Government reports.

Q. Was it your impression that it was after the 1st of October?—A. My impression was it was about the 1st of October. I believe it was afterwards, but I am not sure.

Q. Now, this conference between the operators and yourself and Mr. Mitchell was called by you?—A. Yes.

Q. You published a written call at that time?—A. Yes.

Q. And what purported to be an official statement from the White House was published in the Tribune; unfortunately, a portion of this paper is worn off, being handled the length of time since it occurred; this is the Tribune of October, sixteenth page?—A. You may be able to find it. Mr. Loeb used to keep a scrapbook.

Q. I think probably you can remember this. This has already been marked Exhibit G. I am perfectly willing a more perfect copy should be used.—A. Mr. Wales, I will tell you I am a tolerably busy man. Of course, be as long as you have to, but be as quick as you can. Go on as quickly as possible, and ask me the question if you can.

Q. Do you remember the official statement of your position, how you called the attention of the operators to the terrible state of affairs, which was published in the press almost universally at that time—October 4?—A. It was given out for universal publication.

Q. And, it appears by the press at that time, the night that occurred at the White House was on a Friday, October 3, 1902?—A. I do not remember surely, but I know it was about that time.

Q. Well, now, in that, all the way through, until quite late in these matters, the coal operators took the stubborn position, did they not?—A. They did.

Q. And that they would not submit these matters to arbitration?—A. They did.

Q. And they took that position before you on the 3d of October?—A. With great emphasis.

Q. Not only with great emphasis, but their position was insulting to the office you held and to you personally, was it not?—A. I felt that that attitude was offensive.

Q. I think so, sir.—A. I did not care a rap; but what I wanted to do was to get the thing done.

Q. Now, did you at the time look through what the papers published as the official statement coming from the White House to know whether they were correct or not?—A. No.

Mr. WALES. Are you willing——

Mr. HINMAN. Get right through with the colonel.

Mr. WALES. I propose to get the facts and the dates.

Col. ROOSEVELT. Do go on and ask me the question.

Mr. WALES. I ask him if he will answer that these statements as published officially from the White House may go as evidence? I will not ask anything about it. You can see there is your statement right below there [indicating].

Col. ROOSEVELT. Official statement from the White House. Without being able to answer directly as to that statement, I would myself in any action that I was to state assume that that was a correct official statement.

Mr. WALES. Are you going to raise any objection to that?

Mr. HINMAN. What the colonel has identified there.

Mr. WALES. This is Exhibit D, and I am perfectly willing to have you get a Tribune of that date in perfect preservation.

Col. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Wales, these statements are given out to the newspapers officially from the White House, and published in a large number of reputable papers, and I do not recall an instance where it was not correctly given. That is all I can say.

Q. Mr. Mitchell at that time was perfectly willing to arbitrate?—A. He was.

Q. And do you recall what the subjects were that he wanted submitted to arbitration?—A. No; the particular subjects I do not recall.

Q. Do you recall?—A. I could tell you what my demand was.

Q. What?—A. What my demand was, that the miners should go to work at once at the old wages, and that the wages and other matters in dispute between the parties should be settled by this commission, the findings of which the members should agree in advance to accept.

Q. I am speaking as to what his demands were before you got down to arbitration.—A. They referred to wages. They referred to the methods of weighing coal. There were, I think, questions of the miners' laborers that came in. I do not remember. I know the question of weighing came in; wages and methods of weighing coal, etc.

Q. Calculated to benefit the miners?—A. Calculated to benefit the miners.

Q. Now, do you remember sending out on the 6th of October a statement by yourself that you sent to Mr. Mitchell, proposing that the miners go to work and you would endeavor to get the operators to fix these matters? I have got it, if you will give me the time to look—if the other side will consent.—A. I remember it.

Q. Published either the 7th or 8th of October?—A. I do not remember that. I asked, either by letter or in person, of Mr. Mitchell that the miners go to work, stating that I would then endeavor to get action for them. I can not say whether I then said that I would act through this commission with Grover Cleveland at the head or not; but I know that that was the commission through which I intended to act.

Q. You said it was an official document that was sent out from the White House and published in the papers at the time—if the other side consents to that?

Mr. HINMAN. There may have been a statement issued. There was no official document.

Mr. WALES. It was a communication from Col. Roosevelt to John Mitchell.

Mr. HINMAN. You won't have any difficulty in proving what was in the papers.

A. My memory is that the thing came up in a conversation between Mr. Mitchell and myself. My memory is that it came up in a conversation.

Q. Your memory—if the papers published this—and I may be mistaken as to whether Carroll D. Wright took it, but the papers stated that it was sent by you to Mr. Mitchell through Carroll D. Wright; but I may be mistaken in the name—it may have been some other member?—A. I remember that there was such a proposal from me to Mr. Mitchell.

Q. Did you get a telegram from Mr. Mitchell in reply on or about the 8th of October?—A. I do not know. I know that Mr. Mitchell refused.

Q. Well, now, up to that time, had the operators changed their attitude, so far as you know?—A. Not as far as I know.

Q. And up to the time that you got this reply from Mr. Mitchell, had you made any threats to call out the military?—A. Not threats; I never made any threats except exactly as I described them; no public threats of any kind.

Q. They were not public, but did you state to anybody connected with that movement before you got this reply from Mr. Mitchell?—A. Before I got the reply from Mr. Mitchell I had been in consultation with Senator Quay, as I have described it, and I had been in consultation with others——

Q. (Interrupting.) At the time——A. (Interrupting.) Wait a moment, I was continually thinking of alternative plans with the view to meet the shifting needs of the situation as its developments might require. I was thinking of several plans, not any one of which might have to be adopted as the needs of the situation developed.

Q. Did you send out this communication to Mr. Mitchell that I have referred to which, according to the press, was dated October 6, and, if I recall it rightly, the Tribune stated on the 9th that he replied and refused. Did you hope to have him consent when you sent it up?—A. I thought it very unlikely that he would.

Q. I ask to strike that out. I asked you if you hoped he would?—A. And I answer that I thought it very unlikely that he would, but I thought he might, and I answered it that way.

Q. You undoubtedly hoped that he would?—A. I have answered you.

Q. Now, I call your attention to the article in the Tribune of October 9, which states what the demands of Mitchell were that he desired to have arbitrators and ask you if that corresponds to your recollection?—A. I do not remember enough to say yes or no.

Q. Down below here it states "Williamsport, Pa., October 8. Hardly had John Mitchell to-day sent his reply to President Roosevelt in regard to the proposition that the miners return to work while a commission investigates conditions than he received from New York a telegram"—now I simply read this to call your attention to the date—"received a telegram from you and that your proposition was that the miners return to work while a commission investigated conditions." That is correctly stated, is it not?—A. That is correctly stated.

Q. Then your proposition at that time was simply that the miners return to work and that you would appoint a commission or a body to investigate—it was not an arbitration board—it was a body to investigate?—A. It was not an arbitration board. It was the same commission that I have spoken of with Mr. Cleveland at the head, Mr. Kernan, Judge Buffington, Archbishop Spaulding, and two or three others.

Q. Now, it appears that Senator Quay was in New York pretty much all the time from the 1st of October—that is my recollection of it—until after October 9, these transactions between Gov. Odell and Quay and Penrose and Platt on the one side and the operators on the other occurred in New York, and ran along three different days or more, and they finally ended on the 9th, and Senator Quay was in New York most of that time. Now, have you seen Senator Quay during that time?

Mr. HINMAN. I object to that on the ground that the newspapers show Senator Quay during that time was in Washington.

Col. ROOSEVELT. In any event, I can recall he was in Washington more than once during that time. I saw him more than once. I understood that he was returning to see the operators and other men through whom he was trying to bring influence on the operators in New York, and that it was done with the view of getting in touch with the situation in New York.

Q. How many interviews with Mr. Quay did you have after the 3d of October and before the strike was finally settled?—A. I had certainly two or three.

Q. You do not remember more than two or three?—A. I do not remember more than two or three. There may have been more. I certainly had two or three.

Q. Now, there was a marked tremendous change in the attitude of the operators after their interview with you on the 3d of October, was there not?—A. There was.

Q. What was the first official notice that you had of that attitude?—A. I do not remember. I do not know that I ever had an official notice. I took judicial notice.

Q. Well, judicial notice is a mighty uncertain thing.—A. I took it and my action was attended with much certainty.

Q. Can you tell in which one, either first, second, or third of the conversations you had with Mr. Quay during this time, you spoke of calling out the military?—A. I never spoke to him about calling out the military at all. That is what I intended to do with the matter, but I said to him that I wanted Stone when I deemed it necessary. I wanted Stone to ask me to send in the Army. I can not remember at which meeting it was.

Q. Have you any impression as to whether it was the first, second, or third?—A. No; I have not. My impression is that I spoke of it at the one meeting, and that I referred to it at another meeting, but that is only an impression.

Q. Was it your impression that that occurred during these negotiations over this arbitration board?—A. Between the 3d and 10th?

Q. Well——A. What do you mean by negotiation board?

Q. Wasn't there more or less negotiation over arbitrators' interests to both sides?—A. Yes; I should say that was how the question came of the negotiations over the arbitrators. My impression is that these meetings took place, roughly, between the 3d and 10th—wait a moment, I can not tell you exactly, but I can tell you this; they took place at the time that Mr. Quay was on here in New York speaking to these different men. He would come from New York and he would see me, and would say he was going to see the operators, and he was going back to New York, and so it was during that time.

Q. Now, do you remember that the operators made a written offer to arbitrate?—A. I believe it was in writing.

Q. Have you got any copy of that?—A. I have not. I think it was published.

Q. When is it your recollection of that was?—A. I can not tell you. I can not tell you. My memory is that in that they said they would accept a judge of such and such a district. A man versed in engineering, a man versed in the science of coal operating, an eminent sociologist, and five others.

Q. Didn't they also wish or say they would not recognize the miners' union at all?—A. Whether they said it in that communication I do not know; but we told it to him that they would not accept a member of a labor organization.

Q. What was your impression as to when that regular offer came?—A. My impression is strong that it was before the night—I knew it was before the night on which I saw Mr. Bacon and Mr. Perkins and the others, and finally appointed the commission. I should say that—I can not tell you—it was some days, I should say, before that.

Q. Was it before or after the 10th of October?—A. I believe the 10th of October was the day on which I saw Mr. Perkins and Mr. Bacon. Can you tell me what day was it that I announced the commission?

Q. I prefer to have your recollection.—A. I can not give you my recollection. I do not know.

Q. You may have been mistaken on account of your not remembering the days, but I prefer to have your mind just as it is.—A. I am not mistaken as to the relative sequence of things. I can not tell you what was the tariff as to copper, but I can tell you it was before I announced my decision and before Mr. Bacon and Mr. Perkins and members of my Cabinet were in at the night I made the announcement.

Q. Was this offer published at the time?—A. I can not tell you.

Q. Were these arrangements, these negotiations to which you have alluded, after that offer?—A. They were both after and before all these negotiations. They went on all the time. Mr. Wales, I was continually testing out the situation to find where and how I could bring about a solution. I was prepared to take any steps necessary to solve the difficulty and to bring the crisis to an end. I infinitely preferred to take it by the miner, acting with justice and generosity; and while I am not going to say that because they did not act justly I would have been—next to that I would have liked to have the miners yield and go to work and trust my action and with the force of public opinion and to make the arbitrators accept the conclusions of the commission. I would have felt then that if the arbitrators declined to accede to what a commission headed by the ex-President of the United States, a Democrat, and backed by me, a Republican, approved; that if they declined to accede to that, either by public opinion or in any other way that we found necessary, I could force them to act. But, of course, I can not guarantee that, and I felt that Mr. Mitchell was entirely within his rights in refusing; and from the beginning I thought he probably would refuse and, although, he might accept that proposition. I did not have to ask on my own responsibility if I could possibly avoid it, but I intended to act in that way if there was no other way. All the time I was considering the different plans.

Q. You were ready to take any legal action that was most likely to bring a strike to hand?—A. I was.

Q. If putting the coal on the free list and calling Congress together for that purpose would have done it, you would have done that, wouldn't you?—A. If I had thought that it would have accomplished the object, I should have done it; but I do not think that it would have accomplished the object, and I did not do it.

Q. But if the others were persuaded the other way, and you were persuaded that they would heed the operators in their tender, do you say that you would call Congress together for that purpose?—A. You are asking a hypothetical question.

Q. I have had a hypothetical history.—A. You have not had it from me.

Q. It will show——A. It will show you have asked me hypothetical questions.

Q. You have answered yourself voluntarily the proposition that you were ready to take any action that would bring about the settlement of the strike?—A. Yes.

Q. And you were not at all technical if you got down to this point where all those efforts had failed in letting the newspapers know that that was your position?—A. Not at all.

Q. Now, there is a little document that I will present to you and you can take it with you. It was one of the preliminary motions in this matter, and you can see from it that my claim is no joke. I also have here the motion papers on which I made the motion before Judge Forbes for a commission to examine Platt—I had already examined Platt. I had already examined him. You need not take this if you do not want it. I am giving this to Mr. Roosevelt. I do not want him to go off with a wrong impression. You can take it with you and read it at your leisure. I also before I questioned you told him that I had this decision in my favor from Judge Forbes, and in my motion papers before Judge Forbes I quoted extensively from the testimony of Platt, etc.—A. I do not remember that Platt had anything to do with the settlement of the case so far as I know.

Q. You can find out from this more than you know about it.—A. I think I know most of it.

Q. I think you don't.—A. Now, look here, you are stating your views; are you asking my opinion of your case?

Q. No.—A. Exactly; and I do not suppose you want it.

Q. Because you do not know anything about it.—A. Mr. Wales, you have been telling me what your views are and what your case is. I have not the vaguest interest in it. The only object in your telling me is that you want some opinion from me about it.

Q. There is another reason. The whole press will be loaded with the position of my distinguished friend over there, as he has done with the Binghamton Press.

The REFEREE. Ask the question.

Col. ROOSEVELT. What question is it?

The REFEREE. Ask the questions; that is all I want.

Mr. WALES. I was about to say——

The REFEREE. I won't permit any more statements so far as my proceedings are concerned. Ask questions and I will take them.

Mr. WALES. I want to conclude what I was going to say. I would recommend to you before you give an opinion——

The REFEREE. Just ask questions.

Col. ROOSEVELT. I have not given an opinion. I am not giving opinions unless you ask for them.

Q. You were ready to take any legal action most likely to bring a termination of the strike?—A. How many times have I been asked that question?

The REFEREE. Twice that I remember.

A. I tell you three times it is true. Yes.

Q. Didn't you have any talk with Gov. Odell about this matter?—A. I do not remember distinctly. I have a very vague impression that he called me up on the telephone, but it is only a vague impression. I had no talk with him of any importance.

Q. Now, did you have a talk the latter part of the week—Wednesday, October 1—over the phone with Gov. Odell?—A. I can not tell you. I have given you my knowledge.

Q. I will read from the testimony of Gov. Odell and ask you a question about it:

"A. I talked with Mr. Harriman in his office but had no telephone conversation.

"Q. Was it that day or the next day on which you talked to Harriman that you had the telephone talk with Roosevelt?—A. It must have been the next day, the day after—I would not be certain.

"Q. Don't you recall this, that it got to be the last of the week, either Friday or Saturday, you had the talk with Roosevelt?—A. Assuming it was Wednesday, it must have been the latter part of the week.

"Q. You remember it was the latter part of the week?—A. I do not remember, because I do not remember the beginning. You say it was Wednesday, and I am assuming it was.

"Q. I am asking if you remember that fact?—A. No; I do not, now.

"Q. Did you say you called up Roosevelt or he called you up?—A. I called him up.

"Q. Will you just state what you said to Roosevelt?—A. I told him of the failure to secure an agreement and of the suggestion made by Mr. Harriman that it was necessary to get Mr. Mitchell to agree to it, and that he was the only man that we knew of that could secure that consent; and I asked him to send for Mr. Mitchell to come over to Washington and talk the thing over with him; and he replied that he did not want to do it because he had already done whatever he thought he could do to produce the result, and without any effect; and I urged him as strongly as I could to send for Mitchell, and that Mitchell could not refuse to come and there would be no harm if he should refuse. He acceded to this proposition after some further objections, and consented to it, and he sent for Mitchell."

Q. Is there anything in that that you wish to contradict?—A. I do not remember about it. I do not remember what time it was.

Q. He says the latter part of the week, assuming that Wednesday was the 8th.—A. What date of the month was that?

Q. Wednesday was the 8th.—A. I do not remember. I have a very vague memory that Mr. Odell called me up and talked over the telephone; but I know that I did not act on any suggestion that he made.

Q. Did you state in that talk with Gov. Odell——A. I tell you I do not remember anything about it.

Q. I have a right to ask whether you remember it or not. You did not want to do that, just send for Mitchell, because you had already done whatever you thought you could do to produce the result, and with no effect?—A. I do not remember the conversation. I am confident I did not make any such statement in any such form.

Q. Will you state that you did not?—A. I can only give you the answer that I have already given, Mr. Wales, if you want to get at the exact facts yourself, that if I remember still the conversations that I had with relation to anything that made an impression on me or the opinion which I secured. Scores of men, as I have said, communicated with me by telephone, by writing, by word of mouth, with suggestions that I disregarded. As for this, though, it is out of my mind. I took no action on anything suggested to me by Gov. Odell.

Q. Well, you do not remember what you did state to Gov. Odell?—A. I do not remember; but I am confident that I did not state it as that sentence you have read to me states.

Q. Now, is it a fact that that first session on the 3d was a complete failure, and you so understood it when they treated you so contemptuously?—A. I did, as regarded immediate results. It paved the way for future results.

Q. Rather whether it would come, but you had no actual knowledge?—A. I am answering your question. You asked me whether I understood it to be an absolute failure, and my answer is no; that I regarded it as paving the way for good results later. I am answering your question.

Q. When you wrote that letter to Mr. Mitchell suggesting that the miners go to work, and you appoint a commission to examine, you had not had any offer to arbitrate?

Mr. HINMAN. I object to that on the ground that it does not appear that the President wr te any letter to Mr. Mitchell.

Col. ROOSEVELT. At the time of the communication to which you allude I do not believe I had had any advice from the operators. It is possible I had had some from any perfectly inadmissible terms, but I do not think so.

Q. You do not recall?—A. I do not recall.

Q So far as you recollect, their attitude was still as stubborn as before?—A. Still as stubborn as before.

Q. Wasn't their attitude professedly in that offer that they would not arbitrate with Mr. Mitchell—A. I do not understand the question.

Q Well, I will waive it. Did you learn of Mr. Harriman's change of attitude in this matter?—A. I do not remember of ever hearing of Harriman's attitude. I may have heard of Mr. Harriman's attitude, but I do not remember. It certainly did not affect my action in any case, anything that Mr. Harriman did.

Q. Well, the calling out of the military depended upon a call from Gov. Stone. You would not have acted without that call?—A. I won't say that.

Q. Would you defy the Constitution?—A. I do not accept your interpretation of the Constitution.

Q. I think it is fully as good as your interpretation.

The REFEREE. Don't argue. Finish the question.

Mr. WALES. I will repeat the question, then.

Col. ROOSEVELT. I have answered it.

Q. I do not think you have. Would you without the call of Gov. Stone, in violation of the Constitution, call out the troops to settle a domestic broil in a State?

Mr. HINMAN. Objected to as incompetent, improper, and assumed as facts not proven.

A. I won't answer that.

Q. Would you, without the call from Gov. Stone, have called out the troops to settle this strike?

Mr. HINMAN. Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

A. I do not know.

Q. You do not know?

Mr. HINMAN. Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

A. I do not know. I would have settled the strike.

Q. Law or no law?—A. I would have settled the strike. I would have found a law. That strike was going to be settled.

Q. That is what Mr. Hinman said, and told me all the way through, and I have got the record for it.—A. That will settle the strike and the Panama Canal question.

Q. I lay no claim to the Panama Canal. The World has said that you said something to that effect, but I disclaimed them.

Mr. WALES. Do I understand that to prove the dates and what these various efforts were I can quote from what purported to be the copy of the statements as published in the press generally at the time?

Mr. HINMAN. Only the official statements which came from the White House. The colonel has stated these statements are correct.

Mr. WALES. You said a little while ago you would let in all these papers.

Mr. HINMAN. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. WALES. Very well; then I have got to go into a minute examination.

Q. Now, Colonel, wasn't it over Sunday, the 12th, and possibly late at night on the 11th, that you first learned of the change of attitude of the operators?—A. I do not know.

Q This offer of the arbitrators to arbitrate?—A. I do not know.

Q. Didn't that appear for the first time in the papers on the 14th of October; that was Tuesday?—A. I do not know. I do not know anything about the matter.

Q. As having been signed on the 13th?—A. I do not know.

Q. And weren't all the negotiations fixing who the arbitrators would be after that Sunday?—A. I do not know.

Q. The 12th?—A. I do not know.

Mr. WALES. That is all.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, Executive clerk, announced that the President had, on June 25, 1914, approved and signed the following acts:

S. 2576. An act for the relief of John Q. Adams; and

S. 661. An act for the relief of the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, at the close of my remarks it is my purpose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes. I desire to be very brief, and I shall ask at the commencement permission to print certain quotations and references which I shall make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that may be done.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will also ask that there be no interruption until the close of my remarks.

SPEEDY ACTION DESIRED.

I am exceedingly desirous, Mr. President, to expedite action upon this bill. All the Members of the Senate, I am sure, unite with me in the desire for an early adjournment. There ought not, in my judgment, to be any protracted discussion over the bill. A measure of this kind has been the subject of prolonged consideration in the Senate of the United States through its Interstate Commerce Committee for several years and has been thoroughly debated in the committee and measurably debated on the floor of the Senate.

It has been the subject of concentrated attention by the Interstate Commerce Committee during the last five or six months. It has been also the subject of concentrated consideration by the other House and its committees during the same period. At the very commencement of the session the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate and the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House, which was supposed at that time to have jurisdiction over all trust legislation, came into communication with each other regarding tentative bills, one covering a trade commission, another supplementary legislation to the antitrust law, and the other a bill providing for the control of the issue of railway securities. Tentative bills were prepared and were submitted after the Christmas holidays to the consideration of the Senate committee and the House committees.

THE TENTATIVE ANTITRUST BILLS.

In January last the President of the United States delivered a message upon this subject, and still later on an interstate trade-commission bill was introduced, on the same day, by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House and the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate.

With reference to this bill, Mr. Clayton caused to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the 22d day of January, 1914, the following press dispatch:

Representative Clayton this afternoon gave to the press the full text of the tentative bill as agreed upon by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House (Messrs. Clayton, Carlin, and Floyd of Arkansas) and the majority members of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, and said:

"The bill will be introduced at the same time by Representative Clayton and Senator Newlands. This bill is modeled after the lines of what is commonly known as the Newlands bill, which was introduced in the Senate by Senator Newlands, and involves the fundamental idea that a trade commission shall be created, consisting of five members, with full inquisitorial powers into the operation and organization of all corporations engaged in interstate commerce, other than common carriers. It provides for a commission of five members, makes the Commissioner of Corporations chairman of the board and transfers all the existing powers of that bureau to the commission. Its relation to the Attorney General's office and to the courts is advisory. Its principal and most important duty besides conducting investigations will be to aid the courts when requested in the formation of decrees of dissolution, and with this end in view it empowers the courts to refer any part of pending litigation to the commission, including the proposed decree, for information and advice."

Senator NEWLANDS, being interviewed, said:

"The trade-commission bill and several other bills limiting the debatable ground of the Sherman Act have been the subject of laborious consideration by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House (consisting of Mr. Clayton, chairman, and Messrs. Carlin, and Floyd of Arkansas) during the holidays and before. The majority members of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate have been brought into consultation with them of late.

"The trade-commission bill preserves the essential features of the bill which I have been urging for some time, but contains amendments and additions of value and is, in my judgment, an improvement upon the bill as it was considered and improved by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate during the last Congress. As a whole, I should say that the trade-commission bill ought to be satisfactory to members of all parties, for it is distinctively progressive, and we have endeavored to frame it in harmony with the President's views, presented in an admirable message, which has received the approval of the entire country regardless of party. While these bills represent at present the best thought of the participants in the shaping of this legislation, they are presented simply as tentative measures, upon which the judgment of the proper committees of the House and Senate and of the country is invoked."

The House bill, introduced by Mr. Clayton, was not, however, referred to the Judiciary Committee, but to the Interstate Commerce Committee of that body. Later on, Mr. COVINGTON, of the latter committee, introduced a bill covering substantially the same lines as the so-called Clayton bill, which was considered, amended, and finally reported, and passed.

Contemporaneously the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce had under consideration Senate bill 4160, the bill introduced by myself, and, after considering and reporting favorably this bill as amended, took up the House bill which was referred to it, and substituted for it the Senate bill with two amendments—one relating to the investigation of foreign trade practices and the other relating to unfair competition. The question now before the Senate is whether the substituted Senate bill shall pass.

PUBLIC OPINION IN FAVOR OF A TRADE COMMISSION.

During these six months all these questions have been the subject of discussion by the country generally, by public men, by chambers of commerce, and by boards of trade. The result is an overwhelming public opinion in favor of the adoption of an interstate trade commission bill. That public opinion was demonstrated by a referendum made by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, a large national organization having member bodies in every section of the country. The result of that poll was to show a decisive majority in favor of a trade-commission bill. Public opinion was so pronounced upon the subject that when the bill in the other House came to a vote it passed, I believe, without a roll call, both sides of the House being in favor of the bill.

I may say that in both the House and the Senate the consideration of this legislation has been nonpartisan, prominent members of the minority party joining actively with those of the majority party in the shaping of an effective measure, and the proposal of a trade commission received the approval of the entire committee of the House of Representatives, with perhaps one dissent, and the almost unanimous judgment of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. I may say further, so far as the action of the Senate is concerned, that under the preceding administration of Mr. Taft a resolution was offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] for an investigation as to whether any further trust legislation was desirable. Under that resolution over 100 persons appeared before the committee—public men, economists, and business men, representatives of boards of trade and chambers of commerce—and gave their views, which extended to nearly 3,000 pages. Upon the very first day of the hearing of that committee under the resolution a bill introduced by myself some time previously for the creation of a trade commission was considered. That bill went through a process of tentative amendment by the committee, but no final action was taken upon it, and no final action was taken upon any of the many bills then pending upon this subject before the Interstate Commerce Committee, but a report was made by the committee.

ACTION ON BILL THUS FAR NONPARTISAN.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] made that report, and the additional views of many of the committee accompanied it. After reviewing the various decisions of the Supreme Court relating to the Sherman antitrust law, that report declared it to be the opinion of the committee that a trade commission was desirable. The report filed with this bill contains in the appendix extracts from the Cummins report, and also extracts from the additional views of the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee. I refer to this in order to show that under two administrations the creation of an interstate trade commission has been regarded as a necessary and essential thing in all legislation relating to the trust question. I shall insert the entire report at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, the practical question is whether upon a subject concerning which the mind of the country is made up, the mind of the chambers of commerce and of the boards of trade of the country is made up, the business mind of the country is made up, the mind of the committees having jurisdiction is made up, the mind of Congress itself is made up—whether we shall have a protracted discussion of this bill embracing the prolonged conversations which have characterized of late years the debates in the Senate, and which have brought them under discredit. The country does not listen to us, and we do not listen to each other. I believe there is an opportunity here and now for the Senate to reestablish its old repute for clear and concise debate.

Mr. President, I am aware that I am one of those who perhaps may be charged in the past with an overindulgence in speech. All that I can say is that I have reformed. [Laughter.] When I came into this body, after 10 years' service in the House of Representatives, I flattered myself that I had the faculty of saying everything that I desired to say within an hour's speech. That was the result of the training of the House, and of my legal training, which imposed restraints upon prolonged discussion. I found myself, however, yielding gradually to the indulgence of the Senate, and, to my surprise, I discovered that one day I had made a three hours' speech. I determined from that hour to reform, and I do not think my associates have had occasion to complain of late of any excess of oratory upon my part.

Now we are nearing the close of the session, or what ought to be the close of the session, and the question is whether the Senate will put restraint upon itself. Has it the power of self-restraint, or will we have to subject the Senate later on to the power of coercion through a cloture rule? We have been in pretty nearly continuous session for four years, much to our own discomfort and much to the discomfort of the Nation, and I think that every Senator on this floor will bear me out in the assertion that we could have dispatched the business in one-half the time.

We had recently an example of how quickly the Senate can dispatch business in the adoption of the conciliation bill reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce. A great strike was threatening; a tie-up of the eastern railroads was impending; the country was apprehensive regarding the financial and industrial consequences of such a strike; the then existing machinery for conciliation between employers and employees was not satisfactory, and neither side was willing to resort to it. The result was that a bill was framed and presented by the Interstate Commerce Committee to this body. That bill offered a most tempting field for discussion. All the questions relating to labor, to the relations of employers to employees, and all the related social and economic questions afforded enticing opportunities for debate; but the patriotic sense of the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate controlled them, the patriotic sense of this body controlled it, and that bill was put through almost without debate, in less than an hour, I think—an instance of how the Senate can do business when it chooses to do business, and how it can do business without the coercion of a cloture.

THE TRUST PROGRAM.

Mr. President, there are three measures pending embraced in the so-called trust program. It is admitted by all that this measure should pass first. Some of the subsequent legislation intrusted to the Judiciary Committee may involve the enforcement of the law through this very trade commission. How important it is, therefore, that we should avoid unnecessary discussion, so far as this bill is concerned, and put it upon the statute books, so that the legislation which comes from the Judiciary Committee may have reference to the legislation that has been already adopted.

Mr. President, this is a very simple bill. I think the entire Senate is convinced that if contemporaneously with the passage of the Sherman antitrust law we had created a trade commission similar in its organization to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was created about the time that law passed, by this time the questions relating to trade regulation would have been as completely settled as have been those relating to transportation.

In transportation we have practically only two things remaining unadjusted—though always, of course, there will be minor matters of legislation—one, the valuation of the railroads, for which provision has been made by law; and the other, control of stock and bond issues. All other legislative questions relating to rates, rebates, unjust discriminations, and so forth, have been practically adjusted—a body of administrative law has been established which is a definite guide to the business and transportation interests of the country.

The Sherman law was passed about the same time as the interstate-commerce act; and its administration was intrusted to the shifting incumbency of the Attorney General's Office, that incumbency changing frequently, having changed in one administration three or four times. The result was that instead of having an established system of administrative law the administration of that law was intrusted to the shifting officials with the varying policies and varying views of the respective Attorneys General; and it is only recently that we have obtained from the courts a full exposition, declaration, and interpretation of the law itself. Had this commission been in existence during all the years of the Sherman antitrust law it is clear that the organization of these great trusts, since accomplished, would have been prevented, and all of the trusts then existing would have been brought under the steady, purposeful, continuous administration of the law, and without violent wrenches in the business of the country readjustments would have been made that would have resulted in the dissolution of these corporations and their reintegration in harmony with the law. We are taking up very late what ought to have been taken up 20 years ago. If that is apparent, why should we take a month in debating this bill?

PROVISIONS OF THE BILL; THE COMMISSION.

What does this bill provide for?

It provides for a commission of five members, whose term is seven years, the incumbency being so arranged that only one commissioner changes at a time, so that you have practically a continuous body considering these great questions. The bill provides for the merger in this commission of all the powers, duties, and functions, as well as the force of the Bureau of Corporations, a bureau which has been in existence for about 10 years, which has done much good work of investigation, and which has a trained band of experts whose experience and efficiency should, of course, be availed of.

POWERS OF THE COMMISSION.

The next thing is the powers of this commission. Almost all these powers—I may say all the powers—are contained in sections 3 and 5. The first three subdivisions of section 3 provide for powers of investigation and report as to corporations engaged in interstate commerce and corporate combinations and trade associations, excepting banks and carriers. Those powers are somewhat enlarged over those of the Bureau of Corporations, but they are not materially enlarged. The Bureau of Corporations did not find it necessary to use coercive powers with the corporations of the country. It used its powers wisely and discreetly, and usually succeeded in getting all the information that it required. We heard of no abuse of personal rights under that organization, and I take it that the outcry raised against the so-called inquisitorial powers of this commission will be found in practical experience to have been unnecessary.

INVESTIGATION.

The powers to investigate, the powers to call for reports, must be general, and they must be so general as that they can be exercised against every one of perhaps 350,000 State corporations which are engaged in greater or less degree in interstate commerce; but whilst the powers are great, the application of the powers will necessarily be limited. We know that the business and trade corporations of this country are as a rule conducted in conformity with law. We know that the outlaws are few; but we must shape the powers of this commission so that we can reach that outlaw whether it be a corporation with a capital stock of ten million or a hundred million or a billion dollars, or whether it be a corporation with a capital stock of only $100,000; for oftentimes a small corporation may be made the instrumentality through which great monopolistic powers can be exercised. Therefore it will not do to classify in such a way as to eliminate the small corporations, for if you do you may eliminate from the operation of the law the most outrageous outlaws. The powers must be great; the application of the powers will necessarily be limited.

PUBLICITY.

And so as to publicity. The commission is to make public such matters involved in their investigations and reports as they deem advisable, except so far as their information relates to trade processes, names of customers, and things of that kind. They are to have full power of publicity, but it is not to be expected that they will publish everything that comes within their observation. Those matters that are material in the public interest alone will be published, and ought to be published. Here let me say that the sentiment is growing, not only in the country at large but in the legal fraternity itself, that the strict limitations that relate to private business organizations should not be applied to corporations which are public instrumentalities, created by law, artificial beings, owing their life and their existence to the Government itself, and the law of whose life should be exposed to that Government at every step in their procedure.

Mr. President, there are three other provisions in section 3. One relates to the aid which this commission is to give the courts; another to the aid it is to give to the Attorney General in enforcing decrees; another relates to reporting to the Attorney General any infractions of the Sherman antitrust law which come under its observation.

NO INTERFERENCE WITH ATTORNEY GENERAL.

This bill does not interfere with the Attorney General in the administration of the antitrust law. There has been a great indisposition to change in any way the Sherman antitrust law, in which the country has confidence, or to change the agency through which that law is to be administered, so that this bill leaves the powers of the Attorney General as complete as ever with reference to the enforcement of the antitrust law. So far as my individual opinion is concerned, I would favor an entire turning over of the administration of the antitrust law to this commission, as contributing to greater precision, greater certainty, greater consecutiveness in the prosecution of corporate outlaws; but public sentiment is not yet prepared for that step, and so I yield to the judgment of the committee in that particular.

All the powers of this commission are in aid of the courts and in aid of the Attorney General, and are not intended to interfere with his control over the enforcement of the Sherman law. We all know, so far as the courts are concerned, that both the Attorney General and the courts have realized that they lack the administrative machinery and experience necessary to enable them to form proper judgment as to the method of dissolution and the method of reintegrating the component parts of these great industrial combinations. No one can complain of any of the decisions of the Supreme Court upon this subject, with the exception perhaps of the decision in the Knight case. They have uniformly upheld the law and have applied it wherever it ought justly to be applied, but they have not been so successful in the form or the effect of their decrees; and this difficulty arises from the fact that the Attorney General who prosecutes and the judges who sit in judgment belong to the legal profession, and have not, as a rule, experience or training in either economics or industry; and they have been exploring unknown fields when they reached out into the great fields of industry and sought to make such a readjustment of the subsidiary companies and component parts of these great combinations as to bring them all in harmony with the law. The result has been a serious disappointment on the part of the people of the United States in the results arising from these victories of the Government in its contest with these great combinations.

It is expected that the trade commission will be composed not only of eminent lawyers but of eminent economists, business men of large experience, and publicists, and that their knowledge and information and experience will be of such a varied nature as to make them more competent to deal with the practical question of the dissolution of these combinations than any court or Attorney General could be. It is also expected that as a result of investigation and as the result of long experience they will build up a body of information and of administrative law that will be of service not only to them but to the country itself, and that gradually standards will be established that will be accepted and will constitute our code of business morals.

POWER TO AID THE COURTS.

The power, therefore, is given to this interstate trade commission to act, upon the suggestion of the court, in shaping the decree, making a report as a master in chancery would to the court, and having its recommendations stand the test of the arguments of counsel upon both sides. It is also given the power, after the decree is entered, to investigate as to whether the decree is being carried out, and to make report to the Attorney General. It is also authorized, whenever in its investigations it finds any infraction of the Sherman antitrust law, to report that delinquency, with its findings, to the Attorney General. The power is also given to the commission to inquire into trade practices abroad, and to inquire whether American corporate combinations are joining with foreign producers in an endeavor to control prices.

There has been some difference of opinion, I believe, between Attorneys General as to whether the Sherman antitrust law applies to exports. This bill does not determine that question, but simply gives the commission power to inquire as to whether there is any control effected by American exporters in conjunction with foreign producers with a view to controlling prices, and also the power to inquire into trade practices abroad; and here comes the subject of a very general complaint.

It is contended amongst American exporters that if in their export business they are subject to the Sherman antitrust law, it prevents them from having any understanding with other exporters with reference to the practical conduct of their business abroad with a view to getting a good price for American exports. Their contention is that other countries have not such stringent laws as we have with reference to trusts and monopolies, while England has a common law regarding trusts upon which our Sherman antitrust law is based, England does not endeavor at all to pursue people criminally, but leaves the suit to be prosecuted by individuals instead of by the Government. We all know how ineffective that is. The suit of an individual against a strong combination is the contest of a lilliputian against a giant. So, though the law of England may be the same as our law, there is a difference in the manner and the method of enforcement, and there are understandings between great business concerns there that would invite active prosecution in this country.

EXPORT TRADE.

In Germany, through their cartel arrangements, as they are called, great combinations are organized with a view to controlling prices; and not only combinations, but associations in trade, and so forth. These things are regulated by the Government; but the combination itself is not unlawful. Germany has made great advance on the social side of such legislation. The tendencies of England and of America have always been toward intensely individualized action. The tendency of Germany has been toward collective action, embracing something of the character of State socialism. So the things that are under condemnation here are approved by the Government there, but are subject to regulation.

One of the things which the purchasers of American exports do is to combine together to mark down and knock down the price of American exports. They resort to numerous devices on this line, one of them being an association of the buyers operating through one purchaser, who, dealing with a number of American exporters forbidden by law to have concerted action, is, of course, at a great advantage in securing a lower price. So many of our law-abiding American concerns engaged in large operations in the export trade, and perfectly ready to respond to every domestic requirement of the Sherman antitrust law, declare that in their business contests with the world they should not be put in a strait-jacket while the foreign purchasers have unlimited freedom of action.

That is one of the subjects this commission is to inquire into. It will be an inquiry of great importance, involving a study of the industrial and economic systems of all the principal nations of the world, and particularly with reference to the just treatment of American exports.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

One of the most important provisions in this bill, Mr. President, is that which relates to unfair competition. Unfair competition is made unlawful, and the commission is authorized, when any case of unfair practice or unfair method is brought to its attention, to summon the party charged and to have a hearing, and if it decides that the practice or method is unfair, to issue an order compelling its discontinuance, and if that order is not obeyed it can carry the matter into court and secure a judgment of the court compelling obedience to the commission's order.

Now, objections are made to this as the creation of a new offense against trade. Unfair competition, it is claimed by many, has no legal significance, and Congress in giving this power to the commission practically delegates the power to legislate as to what practices are under the condemnation of law. It is not questioned that Congress can by law specifically describe the practices which come under the condemnation of the law and make them unlawful, and submit the enforcement of the law to the commission, but it is claimed that Congress has no power to evade that duty of legislation and to turn it over practically to the commission itself by declaring unfair competition to be unlawful and then leaving it to the commission to determine what practice constitutes unfair competition.

Mr. President, our answer to that is that it would be utterly impossible for Congress to define the numerous practices which constitute unfair competition and which are against good morals in trade, for we are beginning to realize that there is a standard of morals in trade or that there ought to be. Germany does not hesitate by law to condemn practices in business that are contra bonos mores. It leaves their tribunals to determine what practices are against good morals.

We have gone a great way in that direction ourselves. I was saying it is utterly impossible for such a commission to define all the practices that are against good morals in trade and that tend to give competitors unfair advantage and dishonest advantage.

When the representatives of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, and the American Vehicle Association were before our committee urging the adoption of an interstate trade commission, I questioned them with reference to this provision relating to unfair competition, and the expression was that they thought it desirable. When I asked one of the members of the Illinois association whether he thought it best to attempt to define these practices or simply to declare them unlawful under the general terms of unfair competition he declared that the latter was the only course; that if there were 20 bad trade practices to-day and you were to name them in the law and condemn, there would be others established to-morrow. It is the illusive character of the trade practice that makes it though condemned to-day appear in some other form to-morrow. If we should attempt to define all the trade practices that can be devised, that would create dishonest advantage in competition, we would undertake a hopeless task.

Mr. President, I contend that the words "unfair competition" have a legal significance, and that if they have not Congress can give them a legal significance. We refer to the legislation with reference to the railroads, where Congress gave the power finally to fix a reasonable rate. There the determination of what the word "reasonable" meant was submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission, just as the meaning of the term "unfair competition" is here submitted to the trade commission. Congress condemned unjust discrimination and gave to that commission the enforcement of the condemnation. Read through the act to regulate commerce and you will find it bristling with just such phrases.

And it shall be the duty of every carrier subject to the provisions of this act to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable request therefor, and to establish through routes and just and reasonable rates applicable thereto; and to provide reasonable facilities for operating such through routes and to make reasonable rules and regulations with respect to the exchange, interchange, and return of cars used therein, and for the operation of such through routes, and providing for reasonable compensation to those entitled thereto.

All charges made for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property and for the transmission of messages by telegraph, telephone, or cable, as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, shall be just and reasonable; and every unjust and unreasonable charge for such service or any part thereof is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

No refinements in this act are entered into at all defining what is unreasonable or unjust.

I will not weary the Senate with quoting these phrases by reading at length.

The Supreme Court upon passing on these terms does not hesitate to sustain them, and declares that the enactment does not in any way constitute a delegation of legislative authority. You will find thus the court sustaining rules enacted by the Forestry Service, rules the infraction of which may create a criminal offense.

I will not weary the Senate by referring to these decisions in detail, but will insert them in my remarks.

The list of authorities is as follows:

AUTHORITIES—UNFAIR COMPETITION.

Congress would not delegate legislative power to the interstate trade commission by requiring it to apply a general rule against unfair competition to particular facts, conditions, and circumstances. (Field v. Clark, 143 U. S., 649; in re Kollock, 165 U. S., 526; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S., 470; Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U. S., 364; St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railway v. Taylor, 210 U. S., 281, 287; Monongahela Bridge Co. v. United States, 216 U. S., 177; United States v. Grimand, 220 U. S., 506; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co., 224 U. S., 194; Kansas City Southern Railway Co. v. United States, 231 U. S., 423.)

The prohibition of unfair competition is sufficiently definite and certain. (Nash v. United States, 229 U. S., 373; United States v. Grimand, 220 U. S., 506.)

ACT TO REGULATE COMMERCE.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

BUTTFIELD V. STRANAHAN (192 U. S., 470).

Section 1 of act of Congress makes it unlawful "to import or bring into the United States any merchandise as tea which is inferior in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the standards provided in section 3 of this act, and the importation of all such merchandise is hereby prohibited."

Section 2 provides for appointment by the Secretary of the Treasury of a board of tea experts "who shall prepare and submit to him standard samples of tea."

Section 3 provides that the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of such board, "shall fix and establish uniform standards of purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of all kinds of teas imported into the United States," and that all teas inferior to such standards shall be deemed to be within the prohibition of the first section hereof.

White, J., page 496:

The claim that the statute commits to the arbitrary discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury the determination of what teas may be imported, and therefore in effect vests that official with legislative power, is without merit. We are of opinion that the statute, when properly construed, as said by the circuit court of appeals, but expresses the purpose to exclude the lowest grades of tea, whether demonstrably of inferior purity, or unfit for consumption, or presumably so because of their inferior quality. This, in effect, was the fixing of a primary standard, and devolved upon the Secretary of the Treasury the mere executive duty to effectuate the legislative policy declared in the statute. * * * Congress legislated on the subject as far as was reasonably practicable, and from the necessities of the case was compelled to leave to executive officials the duty of bringing about the result pointed out by the statute. (Accord. Field v. Clark, 143 U. S., 649; St. Louis & Iron Mountain Ry. v. Taylor, 210 U. S., 281, 287.) 287.)

UNION BRIDGE CO. V. UNITED STATES (204 U. S., 364).

Section 18 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, provides that whenever the Secretary of War shall have reason to believe that any bridge over any navigable waterway of the United States is an unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of such waters, it shall be his duty, after hearing, to order alteration of the bridge so as to render navigation unobstructed, specifying changes to be made, and prescribing reasonable time in which to make them. Willful failure to obey the order is made criminal misdemeanor.

This statute does not delegate legislative power. Harlan, J., page 385:

It would seem too clear to admit of serious doubt that the statute under which the Secretary of War proceeded is in entire harmony with the principles announced in former cases. In no substantial, just sense does it confer upon that officer as head of an executive department powers strictly legislative or judicial in their nature, or which must be exclusively exercised by Congress or by the courts. * * * As appropriate to the object to be accomplished, as a means to an end within the power of the National Government, Congress, in execution of a declared policy, committed to the Secretary of War the duty of ascertaining all the facts essential in any inquiry whether particular bridges over the waterways of the United States were unreasonably obstructions to free navigation.

Congress could have determined the fact itself, but this was impracticable because Congress has so much else to do. The court further said:

By the statute in question Congress declared in effect that navigation should be freed from unreasonable obstructions arising from bridges of insufficient height, width of span, or other defects. It stopped, however, with this declaration of a general rule and imposed upon the Secretary of War the duty of ascertaining what particular cases came within the rule prescribed by Congress, as well as the duty of enforcing the rule in such cases. In performing that duty the Secretary of War will only execute the clearly expressed will of Congress, and will not, in any true sense, exert legislative or judicial power.

UNITED STATES v. GRIMAND (220 U. S., 506).

The acts relating to forest reservations show that they were intended 'to improve and protect the forest and to secure favorable conditions of water flows." It was declared that the acts should not be "construed to prohibit the egress and ingress of actual settlers" residing therein nor "to prohibit any person from entering the reservation for all proper and lawful purposes, provided that such persons comply with the rules and regulations covering such forest reservation." It was also declared that the Secretary of Agriculture "may make such rules and regulations and establish such service as will insure the objects of such reservation, namely, to regulate their occupancy and use and to preserve the forests thereon from destruction; and any violation of the provisions of this act or such rules and regulations shall be punished," as provided in Senate bill 5388. (Ch. 3, p. 1044, Rev. Stats., as amended.)

This case arose on indictment for grazing sheep on reservation without having obtained permission required by the regulations adopted by the Secretary of Agriculture. Demurrer was sustained, and Government sued out writ of error to Supreme Court. Defendants in error argued (1) that the law was unconstitutional, because it did not sufficiently define or define at all what acts done or omitted to be done within the supposed purview of the said act should constitute an offense or offenses against the United States; (2) the law is unconstitutional, as it is not within the power of Congress to delegate to the Secretary of Agriculture authority or power to determine what acts shall be criminal; and the act in question is a delegation of legislative power to an executive officer to define and establish what shall constitute the essential elements of a crime against the United States.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court below (Lamar, 585):

Under these acts, therefore, any use of the reservation for grazing or other lawful purpose was required to be subject to the rules and regulations established by the Secretary of Agriculture. To pasture sheep and cattle on the reservation at will and without restraint might interfere seriously with the accomplishment of the purposes for which they were established. But a limited and regulated use for pasturage might not be inconsistent with the object sought to be attained by the statute. The determination of such questions, however, was a matter of administrative detail. What might be harmless in one forest might be harmful to another. What might be injurious at one stage of timber growth, or at one season of the year, might not be so at another. In the nature of things it was impracticable for Congress to provide general regulations for these various and varying details of management. Each reservation had its peculiar and special features; and in authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to meet these local conditions Congress was merely conferring administrative functions upon an agent, and not delegating to him legislative power."

From the beginning of the Government various acts have been passed conferring upon executive officers power to make rules and regulations; not for the government of their departments, but for administering the laws which did govern. None of these statutes could confer legislative power. But when Congress had legislated and indicated its will, it could give to those who were to act under such general provisions "power to fill up the details" by the establishment of administrative rules and regulations the violation of which could be punished by fine or imprisonment fixed by Congress, or by penalties fixed by Congress, or measured by the injury done.

Thus it is unlawful to charge unreasonable rates or to discriminate between shippers; and the Interstate Commerce Commission has been given authority to make reasonable rates and to administer the law against discrimination. (Int. Com. Comn. v. I. C. R. R., 215 U. S., 452; Int. Com. Comn. v. C. R. I., etc. R. R., 218 U. S., 88.) Congress provides that after a given date only cars with drawbars of uniform height should be used in interstate commerce, and then constitutionally left to the commission the administrative duty of fixing a uniform standard. (St. L. & I. M. R. R. v. Taylor, 210 U. S., 281, 287; In Union Bridge Co. v. U. S., 204 U. S., 364; In re Kollock, 165 U. S., 526; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S., 470.) It appeared from the statutes involved that Congress had either expressly or by necessary implication made it unlawful, if not criminal, to obstruct navigable streams, to sell unbranded oleomargarine, or to import unwholesome teas. With this unlawfulness as a predicate, the executive officers were authorized to make rules and regulations appropriate to the several matters covered by the various acts. A violation of these rules was then made an offense punishable as prescribed by Congress. But in making these regulations the officers did not legislate. They did not go outside of the circle of that which the act itself had affirmatively required to be done or treated as unlawful if done. But, confining themselves within the field covered by the statute, they could adopt regulations of the nature they had thus been generally authorized to make in order to administer the law and carry the statute into effect.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION V. GOODRICH TRANSIT CO. (224 U. S., 194).

One of the questions in the case was whether the power conferred upon the commission in its discretion to prescribe a period of time within which common carriers should have a uniform system of accounts and the manner in which such accounts should be kept, was void by reason of its being an unlawful delegation of legislative power.

Counsel for appellees argues as follows, page 201:

Section 20 of the act to regulate commerce is void because it is an unlawful delegation of legislative power. The law gives the commission discretion to determine whether it will legislate or not; the law also confers discretionary power upon the commission to determine what (if any) the legislation shall be.

The court (Day) said, page 214:

We can not agree to this contention. The Congress may not delegate its purely legislative power to a commission, but, having laid down the general rules of the action under which a commission shall proceed, it may require of that commission the application of such rules to particular situations and the investigation of facts, with a view to making orders in a particular matter within the rules laid down by the Congress. This rule has been frequently stated and illustrated in recent cases in this court, and needs no amplification here. (Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S., 470; Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U. S., 364; United States v. Grimand, 220 U. S., 506.)

In section 20 Congress has authorized the commission to require annual reports. The act itself prescribes in detail what those reports shall contain. The commission is permitted, in its discretion, to require a uniform system of accounting, and to prohibit other methods of accounting than those which the commission may prescribe. In other words, Congress has laid down general rules for the guidance of the commission, leaving to it merely the carrying out of the details in the exercise of the powers so conferred. This, we think, is not a delegation of legislative authority

KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN CO. V. UNITED STATES (231 U. S., 423).

Interstate Commerce Commission against Goodrich Transit Co. affirmed as to constitutionality of provision of section 20 of act to regulate commerce, giving commission power to prescribe the forms of accounts, and so forth.

There is here no unconstitutional delegation of legislative powers. The reasoning adopted in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co. (224 U. S., 194, 210, etc.), is controlling. And since, as just shown, uniformity in accounting is dependent upon the adoption and enforcement of precise classification, the authority to define the terms of the classification necessarily follows. It amounts, after all, to no more than laying down the general rules of action under which the commission shall proceed and leaving it to the commission to apply those rules to particular situations and circumstances by the establishment and enforcement of administrative regulations.

STETTLER V. O'HARA (139 PAC. REV. (OREG.), 743, 749).

The act creating the industrial welfare commission provides that—it shall be unlawful to employ women or minors in any occupation within the State of Oregon for unreasonably long hours; and it shall be unlawful to employ women and minors in any occupation within the State of Oregon under such surroundings or conditions, sanitary or otherwise, as may be detrimental to their health or morals; and it shall be unlawful to employ women in any occupation within the State of Oregon for wages which are inadequate to supply the necessary cost of living and to maintain them in health; and it shall be unlawful to employ minors in any occupation within the State of Oregon for unreasonably low wages.

The commission is authorized to ascertain and declare standards and to enforce the law by order after report to it by a conference of representatives of employers, employees, and public. The court held that this law does not delegate legislative power to the commission. "It (the commission) is authorized only to ascertain facts that will determine the localities, business, hours, and wages to which the law shall apply." (Act of Feb. 17, 1913. See Const. Law. Cent. Dig., secs. 94–102; Dec. Dig., sec. 62.)

NASH V. UNITED STATES (229 U. S., 373).

Held that the Sherman Act is not invalid on its criminal side because too vague.

The court (Holmes) said, page 376:

And thereupon it is said that the crime thus defined by the statute contains in its definition an element of degree as to which estimates may differ, with the result that a man might find himself in prison because his honest judgment did not anticipate that of a jury of less competent men. The kindred proposition that the criminality of an act can not depend upon whether a jury may think it reasonable or unreasonable. There must be some definiteness and certainty, as cited from the late Mr. Justice Brewer, sitting in the circuit court, Tozer v. U. S. (52 Fed. Rep., 917, 919).

But apart from the common law as to restraint of trade thus taken up by the statute, the law is full of instances where a man's fate depends on his estimating rightly—that is, as the jury subsequently estimates it—some matter of degree. If his judgment is wrong, not only may he incur a fine or a short imprisonment, as here; he may incur the penalty of death. An act causing death may be murder, manslaughter, or misadventure, according to the degree of danger attending it by common experience in the circumstances known to the actor. "The very meaning of the fiction of implied malice in such cases at common law was that a man might have to answer with his life for consequences which he neither intended nor foresaw." Com. v. Pierce (138 Mass., 165, 178); Com. v. Chance (174 Mass., 245, 252). "The criterion in such cases is to examine whether common social duty would, under the circumstances, have suggested a more circumspect conduct." I East P. C., 262. If a man should kill another by driving an automobile furiously into a crowd, he might be convicted of murder, however little he expected the result. See Reg. v. Desmond and other illustrations in Stephen, Dig. Crim. Law (art. 223, 1st ed., p. 146). If did no more than drive negligently through a street he might get off with manslaughter or less. Reg. v. Swindall (2 C. & R., 230); Rex v. Burton (1 Strange, 481). And in the last case he might be held, although he himself thought that he was acting as a prudent man should. See The Germanic (196 U. S., 589, 596). But, without further argument, the case is very nearly disposed of by Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas (No. 1) (212 U. S., 86, 109), where Mr. Justice Brewer's decision and other similar ones were cited in vain. We are of the opinion that there is no constitutional difficulty in the way of enforcing the criminal part of the act.

The words "unfair competition" have received a judicial construction. In South Dakota we have the decision of the supreme court in the case of the State against Central Lumber Co.

UNFAIR COMPETITION—STATE v. CENTRAL LUMBER CO. (24 S. D., 136).

This decision refers to legislation as having been first aimed at monopolies brought about through combination. But referring to local price cutting as another means of securing monopoly and to the legislation making such price cutting unlawful, the court said:

Again human experience, recognizing the laws of God and nature, controlled and guided by an aroused public conscience, evolved a new law and placed it upon the statute books of this and many other States, a law aimed at monopolies obtained through unfair competition.

With reference to forest regulations the Supreme Court held, in the case of the United States v. Grimand (220 U. S., 506), that Congress in authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the local conditions by rules was merely conferring administrative functions upon an agent and not delegating legislative power.

In the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co. (224 U. S., 194) Congress gave the Interstate Commerce Commission power to prescribe a uniform system of accounts; claimed to be an unlawful delegation. The court said:

We can not agree to this contention. The Congress may not delegate its purely legislative power to a commission, but, having laid down the general rules of the action under which a commission shall proceed, it may require of that commission the application of such rules to particular situations and the investigation of facts, with a view to making orders in a particular matter within the rules laid down by the Congress.

So here we have a rule that unfair competition is unlawful, and it is the duty of the commission to apply that rule to the particular situation upon an investigation of the facts, and to condemn a practice which, in its judgment, is unfair.

Mr. President, I believe that if this act is passed there will be a marvelous change in the business conditions of the country for the better. We have thus far endeavored, rather feebly I must admit, to enforce the Sherman antitrust law through the criminal courts. We have not succeeded, and we have not succeeded because the evidence establishing a monopoly is oftentimes of the most minute and intricate character, requiring months of presentation, as in the Beef Trust cases in Chicago, to a weary jury, a jury composed mainly of business men unwilling to punish other business men for practices they knew were general in the community. The business standards of the country have been lowered, and it has been difficult, and I say this upon the authority of numerous prosecutors, to bring these matters to the attention of a jury in such a way as to secure conviction.

We will build up through this commission a system of administrative law that will be as well and thoroughly accepted as to trade as are the decisions of our Interstate Commerce Commission regarding transportation, and we will bring peace and security to the business world. I know it is often said that any business man can read the Sherman antitrust law and determine whether or not the methods and practices which he is pursuing are forbidden by that law. That is true only with qualifications. Many men are doing business under apprehension of the law when, with safe guidance, they need have no apprehension of it. A commission of this kind will be instructive rather than punitive, helpful rather than prejudicial, and will be of immense advantage to the business world.

But, Mr. President, I am proceeding beyond the time which I allotted to myself. Later on I may take up in more detail some of the questions I have touched upon. For the present I will content myself with this general statement. I now move that the Senate take up for consideration House bill 15613, to create an interstate-trade commission, and so forth.

The report of the Interstate Commerce Committee referred to by Mr. NEWLANDS is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 597, Sixty-third Congress, second session.]

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted the following report to accompany House bill 15613.

The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred H. R. 15613, a bill to create an interstate trade commission, etc., passed by the House of Representatives on the 5th day of June, 1914, reports as a substitute therefor Senate bill No. 4160, reported favorably to the Senate on the 5th day of June (calendar day, June 6), 1914, to which latter bill have been added provisions regarding unfair competition and the investigation of foreign trade practices.

The substituted bill is as follows:

[Senate substitute for H. R. 15613.]

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Federal trade commission, composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, and the said Federal trade commission is referred to hereinafter as "the commission."

The words defined in this section shall have the following meaning when found in this act, to wit:

"Commerce" means such commerce as Congress has the power to regulate under the Constitution.

The term "corporation" or "corporations" shall include joint stock associations and all other associations having shares of capital or capital stock, organized to carry on business for profit.

"Antitrust acts" means the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890; also sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1894; and also the act entitled "An act to amend sections 73 and 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,'" approved February 12, 1913.

ORGANIZATION.

SEC. 2. Upon the organization of the commission the Bureau of Corporations and the offices of Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Corporations shall cease to exist, and the employees of said bureau shall become employees of the commission in such capacity as it may designate. The commission shall take over all the records, furniture, and equipment of said bureau. All work and proceedings pending before the bureau may be continued by the commission free from the direction or control of the Secretary of Commerce. All appropriations heretofore made for the support and maintenance of the bureau and its work are hereby authorized to be expended by the commission for said purposes.

Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. A vacancy in the commission shall not impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission.

The commissioners shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The terms of office of the commissioners shall be seven years each. The terms of those first appointed by the President shall date from the taking effect of this act, and shall be as follows:

One shall be appointed for a term of three years, one for a term of four years, one for a term of five years, one for a term of six years, and one for a term of seven years; and after said commissioners shall have been so first appointed, all appointments, except to fill vacancies, shall be for terms of seven years each. The commission shall elect one of its members chairman for such period as it may determine. The commission shall elect a secretary and may elect an assistant secretary. Said secretary and assistant secretary shall hold their offices or connection with the commission at the pleasure of the commission. Each commissioner shall receive a salary of $10,000 per annum. The secretary of the commission shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. The assistant secretary shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. In case of a vacancy in the office of any commissioner during his term, an appointment shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill such vacancy for the unexpired term. The office of the commission shall be in the city of Washington, but the commission may at its pleasure meet and exercise all its powers at any other place, and may authorize one or more of its members to prosecute any investigation, and for the purposes thereof to exercise the powers herein given the commission.

The commission shall have such attorneys, accountants, experts, examiners, special agents, and other employees as may from time to time be appropriated for by Congress and shall have authority to audit their bills and fix their compensation. With the exception of the secretary and assistant secretary and one clerk to each of the commissioners and such attorneys and experts as may be employed, all employees of the commission shall be a part of the classified civil service. The commission shall also have the power to adopt a seal, which shall be judicially noticed, and to rent suitable rooms for the conduct of its work.

All the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners or by their employees under their orders in making any investigation or upon official business in any other place than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the commission.

The Auditor for the State and Other Departments shall receive and examine all accounts of expenditures of the commission.

Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

POWERS OF COMMISSION.

SEC. 3. The commission shall have power among others—

(a) To investigate from time to time and as often as the commission may deem advisable the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships.

(b) To require any corporation subject to the provisions of this act which the commission may designate to furnish to the commission from time to time information, statements, and records concerning its organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations or to individuals, associations, or partnerships and to require the production for examination of all books, documents, correspondence, contracts, memoranda, or other papers relating to or in any way affecting the commerce in which such corporation under inquiry is engaged or concerning its relations to any individual, association, or partnership, and to make copies of the same.

(c) To prescribe as near as may be a uniform system of annual reports from such corporations or classes of corporations subject to the provisions of this act, as the commission may designate, and to fix the time for the filing of such reports, and to require such reports or any special report, to be made under oath or otherwise, in the discretion of the commission.

(d) To make public, in the discretion of the commission, any information obtained by it in the exercise of the powers, authority, and duties conferred upon it by this act, except so far as may be necessary to protect trade processes, names of customers, and such other matters as the commission may deem not to be of public importance, and to make annual and special reports to the Congress and to submit therewith recommendations for additional legislation.

(e) In any suit in equity brought by or under the direction of the Attorney General as provided in the antitrust acts if the court finds for the complainant it may, upon its own motion or the motion of any party to such suit, refer the matter of the form of the decree to be entered to the commission as a master in chancery; whereupon the commission shall proceed in that capacity upon such notice to the parties and upon such hearing as the court may prescribe, and shall as speedily as practicable make report with its findings to the court, which report and findings having been made and filed shall be subject to the judicial procedure established for the consideration and disposition of a master's report and findings in equity cases.

(f) Whenever a restraning order or an interlocutory or final decree has heretofore been entered or shall hereafter be entered against any defendant or defendants in any suit brought by the United States to prevent and restrain any violation of the antitrust acts, the commission shall have power, and it shall be its duty, upon the application of the Attorney General, to make investigation of the manner in which the order or decree has been or is being carried out, and as to whether the same has been or is being violated, and what, if any, further order, decree, or relief is advisable. It shall transmit to the Attorney General a report embodying its findings as a result of any such investigation with such recommendations for further action as it may deem advisable and the report shall be made public in the discretion of the commission.

(g) If the commission believes from its inquiries and investigations, instituted upon its own initiative or at the suggestion of the President, the Attorney General, or either House of Congress that any corporation, individual, association, or partnership has violated any law of the United States regulating commerce, it shall report its findings and the evidence in relation thereto to the Attorney General with its recommendations.

For the purpose of prosecuting any investigation or proceeding authorized by this section the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documents or writings of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against.

(h) The commission is hereby directed to investigate, as expeditiously as may be, trade conditions in foreign countries where associations, combinations, or practices of buyers, dealers, or traders may injuriously affect the export trade of the United States, and also to investigate whether American exporters have combined with each other or with foreign producers or dealers to control prices abroad, and to report to Congress thereon from time to time.

SEC. 4. The powers and jurisdiction herein conferred upon the commission shall extend over all trade associations, corporate combinations, and corporations as hereinbefore defined engaged in or affecting commerce, except banks and common carriers.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

SEC. 5. That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful.

The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that any corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce it shall issue and serve upon such corporation a written order at least 30 days in advance of the time set therein for hearing directing it to appear before the commission and show cause why an order shall not be issued by the commission restraining and prohibiting it from using such method of competition, and if upon such hearing the commission shall find that the method of competition in question is prohibited by this act it shall thereupon issue an order restraining and prohibiting the use of the same. The commission may at any time modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any order issued by it under this act.

Whenever the commission, after the issuance of such order, shall find that such corporation has not complied therewith the commission may petition the district court of the United States within any district where the method in question was used or where such corporation is located or carries on business, praying the court to issue an injunction to enforce such order of the commission; and the court is hereby authoried to issue such injunction.

SEC. 6. That if any corporation subject to this act shall fail to file any annual or special report, as provided in subdivision (b) of section 3 hereof, within the time fixed by the commission for filing the same, and such failure shall continue for 30 days after notice of such default, the corporation shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day of the continuance of such failure, which forfeiture shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States, and shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States brought in the district where the corporation has its principal office or in any district in which it shall do business. It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of forfeitures. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 7. Any person who shall willfully destroy, alter, mutilate, or remove out of the jurisdiction of the United States or authorize, assist in, or be privy to the willful destruction, alteration, mutilation, or removal out of the jurisdiction of the United States of any book, letter, paper, or document containing an entry or memorandum relating to commerce, the production of which the commission may require under this act, or who shall willfully make any false entry relating to commerce in any book of accounts or record of any trade association, corporate combination, or corporation, subject to the provisions of this act, or who shall willfully make or furnish to said commission or to its agent any false statement, return, or record, knowing the same to be false in any material particular, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Any employee of the commission who divulges any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of his employment by the commission, except in so far as it has been made public by the commission, or as he may be directed by the commission or by a court, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

TESTIMONY AND IMMUNITY.

SEC. 8. The commission shall have and exercise the powers possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of evidence, and to administer oaths. All the powers, requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by the act to regulate commerce, as amended in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall apply to witnesses, testimony, and evidence before the commission.

SEC. 9. The district courts of the United States, upon the application of the commission alleging a failure by any corporation, or by any of its officers or employees, or by any witness, to comply with any order of the commission for the furnishing of information, shall have jurisdiction to issue such writs, orders, or other process as may be necessary to enforce any order of the commission and to punish the disobedience thereof.

SEC. 10. The several departments and bureaus of the Government, when directed by the President, shall furnish the commission, upon its request, all records, papers, and information in their possession relating to any trade association, corporate combination, or corporation subject to any of the provisions of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to create a Federal Trade Commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

THE TAFT ADMINISTRATION.

The Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce has had under consideration for many years the organization of a trade commission, with powers over trade analogous to those exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission over transportation.

Under President Taft's administration, Senate resolution No. 98, Sixty-second Congress, first session, authorizing the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce to report to the Senate what changes were necessary or desirable in the laws relating to the control of corporations, persons, or firms engaged in interstate commerce, was presented by Mr. Clapp, the chairman of the committee, and was adopted by the Senate on the 26th day of July, 1911. Under this resolution exhaustive hearings were held, during which 103 persons gave their views on every phase of suggested trust legislation, filling nearly 3,000 pages of hearings.

At the first hearing, on the 4th day of August, 1911, the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce took up Senate bill 2941, introduced by Mr. NEWLANDS, for the organization of a trade commission, and Mr. NEWLANDS made a statement regarding it. The bill and statement appear in the appendix to this report, at pages 15 to 33.

Later on, as a result of the additional light shed upon this subject by the hearings, Mr. NEWLANDS introduced in the Senate, on February 26, 1912, Senate bill 5485, Sixty-second Congress, second session, entitled "A bill to create an interstate trade commission." This bill was tentatively taken up by the committee and amended in many particulars, but the committee took no final action upon it. The bill as tentatively amended by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce (appendix, p. 39) was reintroduced by Mr. NEWLANDS on the 12th day of April, 1913, as Senate bill 829.

THE CUMMINS REPORT.

The Senate committee, after long-continued hearings under Senate resolution 98, made a report, through Mr. CUMMINS, on the 26th day of February, 1913 (S. Rept. 1326, 62d Cong., 3d sess.), in which were included the additional views of Messrs. Pomerene, Tillman, Gore, Newlands, Crane, Brandegee, Oliver, and Lippitt.

The report of Mr. CUMMINS consisted mainly of a discussion of the decisions of the Supreme Court in the various trust cases, from the Knight case down to and including the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases; but it also took up the question of the desirability of legislation supplementary to the Sherman Act and considered the question, among others, of a trade commission, declaring "that through the intervention of such a body of men the legislative policy with respect to combinations and monopolies could be vastly more effectual than through the courts alone, which in most cases will take no cognizance of violations of the law for months or years after the violations occurred, and when the difficulty of awarding reparation for the wrong is almost insurmountable"; and also, with reference to the disintegration of combinations and the reconstruction of the associated corporations upon lawful lines, "it can not be gainsaid that a commission, the members of which are in close touch with business affairs, and who are intimately acquainted with the commercial situation, might be extremely helpful in the required adjustment."

In the additional views of Mr. NEWLANDS, appended to the Cummins report, Mr. NEWLANDS declared himself in favor of the immediate organization of a trade commission and urged the passage of the trade commission bill which he appended to his views. He quoted from previous utterances in the Senate, on January 11, 1911, as follows:

Mr. NEWLANDS. The railroad-commission bill furnishes a model for the action of Congress upon matters involving minute and scientific investigation. Had we followed the same method regarding the trusts that we followed regarding railroads we would have made much better progress in trust regulation. The antitrust act was passed 23 years ago, about the same time that the railroad commission was organized. The railroad question is practically settled; the settlement of the trust question has hardly been commenced. Had we submitted the administration of the antitrust act to an impartial quasi judicial tribunal similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission instead of to the Attorney General's Office, with its shifting officials, its varying policies, its lack of tradition, record, and precedent, we would by this time have made gratifying progress in the regulation and control of trusts through the quasi judicial investigations of a competent commission and through legislation based upon its recommendations. As it is, with the evasive and shifting incumbency and administration of the Attorney General's Office, oftentimes purely political in character, we find that the trusts are more powerful to-day than when the antitrust act was passed, and that evils have grown up so interwoven with the general business of the country as to make men tremble at the consequence of their disruption.

No bill was reported under the Clapp resolution and no additional action was taken by the Senate under President Taft's administration regarding trust legislation.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S ADMINISTRATION.

Under President Wilson's administration, after the passage of the tariff and banking laws at the extra session, the question of trust legislation came up at the regular session commencing in December, 1913. President Wilson, assuming that the Judiciary Committee of the House and the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate had jurisdiction over the entire subject, conferred with the chairmen of these two committes, Mr. Clayton and Mr. NEWLANDS, with reference to framing the tentative measures which would be submitted to the committees for consideration. Meanwhile the President delivered his message of January 20, 1914, regarding antitrust legislation, in which, after recommending legislation as to interlocking directorates, holding companies, and other matters, he took up the question of a trade commission, as follows:

The business of the country awaits also, has long waited, and has suffered because it could not obtain, further and more explicit legislative definition of the policy and meaning of the existing antitrust law. Nothing hampers business like uncertainty. Nothing daunts or discourages it like the necessity to take chances, to run the risk of failing under the condemnation of the law before it can make sure just what the law is. Surely we are sufficiently familiar with the actual processes and methods of monopoly and of the many hurtful restraints of trade to make definition possible, at any rate up to the limits of what experience has disclosed. These practices, being now abundantly disclosed, can be explicitly and item by item forbidden by statute in such terms as will practically eliminate uncertainty, the law itself and the penalty being made equally plain.

And the business men of the country desire something more than that the menace of legal process in these matters be made explicit and intelligible. They desire the advice, the definite guidance and information which can be supplied by an administrative body, an interstate trade commission.

The opinion of the country would instantly approve of such a commission. It would not wish to see it empowered to make terms with monopoly or in any sort to assume control of business, as if the Government made itself responsible. It demands such a commission only as an indispensable instrument of information and publicity, as a clearing house for the facts by which both the public mind and the managers of great business undertakings should be guided, and as an instrumentality for doing justice to business where the processes of the courts or the natural forces of correction outside the courts are inadequate to adjust the remedy to the wrong in a way that will meet all the equities and circumstances of the case.

Producing industries, for example, which have passed the point up to which combination may be consistent with the public interest and the freedom of trade, can not always be dissected into their component units as readily as railroad companies or similar organizations can be. Their dissolution by ordinary legal process may oftentimes involve financial consequences likely to overwhelm the security market and bring upon it breakdown and confusion. There ought to be an administrative commission capable of directing and shaping such corrective processes, not only in aid of the courts but also by independent suggestion, if necessary.

TENTATIVE BILLS.

Later on, as the result of an understanding between Mr. Clayton, chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, and Mr. NEWLANDS, chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, a bill was introduced on the same day, by Mr. Clayton in the House and Mr. NEWLANDS in the Senate—H. R. 12120 and S. 4160.

With reference to this bill, Mr. Clayton caused to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on the 22d day of January, 1914, the following press dispatch:

Representative Clayton this afternoon gave to the press the full text of the tentative bill as agreed upon by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House (Messrs. Clayton, CARLIN, and FLOYD of Arkansas) and the majority members of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, and said:

"The bill will be introduced at the same time by Representative Clayton and Senator NEWLANDS. The bill is modeled after the lines of what is commonly known as the Newlands bill, which was introduced in the Senate by Senator NEWLANDS, and involves the fundamental idea that a trade commission shall be created, consisting of five members, with full inquisitorial powers into the operation and organization of all corporations engaged in interstate commerce, other than common carriers. It provides for a commission of five members, makes the Commissioner of Corporations chairman of the board, and transfers all the existing powers of that bureau to the commission. Its relation to the Attorney General's office and to the courts is advisory. Its principal and most important duty, besides conducting investigations, will be to aid the courts, when requested, in the formation of decrees of dissolution, and with this end in view it empowers the courts to refer any part of pending litigation to the commission, including the proposed decree, for information and advice."

Senator NEWLANDS, being interviewed, said:

"The trade-commission bill and several other bills limiting the debatable ground of the Sherman Act have been the subject of laborious consideration by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House (consisting of Mr. Clayton, chairman, and Messrs. CARLIN, and FLOYD of Arkansas) during the holidays and before. The majority members of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate have been brought into consultation with them of late.

"The trade-commission bill preserves the essential features of the bill which I have been urging for some time, but contains amendments and additions of value and is, in my judgment, an improvement upon the bill as it was considered and improved by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate during the last Congress. As a whole, I should say that the trade-commission bill ought to be satisfactory to members of all parties, for it is distinctively progressive, and we have endeavored to frame it in harmony with the President's views, presented in an admirable message, which has received the approval of the entire country, regardless of party. While these bills represent at present the best thought of the participants in the shaping of this legislation they are presented simply as tentative measures, upon which the judgment of the proper committees of the House and Senate and of the country is invoked."

THE HOUSE BILL.

The House bill H. R. 12120, introduced by Mr. Clayton, was not referred, however, to the Judiciary Committee, but to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The Senate bill S. 4160, introduced by Mr. NEWLANDS, was referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate.

Later on a bill was introduced by Mr. COVINGTON, of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce (H. R. 15613) for the creation of an interstate trade commission, on the 13th day of April, 1914, covering in substance the same lines as the Clayton bill, but differing in detail and method. This bill was taken up for consideration by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and after amendment by the committee was reported favorably and passed by the House on the 5th day of June, 1914.

THE SENATE BILL.

Meanwhile, however, the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce had been considering Senate bill 4160, introduced by Mr. NEWLANDS, and had, on the 5th day of June (calendar day June 6), 1914, after amending this measure, reported it favorably to the Senate. Later on the House bill H. R. 15613 came over to the Senate, and was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The Senate committee reports the House bill, with the recommendation that Senate bill 4160 as amended be substituted for it, adding thereto amendments regarding the investigation of foreign-trade practices and unfair competition.

AN ADMINISTRATIVE TRIBUNAL NEEDED.

Recent decisions of the Supreme Court make clear that all combinations in restraint of trade and monopolies are contrary to the law. All agree that while the Sherman law is the foundation stone of our policy on this question, additional legislation is necessary.

Experience in the execution of the law, however, as shown in the Standard Oil and American Tobacco decrees of dissolution, and in the frequent efforts of combinations to make voluntary adjustment with the Department of Justice, establishes that the question involved is administrative as well as legislative and judicial.

It is generally conceded that the peculiar character and importance of this question make it indispensable that some of the administrative functions should be lodged in a body specially competent to deal with them, by reason of information, experience, and careful study of the business and economic conditions of the industry affected. The knowledge of the law and the information as to the facts which are essential to prove that a combination is repugnant to the law are not likely to be entirely adequate for the determination of the best form of dissolution, and this has been recognized both by the Supreme Court and by the Department of Justice. Preliminary to the judicial determination of such questions as arise, for example, in the examination of proposals for a voluntary dissolution of a combination or in testing the lawfulness of existing business arrangements, a vast mass of information in numerous branches of industry, as well as expert knowledge, is indispensable. The proper enforcement of the Sherman law also requires vigilant supervision, which is most effectively obtained by a body in continual touch with the business organizations in the various industries.

The value of such administrative oversight and control has been recognized in the banking and transportation business, and we have in the Comptroller of the Currency, the newly created Federal Reserve Board, and the Interstate Commerce Commission practical illustrations of the operation of such organizations and frequent examples of the beneficial effects of their activity. As the general realization of these facts is widespread and confined to no one particular party, the introduction of this bill for a trade commission simply responds to a general need.

THE BUREAU OF CORPORATIONS.

While the Bureau of Corporations, which was established by an act of February 14, 1903, provided in some measure for the needs now generally recognized and has been of great value and public benefit in describing in detail the conditions in particular industries, and the organization, operation, and conduct of particular companies, the field which has been covered has necessarily been restricted and its organization as a division of an executive department under a single head, reporting only to the President, has not given to it either the authority or prestige which attaches to an independent commission, such as the Interstate Commerce Commission. Yet the need of such a position is quite as necessary in the governmental supervision of industrial activities as of railroads.

The establishment of a trade commission at the same time that the Interstate Commerce Commission was established would have prevented the extraordinary development of monopolistic organizations in industry. If this commission had been in existence during this period, we would not now have to deal with such organizations as the United States Steel Corporation, the International Harvester Co., or the American Sugar Refining Co.; the American Tobacco Co. would never have been organized, and even the Standard Oil Co. would not have survived the dissolution of the original Standard Oil Trust in 1892. Such a commission would have at least kept within limited bounds the activities of a multitude of price-fixing associations in different branches of business, which, together with the great trusts, have been potent causes of the present high cost of living.

OPPOSING THEORIES REGARDING A TRADE COMMISSION.

With the development of public sentiment on the subject of a trade commission, points of view have naturally changed with respect to particular provisions, and differences have also appeared with respect to the extent of the power to be lodged with such a commission. Some would found such a commission upon the theory that monopolistic industry is the ultimate result of economic evolution and that it should be so recognized and declared to be vested with a public interest, and as such regulated by a commission. This contemplates even the regulation of prices. Others hold that private monopoly is intolerable, unscientific, and abnormal, but recognize that a commission is a necessary adjunct to the preservation of competition and to the practical enforcement of the law. The functions of such commissions would be as distinct and different as the ideas upon which they are founded.

The commission which is proposed by your committee in the bill submitted is founded upon the latter purpose and idea. It certainly would appear to be the part of wisdom in so important a situation to proceed carefully, and with that end in view the committee has aimed to provide a body which will have sufficient power ancillary to the Department of Justice to aid materially and practically in the enforcement of the Sherman law and to aid the business public as well, and, incidentally, to build up a comprehensive body of information for the use and advantage of the Government and the business world. Its subsequent recommendations to Congress will be fortified with actual knowledge of practical conditions, both from the point of view of business desirability and economic tendency, and will furnish to Congress an analysis of conditions that will give other and further legislation the certainty and security of foundation commensurate with the vast interests of the public and of the business world which are at stake. If conditions demonstrate and warrant, there will be a natural growth in the power of this body. At the same time, the bill clothes it with sufficient power to be, we believe, of material assistance to the Department of Justice in the enforcement of the Sherman law and of material aid to the business world in building up a body of precedent in the matter of business practices.

Proceeding now to a brief consideration of the principal provisions of the present bill and some of the more important considerations which have determined its form, it is necessary to consider the constitution of the commission; the corporations, and so forth, placed under its jurisdiction; the powers of inquiry, and so forth, of the commission, and other powers.

CONSTITUTION OF COMMISSION.

It is provided that the commission shall be composed of five commissioners with a regular term of seven years, but the terms are so arranged that the whole membership will not be subject to a complete change at any one time. The work of this commission will be of a most exacting and difficult character, demanding persons who have experience in the problems to be met—that is, a proper knowledge of both the public requirements and the practical affairs of industry. It is manifestly desirable that the terms of the commissioners shall be long enough to give them an opportunity to acquire the expertness in dealing with these special questions concerning industry that comes from experience. The terms of the commissioners should expire in different years, in order that such changes as may be made from time to time shall not leave the commission deprived of men of experience in such questions.

One of the chief advantages of the proposed commission over the Bureau of Corporations lies in the fact that it will have greater prestige and independence, and its decisions, coming from a board of several persons, will be more readily accepted as impartial and well considered. For this reason also it is essential that it should not be open to the suspicion of partisan direction, and this bill provides, therefore, that not more than three members of the commission shall belong to any one political party.

The salary proposed for each commissioner is $10,000 per annum, which is the same salary as is provided for the Interstate Commerce Commission, and $2,000 per annum less than that of the members of the Federal Reserve Board under the currency law recently enacted. It would seem desirable that the salaries of the two commissions should be made equal to those of the reserve board. It is of paramount importance that men of the first order of ability should be attracted to these positions, and that service on this body should not entail too great a sacrifice to those who would serve thereon. A commission of this kind requires an unusual combination of qualifications. It requires not only a conversant knowledge with finance and transportation, but also a very comprehensive knowledge of the practical economic and legal aspects of the whole field of industry of the country, and exceptional experience, training, and judgment.

The absorption of the Bureau of Corporations by the commission, already alluded to, is a matter of such obvious desirability that it does not require any extended discussion. The work done by that bureau has demonstrated the ability of its staff, while its 10 years' experience in work along this line will be of great value to the proposed commission.

POWERS OF INVESTIGATION AND REPORTS.

Specifically subject to the jurisdiction of this commission are all corporations, trade associations, and corporate combinations engaged in interstate and foreign commerce, excepting banks and common carriers.

The commission has power to investigate the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation subject to the act which it may designate, and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships, and in aid thereof to require the production of information, statements, and records and the examination of books, documents, correspondence, contracts, etc., affecting the commerce in which such corporation is engaged, and to require annual or special reports from such corporations or classes of corporations as the commission may designate. The commission may make public any information obtained by it except as to trade processes, names of customers, and other matters not deemed to be of public importance; and may also make annual and special reports to Congress, including recommendations for additional legislation.

It will be seen that while large powers of investigation are given, they are not greatly in excess of those possessed and for years exercised by the Bureau of Corporations. Reports are required only from such corporations or classes of corporations as may be designated by the commission. There are over 350,000 corporations in this country, of which perhaps a large proportion may be engaged in interstate trade, but it must be realized that the number affected by the proposed legislation will not exceed 1,000. The powers, of course, must be large, but the exercise of the powers will not be against law-abiding business, but against lawless business. It will be persuasive and corrective rather than punitive so far as well-intentioned business is concerned. Although the commission is given a wide discretion, experience has proved that governmental administrative bodies seldom abuse such authority. To attempt to make precise limits between what they may and what they may not do would often seriously hamper their successful administration. To almost every inquiry it might be possible to make specious objections which, while lacking any real merit, might effectually clog the conduct of the inquiry. The committee carefully considered the question as to whether it should limit the powers of the commission to the conduct of the large corporations, but it was deemed important that the commission should be able to get information from the small concerns as well as from the large ones, inasmuch as a corporation of small capital might be made the instrumentality of large monopolistic control.

POWER TO AID THE COURTS.

The commission is also authorized to aid the courts in the form of the decree to be entered in suits under the antitrust acts and to make investigation as to the manner in which such decrees are being carried out, as to whether they are being violated, and what, if any, further order, decree, or relief is advisable, reporting its findings on these subjects to the Attorney General. It is also authorized, if it believes from its inquiries that any corporation has violated any law of the United States regulating commerce, to report its findings and the evidence relating thereto to the Attorney General.

These powers, partly administrative and partly quasi judicial, are of great importance and will bring both to the Attorney General and to the court the aid of special expert experience and training in matters regarding which neither the Department of Justice nor the courts may be expected to be proficient.

With the exception of the Knight case, the Supreme Court has never failed to condemn and to break up any organization formed in violation of the Sherman law which has been brought to its attention; but the decrees of the court, while declaring the law satisfactorily as to the dissolution of the combinations, have apparently failed in many instances in their accomplishment simply because the courts and the Department of Justice have lacked the expert knowledge and experience necessary to be applied to the dissolution of the combinations and the reassembling of the divided elements in harmony with the spirit of the law.

TRADE CONDITIONS ABROAD.

The commission is also authorized to investigate trade conditions in foreign countries injuriously affecting the export trade of the United States, as well as whether American exporters have combined with each other or with foreign producers or dealers to control prices abroad.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

One of the most important provisions of the bill is that which declares unfair competition in commerce to be unlawful, and empowers the commission to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce by orders issued after hearing, restraining, and prohibiting unfair methods of competition, which orders are enforceable in the courts.

The committee gave careful consideration to the question as to whether it would attempt to define the many and variable unfair practices which prevail in commerce and to forbid their continuance, or whether it would, by a general declaration condemning unfair practices, leave it to the commission to determine what practices were unfair. It concluded that the latter course would be the better, for the reason, as stated by one of the representatives of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, that there were too many unfair practices to define, and after writing 20 of them into the law it would be quite possible to invent others.

It may be stated that representatives of the National Implement and Vehicle Manufacturers' Association, the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, and the Illinois Manufacturers' Association approved the passage of a trade commission bill and a provision regarding the inquiry into and condemnation of unfair practices in trade.

It is believed that the term "unfair competition" has a legal significance which can be enforced by the commission and the courts, and that it is no more difficult to determine what is unfair competition than it is to determine what is a reasonable rate or what is an unjust discrimination. The committee was of the opinion that it would be better to put in a general provision condemning unfair competition than to attempt to define the numerous unfair practices, such as local price cutting, interlocking directorates, and holding companies intended to restrain substantial competition.

SUBPŒNA AND IMMUNITY.

In verifying the returns made by a corporation or in the conduct of such special investigations as the commission may deem necessary, it is indispensable that it should have extensive powers of inquiry, with the right to subpœna witnesses and to require the production of books and papers. The powers which, according to this bill, are granted to the commission, are practically the same as those now granted to the Interstate Commerce Commission or the Bureau of Corporations, while the same constitutional protection is given to witnesses who testify as to matters which might incriminate them.

The history of this legislation is given with particularity, so that Members of the Senate may have before them the gradual evolution of the measure and may consult the records referred to at any stage of the proceedings.

It demonstrates that legislation regarding the organization of a trade commission has been the subject of consideration in the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce for over three years, and in two important committees of the House for a period of over six months, during which period exhaustive hearings were had.

The legislation proposed is in line with the constantly increasing popular sentiment, as is demonstrated by the recent poll of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which declared overwhelmingly for such action. No contention can be made that the work of Congress on this subject has been hasty or immature. It has not been in advance of public sentiment, but rather has lagged behind.

APPENDIX.

HEARING BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

[Friday, August 4, 1911.]

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE,
Washington, D. C.

A TRADE COMMISSION—MR. NEWLANDS'S STATEMENT.

The committee met at 10 o'clock a. m. for the purpose of considering Senate bill No. 2941, Sixty-second Congress, second session, introduced by Mr. NEWLANDS on the 5th day of July, 1911, entitled "A bill to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes."

Present: Senators Clapp (chairman), Crane, Cummins, Brandegee, Oliver, Lippitt, Townsend, Newlands, Clarke of Arkansas, Watson, and Pomerene.

The CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the authority under which the committee acts.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
July 26, 1911.

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to inquire into and report to the Senate at the earliest date practicable what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to the creation and control of corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to persons or firms engaged in interstate commerce, and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress, at such times and places as they may deem desirable or practicable; to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to conduct hearings and have reports of same printed for use, and to employ such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as shall be necessary, and any expense in connection with such inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Attest:

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, Senator NEWLANDS. What is the number of your original bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No. 2941, introduced July 5, 1911.

NOTE.—Since the date of this hearing Mr. NEWLANDS withdrew the bill in its original form, and on August 21, 1911, introduced a substitute therefor, bearing the same number (S. 2941), with the same title and purpose. The said substitute bill is as follows:

[S. 2941, Sixty-second Congress, first session.]

"A bill to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this act shall be referred to and cited as the interstate trade commission act. Corporations a majority of whose voting securities is held or owned by any corporation subject to the terms of sections 4 or 16 of this act are referred to herein as subsidiaries of such holding or owning corporation.

"SEC. 2. That on and after day of , 1912, the Bureau of Corporations shall be separated from the Department of Commerce and Labor, and shall be thereafter known as the Interstate Trade Commission; and all of the powers, duties, and funds belonging or pertaining to the Bureau of Corporations shall thereafter belong and pertain to the Interstate Trade Commission. And all the officials and employees of said bureau shall be thereupon transferred to the Interstate Trade Commission. The said commission shall also have a secretary, a chief clerk, and such other and additional employees as shall be provided by law.

"SEC. 3. That the Interstate Trade Commission shall consist of five members, of whom no more than three shall belong to the same political party. The Commissioner of Corporations holding the office on the said day of , 1912, shall be ex officio a member of the commission for the first two years of its existence, and shall also be chairman of the commission for the first year of its existence, and thereafter the chairman shall be selected annually by the commission from its membership; and the then Deputy Commissioner of Corporations shall be the secretary of the commission for the first year of its existence, and thereafter the secretary shall be selected by the commission; and after the organization of the commission the titles and offices of Commissioner of Corporations and Deputy Commissioner of Corporations, respectively, shall cease to exist. The remaining four members of the commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the terms of such commissioners so first appointed shall be 4, 6, 8, and 10 years, respectively, and shall be so designated by the President in making such appointments; and thereafter all the commissioners shall hold office for the term of 10 years, and shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each member of said commission shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. The secretary shall receive a salary of thousand dollars a year.

"SEC. 4. That every corporation heretofore or hereafter organized within the United States or doing business therein whose annual gross receipts, inclusive of the annual gross receipts of its subsidiaries, if any, exceed $5,000,000, and engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, excepting corporations subject to the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, but including pipe-line companies, shall within four months after this act takes effect, or, if organized or otherwise becoming subject to this act subsequent to such taking effect hereof, then within two months after so becoming subject to this act, furnish to the commission, in writing, statements showing such facts as to its organization, financial condition, and operations as may be prescribed by regulations to be made in pursuance of this act. Similar statements shall be made by its subsidiaries. Such statements shall be made as of such date as may be prescribed by such regulations and shall be verified under oath by such officers of such corporation as may be prescribed by the said regulations. Failure or neglect on the part of any corporation subject to this section to comply with the terms hereof within 60 days after written demand shall have been made upon such corporation by the commission, requiring such compliance, shall constitute a misdemeanor, and upon conviction such corporation shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 for every day of such failure or neglect.

"SEC. 5. That the said commission, upon finding that said statements comply with such regulations so far as applicable to such statements, shall enter such corporation for United States registration upon books to be kept by it for that purpose, and shall also record the statements so filed.

"SEC. 6. That all corporations so admitted to registration shall be known as 'United States registered' companies, and shall have the sole and exclusive right to use, in connection with their corporate title, their securities, their operations, and, by way of advertisement of their business, the title 'United States registered,' or any convenient abbreviation thereof, so long as such registration shall remain in force.

"SEC. 7. That any person, corporation, or company willfully using or publishing such title of 'United States registered,' or any title or form of words or letters reasonably indicative thereof, in connection with the business or securities or name of any corporation, with intent to represent thereby that such corporation is at that time registered as provided in this act, shall, unless such corporation be at that time duly registered under the terms of this act, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon the conviction thereof shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000, and each day of such use or publication shall constitute a separate offense.

"SEC. 8. That all corporations subject to this act and their respective subsidiaries shall from time to time furnish to the commission such information, statements, and records of their organization, business, financial condition, conduct, and management, at such times, to such degree and extent, and in such form as may be prescribed by the said regulations to be made under this act, and shall at all reasonable times grant to the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, complete access to all their records, accounts, minutes, books, and papers, including the records of any of their executive or other committees.

"SEC. 9. That the commission shall from time to time make public the information received under this act, in such form and to such extent as shall be prescribed by the said regulations: Provided, however, That said regulations shall, so far as possible, distinguish between information which is purely private, and the publication of which can serve no public interest, and such information as is not so private and is of importance to the public.

"SEC. 10. The said commission may at any time, upon complaint of any person, corporation, or body, or upon its own initiative, revoke and cancel the registration of any corporation registered under this act upon the ground of either violation of any operative judicial decree rendered under an act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, approved July 2, 1890, or under sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of an act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, which became a law August 27, 1894, or of the use of materially unfair or oppressive methods of competition, or of the acceptance of discriminations, rebates, and concessions from the lawful tariff rates of common carriers, or on the ground of refusal or neglect to allow the commission access to its records or papers as provided in section 8 thereof. The commission shall also carefully investigate the capitalization and assets of the corporations registered under this act, and after due consideration of the information so obtained and otherwise secured, and after allowing reasonable time for the readjustment of corporate organization and security issues in any given case or class of cases, may revoke the registration of any such corporation upon the ground of overcapitalization; that is to say, upon the ground that the par value of the total securities, including shares of stock and all obligations running for a term of years or more, of such corporation, issued and outstanding at any time clearly exceeds the true value of the property of the corporation at that time. In determining such true value the said commission shall consider the original cost of such property, its present replacement cost, its present market value, including the good will of the corporation's business and the market value of the said securities issued by the corporation, and the fair value of the services rendered in the organization of such corporation, but the said commission shall also, as far as possible, segregate and disallow from such determination all value attaching to such property or business due solely to monopolistic power (other than patent rights or other legal franchises, the true value of which shall be considered by the commission). The said commission in considering revocation of registration under this section shall give such notice and have power to take such evidence and hold such hearings as may be prescribed by the regulations issued under this act: Provided, That if any subsidiary of a corporation so registered shall be guilty of conduct hereinbefore specified in this section as ground for cancellation of registration, such conduct on the part of such subsidiary shall be ground for canceling the registration of the corporation to which it is so subsidiary.

"SEC. 11. That in case of revocation of the registration of any corporation the commission may also order that such corporation thereafter shall not engage in interstate commerce. For every day's continuance in such commerce contrary to such order such corporation shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000. The district courts of the United States, upon the application of said commission, alleging a failure to comply with such order of the commission, or alleging a failure to comply with or a violation of any of the provisions of this act, by any corporation subject thereto, shall have jurisdiction to issue a writ or writs of mandamus or injunction, or other order enforcing such order of the commission or commanding such corporation to comply with the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 12. That the said commission may at any time, upon application by a corporation whose registration has been previously canceled, reinstate said corporation for registration and grant it registration anew: Provided, That the said commission is satisfied that the cause or causes for which registration was revoked no longer exist, and that the commission shall find that all the requirements for registration as set forth in section 4 shall have been complied with anew as of the date of the new application for registration.

"SEC. 13. That the said commission may at any time, if in the opinion of the commission public necessity requires such action, order and require any corporation engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, except corporations subject to the act to regulate commerce, approved February 4, 1887, as amended, but including pipe-line companies, to make such statements and give such information as is prescribed in sections 4 and 8 of this act, which information shall be published in accordance with the provisions of section 9 hereof. The commission may also obtain from any such corporation, through the powers granted in section 14 hereof, such information as shall enable said commission to determine whether such corporation is subject to the terms of this act. The decisions of the said commission made under the powers conferred upon it in this act shall be final except as to matters involving the taking of private property without due process of law and involving the extent and character of the said powers so conferred herein: Provided, however, That an appeal may be taken in equity to any district court of the United States from any order or decision of the said commission made under section 11 of this act.

"SEC. 14. That in order to accomplish the purposes declared in sections 8 and 13 of this act the said commission shall have and exercise the same power and authority in respect to corporations subject to this act as is conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission in said act to regulate commerce and the amendments thereto in respect to common carriers, so far as the same may be applicable, including the right to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths. All the requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by said act to regulate commerce and by an act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission, etc., approved February 11, 1893, supplementary to said act to regulate commerce, and the act defining immunity, approved June 30, 1906, shall also apply to all persons who may be subpœnaed to testify as witnesses or to produce documentary evidence in pursuance of the authority conferred by sections 8 and 13 hereof.

"SEC. 15. That the said commission shall, on or before the day of in each year, make a report, which shall be transmitted to Congress. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as it may deem of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

"SEC. 16. That any corporation engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations the amount of whose gross annual receipts, inclusive of those of its subsidiaries, shall be less than $5,000,000 and more than $1,000,000 may also, by complying and continuing to comply with the terms of sections 4, 8, and 9 hereof, acquire and maintain United States registration as provided in sections 5 and 6, subject to the provision for cancellation thereof prescribed in section 10; and the information furnished by such corporation shall be subject to the provisions of section 9.

"SEC. 17. That the said commission shall have power to make any and all regulations necessary and proper to carry out the purposes of this act, and at any time to alter, amend, or repeal the same or any part thereof.

"SEC. 18. That any person willfully making or furnishing to said commission any statement, return, or record required by this act, when knowing such statement, return, or record to be false in any material particular, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Gentlemen of the committee, for some years I have been giving consideration to this particular question and have frequently expressed the conviction that it was imperatively necessary to create an administrative tribunal vested with the powers of investigation, publicity, correction, and recommendation in the case of large industrial corporations similar to those exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission over railroads. On several occasions I have spoken upon this subject on the floor of the Senate, particularly just before the decision in the Standard Oil case was rendered. The decisions in the Standard Oil and American Tobacco Co. cases were handed down May 15 and May 29, 1911, respectively.

In a speech in the Senate on January 11, 1911, upon the Tariff Commission I outlined my views as to an interstate trade commission. With the permission of the committee, I will insert these remarks in the printed hearing. (See Mr. NEWLANDS's views in CUMMINS's report, appendix, p. 35.)

After the call of the extra session, but before its convening, I wrote to the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, who was destined to be the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the extra session, a letter, which appears in the Senate proceedings—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—of May 15, 1911, and in which I outlined a legislative program for the extra session.

The purpose of the program and the necessity for thorough legislation upon the question of interstate transportation, or the railroads; interstate trade, or the trusts; and interstate exchange, or banking—all of them interrelated as parts of interstate commerce—were referred to in this letter; but I will insert in the record simply that part which is relevant to this present discussion and to interstate trade:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., March 15, 1911.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CLARK: The extra session is now approaching; the House is Democratic, the Senate and the Executive department are Republican. Under this condition of divided responsibility the question arises as to what policy the Democratic Party shall pursue. It has already been practically determined that the House will take up, in addition to the reciprocity treaty, the tariff; and the question is whether it will take up other matters of reform and constructive legislation, and, with a view thereto, select the committees necessary to the consideration of such measures. The Senate will probably follow the lead of the House in this particular.

I hope, therefore, that it will not be regarded as intrusive if I, in common with other Democrats, venture a few suggestions on this score, as the question is of the highest importance to Democracy generally. * * *

INTERSTATE TRADE, OR THE TRUSTS.

The interstate commerce act for the regulation of railroads and the antitrust act for the prohibition of trusts were passed about the same time. The administration of the former was given to a quasi judicial board; the administration of the latter was given to the Attorney General's Office. After about 23 years of operation, through a gradual process of evolution, the regulation of railroads engaged in interstate commerce has practically been accomplished. * * *

The administration of the antitrust act, on the contrary, has been lame and halting, changing with the shifting incumbents of the Attorney General's Office, and according to requirements of political exigencies. As a result, practically no progress has been made in the control of the trusts, and whilst a few suits have been prosecuted to a successful result and others are now in process of prosecution, there exist to-day over 800 trust organizations of enormous capitalization practically without regulation or control. Experience should teach us that with reference to interstate trade a commission or board should be organized similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission, with powers of investigation, of condemnation, and of recommendation, and with a view, whilst preserving the good arising from commercial combination, to curing the pernicious practices connected therewith. Such legislation should include among the powers of the commission the power, upon complaint or its own initiative, to inquire into the organization of all corporations engaged in interstate trade, and upon finding that any such organization is unlawful under the terms of the antitrust act, to call upon the Attorney General to prosecute the same.

The interstate trade commission should have a power similar to that of the Interstate Commerce Commission of appearing in litigation by its own counsel. * * *

Such legislation will be necessary, whatever may be the action of the Supreme Court upon the pending cases. If such combinations are held to be legal, the regulation of their prices and practices becomes a public necessity; if they are held to be illegal, then there should be some law which, while permitting large capitalization and the ownership of many plants by a single corporation engaged in interstate trade, will protect the public from the abuses attendant upon such large capitalization and the oppression exercised by it. * * *

Sincerely, yours,

FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

During the extra session, on May 11, 1911, I presented in the Senate a program of legislation to be enacted or considered during the extra session. This program provided for nine questions upon which legislative action should be taken before adjournment and for seven questions upon which the action of committees was desirable, with a view to early action during the next regular session.

Under this latter heading—namely, committee consideration, in the second subdivision—I suggested the consideration of legislation as follows:

(2) Providing, in connection with the Bureau of Corporations, for a board of interstate trade, with powers of examination, condemnation, and recommendation regarding interstate trade similar to those conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding interstate transportation.

Later, on May 15, 1911, on the very day that the Standard Oil decision was being delivered in the Supreme Court, I spoke in the Senate upon the question of a legislative program for the extra session, and shall insert in the printed hearings an extract from this speech. For matter referred to see Appendix, page 37.

On May 16, after the Supreme Court had rendered its decision in the Standard Oil case, I continued my remarks of the day previous. Addressing myself to the decision of the court, I urged still further the necessity for organizing an administrative tribunal for the regulation of corporations engaged in interstate trade. I shall quote quite freely from this speech, as it contains quotations from the President, and his opinion that to leave the courts to say what is a reasonable restraint of trade, what is a reasonable suppression of competition, what is a reasonable monopoly, would be "to thrust upon the courts a burden that they have no precedents to enable them to carry, and to give them a power approaching the arbitrary, the abuse of which might involve our judicial system in disaster."

I concur emphatically in this view that the courts are not the proper medium for exercising such a function. Because, therefore, we have clearly reached a point where some branch of the Government must do this sort of work, and because, as the President correctly states, the courts are not the proper place for it, I am advocating the establishment, as in this interstate trade commission bill, of an administrative agency that can perform this duty.

Again, in a speech upon the subject of a self-governing Senate, delivered in the Senate on June 22, 1911, in alluding to the program of legislation which I had been urging, I spoke regarding a board of interstate trade, and shall insert an excerpt in the record. See Appendix, page 38.

Later I drew up this bill and introduced the original on the 5th day of July, 1911. During the time I had this bill under consideration I discussed the matter with various persons whom I regarded as experts, particularly with members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Attorney General, the Commissioner of Corporations, the Solicitor General, and lawyers who were engaged in the trust prosecutions. I have also talked with men connected with these industrial corporations and with eminent economists, and I have found everywhere a general acquiescence in the view that something in the way of supplemental legislation was required.

It will be impossible to administer this great and necessary system of regulation through the courts. We all know that just as soon as these corporations are reorganized under these decisions they will, for a time at least, take the form of a large number of corporations, limited either in the character of the commodity with which they deal or in the area over which they operate. The management of these corporations is generally satisfactory to the stockholders; they have confidence in the existing management, and in the great financial interests and institutions that usually control that management. These stockholders will, by their proxies, practically give to those controlling interests their votes on anything they desire. So that we will eventually have, in these industrial corporations, just as we have with railroads, the practical control of all these subdivided corporations in the hands of a few great financial institutions or groups in New York, and they will dictate the membership of the boards and the general policy of all these corporations. There will be an effective unity of policy, and it will take such a form as to defeat the law officers in reaching it as a combination in restraint of trade. A mere nod, a mere suggestion, will accomplish what is desired.

The question is, Shall we wait until the courts shall go through their slow processes in the existing cases and re-create and reorganize these corporations and others against which undecided suits are now pending, and also in the numerous suits that will be brought? Or shall we organize an administrative tribunal which, vested with the powers of investigation, publicity, and correction, will, by continuous supervision, prevent the growth of these abuses which the courts are now called upon sporadically and intermittently to correct by their slow processes?

Certain fundamental considerations are thus raised, which I will present seriatim.

(1) The first question is: Shall an interstate trade commission of some kind be organized? I imagine that there can hardly be any difference of opinion on the point that there should be an administrative tribunal of high character, nonpartisan, or, rather, bipartisan, and independent of any department of the Government. I assume also that there should be a commission rather than one executive official, because there are powers of judgment and powers of discretion to be exercised. The organization should be quasi judicial in character. We want traditions; we want a fixed policy; we want trained experts; we want precedents; we want a body of administrative law built up. This can not be well done by the single occupant of an office, subject to constant changes in its incumbency and subject to higher executive authority. Such work must be done by a board or commission of dignity, permanence, and ability, independent of executive authority except in its selection, and independent in character.

Of course, in performing any purely executive work one man is preferable to a commission. If only powers of investigation and publicity are given a single-headed organization, like the Bureau of Corporations, might be the best for the work; but if judgment and discretion are to be exercised, or if we have in contemplation the exercise of any corrective power hereafter, or if the broad ends above outlined are to be attained, it seems to me that a commission is required.

(2) The next question is, What shall be done with the Bureau of Corporations, with its 120 experts who are full of interest in their duties, who have had long training in just this sort of work, and who have shown their capacity to do good work? Shall that bureau be entirely done away with, or shall it be merged in this new organization? And then what shall become of the chief of that bureau and his deputy, both of whom have acquired a large experience and both of whom have the confidence of the country? The Bureau of Corporations would hardly be necessary, as a separate organization, if such a commission should be created. But shall we lose the momentum, the long experience, and trained personnel that this bureau has acquired?

To avoid this loss it is obviously desirable that we merge the Bureau of Corporations—as this bill does—with all its officials, funds, and powers, in this commission, and that we make, for the first two years, the Commissioner of Corporations one of the new commissioners, and make him, for the first year, the chairman of the commission, afterwards giving the power to the commission to select its own chairman. Thus the executive work as at present organized would go on without a break, and the difficulties usual to the period of early organization would be largely obviated. My idea, also, is to utilize the Deputy Commissioner of Corporations as the secretary of the commission.

(3) The term of office of the commissioners is to be 10 years. The salary is to be $10,000. I should favor a much larger salary than that, but I do not know whether Congress would look with favor upon it.

(4) The next question is, What shall be the test of the applicability of the act to corporations engaged in interstate trade? Shall it be size, as indicated, say, by its capital or its gross annual receipts, or shall it be the character of the business in which the corporations are engaged, namely, the production of certain great staple articles?

I have inquired with great particularity of the Commissioner of Corporations and of the Solicitor General regarding this, and they say that they think the best test would be, for the present, the gross receipts of the corporations. If this test, provided in the bill, were applied the jurisdiction of the commission would be probably confined to between 300 and 500 corporations.

Both the Solicitor General and the Commissioner of Corporations have very carefully considered this question of a test based on the character of the production of the corporation, or of the commerce or commodity in which it deals, and they came to the conclusion that it would be very difficult to do that; that it would necessitate refinements and subrefinements with reference to the different articles.

One suggestion was made which I think would improve the bill, that all corporations whose gross receipts exceed $1,000,000 should make certain reports to be called for by the commission, which reports can be classified by the commission for the purpose of statistical information, and that these reports shall be given with a view largely to determining what are the corporations that have $5,000,000 of gross receipts; but that only the corporations that have $5,000,000 of gross receipts or above that shall be subject to the general provisions of the bill.

(5) The next question is, What shall be the powers of the commission? Shall they be confined to investigation, requirement of statements, publicity, and recommendation to the President and to Congress, or shall they go further?

I would deem it very beneficial even if we could get a bill that would go no further than that, because we would then have five men of high ability and character who would immediately start upon this as their life work—not the kind of work that we do, broken up by thousands of other considerations and by other duties, but whose specialty it would be to ascertain the facts and the abuses requiring correction, and to give publicity regarding them and then to make their recommendation to Congress.

(6) The next question is: Shall we provide the additional requirement of registration, granting to the commission the accompanying power of denying or canceling registration for certain prescribed offenses or for violation of the regulations of the commission? And shall the punishment of a recalcitrant corporation be confined simply to a cancellation of registration?

I had a provision in the bill which I originally drew that for disobeying the law or the regulations made in pursuance thereof a recalcitrant corporation could be prevented from engaging in interstate commerce. I am inclined to think that this is a rather extreme power and had better be left out for the present.

We must also consider as to the preciseness with which the grounds for denial or cancellation should be stated in the law and whether the commission shall have the power to make regulations, lack of compliance with which will result either in a denial of registration or a cancellation. Registration being compulsory, the denial of registration or the cancellation of registration would have simply a moral effect. The Solicitor General and the Commissioner of Corporations insist that that moral effect would be very great, though it involves no substantial right of property, but that all these corporations will be able to secure public confidence by securing the confidence of the commission itself.

Senator CUMMINS. You do not propose any rules. The thing would have simply a moral effect if the board or commission did not have the power to determine how the corporation should be organized and how it should carry on its business.

Senator NEWLANDS. That raises the next question. If you desire to provide for registration of corporations, how far will you wish to define the powers?

As the power to regulate interstate commerce is a legislative power, the fundamental law requires that an act turning over the administration of such power to a commission or board shall prescribe the rules or standards under which the power is to be exercised. Would this apply to a mere registration in which no substantial property right is involved? For instance, would it be necessary for the law to define what are "unfair or oppressive methods of competition," what constitutes "overcapitalization" or "improper financial organization"; or could these matters be left to the judgment and discretion of the commissioners without precise legal definition?

Senator CUMMINS. What do you say about that?

Senator NEWLANDS. I am inclined to think that any general phrase intended to give them such powers as will prevent excessive capitalization or unfair or oppressive methods of competition would be upheld by the courts, particularly with reference to the denial or cancellation of the mere privilege of registration, which affects no substantial property right.

Senator CUMMINS. Without taking up the question of the constitutional power of Congress to do the thing that is suggested here, you know that there is the widest difference among Members of the Senate with regard to what constitutes proper capitalization. We debated that at some length in the railroad bill, and we could not agree even upon the subject as limited to the railways.

Senator NEWLANDS. For that very reason, it seems to me, the suggestion of our chairman, Senator CLAPP, is a very reasonable one, that we should confine our present exercise of legislation at this extra session to the appointment of an interstate trade commission and the merger in such commission of the Bureau of Corporations, such commission to have simply powers of publicity, inquest, and recommendation; particularly in view of the fact that the Bureau of Corporations is not a bureau of complete publicity at present. On the contrary, it is instructed by the law to withhold from the public facts ascertained by public officers unless the President gives his assent to publication.

Senator CUMMINS. I agree with you regarding the weakness in the organization of the Bureau of Corporations. But publicity is of no value unless the facts that are discovered can be compared with some rule of conduct which the law has laid down for the government of the corporations. It is bringing the force of public opinion to bear upon corporations to induce them or compel them to obey the law, and if you have no law, publicity is of minor importance. The facts which must underlie all this legislation are perfectly well known—well known to every student of the subject or observer of the subject; that is, the facts that are necessary to declare the law or rule of conduct. A great many facts can be collected, as we have seen here all around, that are very curious and interesting; but they are not fundamental; they are not material, really, to the organization of the law. And it occurs to me—that is my view only—that your plan, while it leads in the right direction, and we must have eventually, I think, some such tribunal, it would seem to me before we organize a commission we should be able to determine what kind of law it shall administer. You know the facts just as well now as you will then. You want to know just how every company is capitalized, how it is organized, and just how its business is done or has been done. These things are merely interesting as history; they are not essential to the conclusion that you want to reach as to how corporations should be organized and how they should conduct themselves.

Senator NEWLANDS. I agree with you as to that, that it is unnecessary in order to shape the law to have further investigation. We know to-day all the abuses that exist in corporate management. * * * But I will not pursue the question of immediate action further. I want to get through. I shall complete my statement in a very few minutes, and then I shall be very glad to take up this discussion with you; but I would like to get my statement in the record in a compact form as the basis for further hearings at the next session.

(7) In considering the powers which should be covered by this bill we shall have to take up the question as to whether the power to condemn unreasonable and extortionate prices should be included; and if so, what should be the form of the rule or standard fixed. Shall it be analogous to that applied to the railroad companies, namely, that prices shall be reasonable and the same to all? And shall the power be given, as originally in the railroad act, to condemn only an unfair or unreasonable price, or, as was later done with the railroad act, shall the power now also include that of fixing a reasonable price? Personally I am opposed to any attempt at present to fix prices.

(8) Next, shall the provisions regarding registration be simply persuasive or compulsory, and if compulsory as to the large corporations, shall permissive registration be granted to the smaller corporations? I incline to the view that it is better to make them compulsory, at least for the large corporations, in order to insure the effective operation of the system.

(9) Shall the commission, in case of revocation of registration, have power to order that the offending corporation shall not engage in interstate commerce? My own view is that such power should not at present be granted. Therefore I would not urge the retention of section 11, which gives the commission power, in case of revocation of registration, to forbid the offending corporation to engage in interstate commerce.

I do not think it advisable to overload the commission at this time, and yet we must bear in mind that our experience with the interstate-commerce act shows the great difficulty of adding needed amendments later on. We all know what obstructions needed amendments of the interstate-commerce act met with, and it took nearly 20 years to get that act into really workable shape.

The Commissioner of Corporations attaches great importance to registration, to the moral effect of refusing or canceling registration. He has since modified also his views somewhat as to the desirability of a commission, an idea which he at first opposed, and I think that he is now substantially in accord with this bill. The Solicitor General has expressed himself very emphatically in favor of legislation on these lines.

I shall append to my remarks quotations from a letter from Mr. Herbert Knox Smith, in response to a series of questions which I put to him and after he had consulted with the Solicitor General.

I have consulted the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I have also consulted the Attorney General. Both the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and the Attorney General were strong advocates of a national incorporation act, believing that national incorporation should cover interstate commerce, and that the act itself should contain all the necessary restrictions upon these corporations as to capitalization, the area of their operations, etc.

Senator BRANDEGEE. I want to understand clearly whether in favoring a national incorporation act they meant to favor that and to pass what you propose.

Senator NEWLANDS. No. In my discussions with them I stated that, so far as I was individually concerned, I had tested the sentiment of Congress regarding a national incorporation act, and particularly the sentiment of my own party; that whilst I had advocated national incorporation with reference to great transportation companies whose functions are largely national, and with a view to taking away from such States as New Jersey the jurisdiction which they had usurped over interstate commerce in the organization of corporations national in scope, I was never able to make much headway with my own party, clinging, as it does, to the exercise of State functions and guarding against Federal encroachment. Therefore my argument was addressed to them, not in opposition to their view as to national incorporation, but as to the possibility of passing a national incorporation bill, and particularly in view of the present political status, the administration having drifted from one of powerful Republican control, a control entirely in sympathy with the broad exercise of national powers, to one of divided control. I think both of them, whilst they adhere to the view that a national incorporation act would be the best method, acquiesce in the view that at present it is difficult, if not impossible, to secure the passage of such a bill. I have heard no expression from Secretary Nagel as to whether, that being the situation, he would be willing to favor a bill for an administrative commission such as this is, but the Attorney General has expressed himself regarding it, and he has indicated a disposition even to go further. I will append quotations to this effect from his recent speech at Duluth.

Finally, I wish to point out one broad consideration. In the present status of our public policy as to the great corporate problem we have at least two leading and divergent schools of thought, two tendencies, each toward a different method of procedure. The one desires to maintain by governmental action if need be, the full competitive system and to rely chiefly on competition as the regulator of corporate business. The Sherman antitrust law strongly presents this principle.

The other schoool inclines rather—to state the extremes—toward freely allowing combinations, both present and future, applying thereto governmental supervision and direction as the prime regulator.

In my opinion it is too early to say which of these opposing tendencies should or will ultimately prevail.

Holding such a view, I am urging this bill because the system it embodies is exactly adapted to the undeveloped situation I have just described. It is available for either tendency; it can be made to serve either principle; it will help to show which is the correct one; and it does not commit us permanently to either of these two main lines of action.

Its primary result will be to furnish both to Congress and to the public the accurate and broad information on corporate conditions that is necessary to determine the line of further advance. It neither legalizes nor forbids combination; it in no way affects the operation of the Sherman law; its work of publicity and supervision will tend strongly to promote fair competition and keep equally open to all the highways of commerce.

On the other hand, it takes the situation as it is; it recognizes that there is a large degree of combination already existing, and it makes that condition a subject for supervision, study, and report to Congress.

In short, it is a step upon which all can unite, as eminently fitted by its moderation and, indeed, by its own frankly tentative character to do what is imperatively needed for the present without prejudicing the future.

(The quotations from the address of Attorney General Wickersham, delivered at Duluth, Minn., July 19, 1911, above referred to, are as follows:)

The gradual interpretation of the act of July 2, 1890, resulting in the decisions and decrees rendered by the Supreme Court at its last term, has at last clearly demonstrated the effectiveness of that law to destroy existing combinations in restraint of interstate or international commerce and attempts to monopolize any part of it and to prevent renewed combination or monopolistic effort. * * *

But the question remains, Can the great end and object of the Sherman law—namely, that the normal course of trade and commerce among the States shall not be impeded by undue restraints and monopolies—be realized through the operation of that law alone?

In dealing with transportation, Congress was not content to rely simply on the process of injunction to restrain and indictment to punish violations of the antitrust law. It also established an administrative commission clothed with powers—greatly enlarged from time to time—over those engaged in the transportation business. * * *

Within what limits is legislation to regulate corporations engaged in interstate commerce other than transportation expedient and practicable? Should the analogy of the interstate commerce law and commission be followed? * * *

That some further regulation over corporations carrying on commerce among the States may be necessary is a matter of current comment. * * *

The Federal Department of Justice is not organized or equipped to maintain constant supervision and control over business organizations. It deals only with cases of violation of law. The activities of an administrative board or commission would be directed to preventing such violations and in aiding business men to maintain a continued status of harmony with the requirements of law.

Moreover, unless Congress shall provide for the establishment of corporations drawing their life and powers only from the National Government and subject only to its control, or shall confer specific powers on State corporations which will enable them to carry on commerce away from the State of their creation without the interference of States into which they go, the present unsatisfactory condition of carrying on business in the different States by means of many different corporations owned or controlled through stock ownership by a parent company created by some one State will continue, and, in the natural, normal, healthy, and legitimate growth of such business, questions of the application of the Sherman law must arise which can not be properly settled with the district attorney or the Department of Justice, but which should be dealt with by an administrative body having appropriate jurisdiction.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
United States Senate, Washington.

DEAR SENATOR: Your letter of the 2d instant was received, raising certain questions on the bill for an interstate trade commission (S. 2941) introduced by you. * * *

Taking up your questions in order:

(1) "Shall an interstate trade commission be organized?"

If the work is to be simply that of investigation and publicity, my experience would indicate that an organization under a single head would be decidedly more efficient. For purely executive or administrative action, such form of organization is preferable. If, however, judicial or semijudicial powers are to be exercised, the commission form has important advantages; it is better adapted for judicial decision, its judicial rulings would probably carry more weight, and, in any event, it tends to secure stability, continuity of policy, and greater independence of action.

(2) "Shall the Bureau of Corporations be merged in the commission?"

If the interstate trade commission is to exercise substantially the powers now used by the Bureau of Corporations it seems almost necessary that the bureau should be merged in that commission, as the bureau would have little reason for further separate existence. There is also, however, the very important consideration that the bureau is very necessary to the commission; the bureau is the one unit in the Government service which can immediately supply the experience, trained force, knowledge, and traditions which the commission must have for its work.

(3) "Shall the test of the applicability of the acts to corporations engaged in interstate trade be the annual gross receipts or the character of the business in which the corporations are engaged, namely, the production of great staple articles?"

The question here is a debatable one; but experience with corporate business leads me to doubt the feasibility of a classification based on kinds of business or staple commodities. Such lines of demarcation are too vague. For example, certain companies deal wholly in the manufacture of lumber, others in its sale, others in the manufacture of goods primarily made out of other materials but having a certain proportion of lumber. Similarly with the steel industry and many others. It would be almost impossible to draw the line in many cases so as to say whether a corporation was engaged in a given industry or not. Many great wholesale houses sell a large amount of hardware. Would they be included, for example, as engaged in the steel industry?

(4) "Shall the power of the commission be confined to investigation and inquest, requirement of statements and publicity, and recommendation to the President and to Congress?

"If not, shall the additional requirement of registration be made with the accompanying power of denying or canceling registration for certain prescribed offenses or for violation of the regulations of the commission; and shall the punishment of a recalcitrant corporation be confined simply to a cancellation of registration?"

Investigation, publicity, and recommendation should be in any event parts of the system. Personally I favor strongly registration of corporation with power of cancellation. This gives a very practical means of control, which at the same time has the great advantage that it does not actually attempt the positive regulation of business. It allows credit for proper business conduct and imposes discredit for the reverse, but assumes no power of direction, and simply leaves the public to apply corrective pressure through public opinion and the investment of the public's money.

Answering, also, the last part of the question, it is probably better for the present to provide cancellation of registration as the only penalty for improper business conduct. I feel entirely satisfied that such United States registration would shortly become a valuable business and financial privilege for any large corporation. The standing of the company with that public opinion that underlies legislative action and the financial status of its securities with the investing public would be affected in a very practical way by the possession or cancellation of such registry. The approval now granted to corporate transactions through existing State public-service commissions has already a very definite market effect on the price of securities and on the attitude of public opinion.

(5) "The preciseness with which the grounds for denial or cancellation should be stated in the law, and whether the commission shall have the power to make regulations, lack of compliance with which will result either in a denial or cancellation."

The grounds of cancellation should be broadly stated, leaving the commission to apply in specific cases the general rules prescribed by Congress. If power of making regulations be conferred on the commission, it should be simply for such regulations as will carry out the terms of the act and make effective the rules laid down therein.

(6) "As the power to regulate interstate commerce is a legislative power, it has been held that the law turning over the administration of such power to a commission or board shall prescribe the rules or standards under which the power is to be exercised. Would this apply to a mere registration in which no substantial property right is involved?"

The question of whether the delegation of a power is constitutional depends wholly on the nature of the power. Legislative power, strictly speaking, can not be delegated, but executive power can, of course, be conferred by legislation, and there can also be given quite broad power of executive administration in ascertaining facts and applying to them the rule established by legislation. It seems probable that the powers granted in this bill come under the latter head and are constitutional.

An excellent case on the subject is Union Bridge Co. v. United States (204 U. S., 364), where the earlier cases are reviewed in detail. The case itself involved the question of whether an act of Congress granting to the Secretary of War power to order the removal of the bridge over a navigable stream "whenever the Secretary of War shall have reason to believe that any * * * bridge * * * over any of the navigable waters * * * is an unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of such waters on account of insufficient height, width of span, or otherwise," was a delegation of legislative power.

The court held that this was not an objectionable delegation of power, and quoted, with approval from Lock's appeal (72 Pa. St., 491), as follows:

"The legislature can not delegate its power to make a law, but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend."

See also other cases cited in this decision.

An excellent legislative precedent is in the steamboat-inspection law, where, by section 4405, Revised Statutes, a board is given power to "establish all necessary regulations required to carry out in the most effective manner the provisions of this title." These regulations now cover over 100 pages.

In the same law, also, the inspectors are given broad power over the licenses of steamboat officers, as follows: "But such license shall be suspended or revoked upon satisfactory proof of bad conduct * * *," a power obviously closely analogous to the power of cancellation provided in your bill.

It should be noted also that the only power delegated is the mere revocation of registration. Registration is not a property right. It is simply a privilege granted through the commission and revocable by it.

Thus, as stated in paragraph 5 above, rules of action and grounds for cancellation of registration should be set forth in the bill itself, with sufficient definition to make clear the intention of Congress as to the class of acts to be covered thereby. For example, the word "overcapitalization" is perhaps sufficiently definite in itself, while "unfair or oppressive methods of competition" would perhaps be too indefinite.

(7) "In case the power to fix prices should be included," etc.

I would prefer not to discuss the form of such power, as I personally believe it unwise to confer any such power on the commission, and do not consider myself competent to treat the subject properly.

In considering any such treatment of our commercial problem as is attempted in this bill, it seems to me, at least, that the Government should not, at present, commit itself, by way of general policy, either to the theory of "unlimited competition" or of "unlimited combination." We are not, I feel, sufficiently advanced to justify us in taking a definite position in favor of either one of these opposing ideas. Any system we adopt now should be so framed as to be alike available for either development. To give the power to fix prices would tend to commit us to a policy of industrial combination.

(8) "Shall the provision regarding registration be simply persuasive, or compulsory; and if compulsory as to the large corporations, shall permissive registration be granted to the smaller corporations?"

I believe that the system would be entirely workable, if the publicity, etc., were simply permissive, and that some complications would thus be avoided. But a compulsory system for large corporations should also bring much the same results, especially if coupled with permissive registration for smaller concerns. The permissive feature for smaller companies seems decidedly desirable.

(9) "Shall the commission, in case of revocation of registration, have power to order that the offending corporation shall not engage in interstate commerce?"

This power is a peculiarly drastic one, and would require rather elaborate machinery for its enforcement. I doubt both the wisdom and the necessity here.

I take the liberty of adding some general considerations, which may be relevant to the discussion of such a system as is proposed by your bill. These views are based on an experience of eight years in the Bureau of Corporations.

(10) The one imperative change now required in our policy toward the "corporate problem" is a change from our present system of treating that problem through occasional prosecution to a system which will treat it with continuous administrative action. We should advance from a negative policy to a positive constructive policy, from mere occasional prohibition to permanent regulation and prevention.

(11) One of the primary objects of the commission is the providing of proper publicity. This should not be combined with the administration of the Sherman law. It is probably true that efficient publicity is inconsistent with prosecution, at least as administered by the same office. The Bureau of Corporations, the present agent of corporate publicity, secures now at least nine-tenths of its information by voluntary cooperation. The interstate trade commission would continue this work, but should the function of prosecution under the Sherman law be combined with publicity it is obvious that the present voluntary cooperation of corporations, the main source of information, will very largely be destroyed.

There are of course exceptions to this general principle. At times it would be necessary for the information obtained by the commission and indicating a clear and flagrant violation of law to be turned over to the Department of Justice. The Bureau of Corporations has in this manner given much assistance to the Department of Justice. The numerous prosecutions of the Standard Oil Co. since 1906 for railway-rate discriminations were all based on the report of that bureau, and the agents of the bureau furnished much of the evidence and assisted largely in the preparation of the cases.

Similarly, in the recent prosecution of that company under the Sherman law, the case was instituted as a result of the investigations of the bureau, was largely prepared by its agents, and, I venture to say, would not have been successfully presented without their aid. Some of the ablest men in the bureau gave over a year of their time to this case.

But in general such connection with prosecution should be wholly incidental and secondary, and the publicity work of the commission should be directed primarily at furnishing reliable economic and financial information for the general public and not at securing evidence for prosecution.

(12) One of the most important features of such an administrative system of corporate regulation is its provision, as above referred to, for broad corporate publicity. The effects of such publicity have been well shown by the past work of the Bureau of Corporations, as set forth in the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Corporations for 1910.

The report of the bureau on the transportation of petroleum, published in May, 1906, effected a sweeping decrease in the granting of railway rebates throughout the country. Practically every railroad involved in the railway discriminations described in this report canceled the objectionable rates within six months after the issuance of the report.

The report of the bureau on cotton exchanges resulted within a few months in a marked improvement in the regulations of the New Orleans Cotton Exchange, and while the New York Cotton Exchange has not yet made any changes in its system, that exchange, on March 23, 1911, voted "that it is the sense of this meeting that since * * * the Department of Commerce and Labor has made an exhaustive investigation of the business methods of the cotton exchanges and has criticized the methods and by-laws of the New York Cotton Exchange * * * it will be good judgment on the part of this exchange to, * * * so far as possible, adopt the suggestions made by the Government"

In the tobacco industry the independent manufacturers have in many instances stated that the work of the bureau has caused the cessation of various objectionable methods of competition.

In the problem of waterways, the reports of the bureau, three in number, have very widely influenced public opinion by showing the real questions to be solved and the real advantages to be attained in waterway transportation.

A Federal administrative system of publicity and registration should develop both strength and elasticity. The administration of such a system should result in a definite and broadening policy, based on exact information, establishing definite standards of business action, of public economics, and of Government regulation, in themselves highly effective, and valuable also as the raw material for further statutory enactment.

We may fairly hope to get from it a gradual rise in the standard of business conduct, closer relationship between large business and public authorities, marked improvement in corporate accounting and in the standing of our industrial securities, and the elimination of unfair practice and business privilege. All of this without any disturbance of properly conducted business.

The time seems ripe for such action. It has been obvious since the Supreme Court decisions on the Standard Oil and Tobacco Co. cases that the public is ready and anxious for an advance to some such administrative system of regulation by the Federal Government. It seems to be true that corporate managers concede more and more the necessity for such regulation and publicity, recognizing both its public necessity and its advantage to fair business.

Very sincerely, yours,

HERBERT KNOX SMITH, Commissioner.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE ON SENATE RESOLUTION NO. 98, FEBRUARY 26, 1913.

[Senate Report 1326, Sixty-second Congress, third session.]

FROM MR. CUMMINS'S REPORT.

On the 26th day of July, 1911, the Senate adopted the foregoing resolution, and acting under the authority and in pursuance thereof the Committee on Interstate Commerce provided for open hearings upon the subject matter of the resolution. The hearings began on the 15th day of November, 1911, and were continued from day to day for more than three months, during which time 103 men appeared before the committee, and their statements, together with the exhibits and documents submitted by them, fill 2,799 printed pages. A printed copy of these statements, exhibits, and documents, including an index, laws and reference concerning industrial combinations in foreign countries, and a collection of judicial decisions touching the power of Congress in the regulation of commerce among the States, in all, five volumes, is herewith presented to the Senate.

While the committee is conscious that some of the matter adduced at the hearings and submitted as a part of this report is not relevant to the questions under consideration and of little worth, it believes that, upon the whole, the hearings have furnished one of the most valuable contributions that can be found in the literature of the subject. It is not yet ready to report any of the bills which are now before it, and which propose specific modifications of or additions to the existing statute; nor is it prepared at this time to report a substitute for them. It hopes that it may be able before the close of the present session to act finally upon these bills and recommend in definite form the legislation which it may think necessary or wise to meet modern business conditions. It is, however, prepared to answer the general inquiries propounded in the resolution, and in view of the overwhelming importance of the subject it ventures to add to the direct response some observations upon the origin, purpose, and effect of the enactment commonly known as the antitrust law, to indicate wherein it is inadequate, and to suggest the general scope of further regulation.

The committee is of the opinion:

First. That the statute should stand as the fundamental law upon the subject, and that any supplemental legislation for more effectual control and regulation of interstate and foreign commerce should be in harmony with the purpose of the existing statute.

Second. That whatever may be our views respecting the power of Congress to enact a general Federal incorporation law, it is neither necessary nor desirable at this time to provide for the organization under act of Congress of industrial corporations which propose to engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations.

Third. That it is desirable to impose upon corporations now or hereafter organized under State law, and engaged or proposing to engage in such commerce, further conditions or regulations affecting both their organization and the conduct of their business, and also to impose further conditions or regulations upon persons, copartnerships, and other associations now engaged, or hereafter engaging, in such commerce, the general character of such regulation to be the same as those laid upon corporations, except such conditions or regulations as are in their very nature peculiar to the corporate form of commercial activity.

* * * * * * *

There are three general fields in which the commission could work to the great advantage both of the people for whose protection the law exists and the people against whom it is directed.

First. If the Bureau of Corporations were converted into an independent commission, composed of trained, skillful men, and clothed with adequate authority, there could be gathered more complete and accurate knowledge of the organization, management, and practices of the corporations and associations engaged in national and international commerce than we now have. In saying this the committee does not mean to disparage the work of the Bureau of Corporations as hitherto carried on, but, valuable as the work has been, it is believed that a greater service could be rendered by a commission with a distinct organization with adequate appropriations and added authority. Moreover, it is clear that the constant inquiry into and investigation of interstate commerce in order to ascertain whether the law is being violated should be more closely connected with prosecutions for violations, when found to exist, than at the present time.

Second. When the conditions upon the fulfillment of which persons and corporations may engage in commerce among the States and with foreign nations are imposed, as the committee has heretofore recommended, there will be some of them upon which the Government must act with administrative promptness rather than with judicial deliberation and delay. For instance, suppose Congress were to declare, as the committee thinks it ought to declare, that no corporation should be permitted to engage in interstate or international commerce unless it be honestly capitalized, and that when anything but money is accepted for its stock that the value at which the property is so taken must be its fair, reasonable value. It seems clear that a corporation proposing to enter business should have an opportunity to come to some governmental tribunal and say, here is the property purposed to be taken for stock, and here is the price at which it is to be taken, and thereupon ask for approval or disapproval of the proposition. It would be most unjust in such a case to allow the corporation to go on for years and then be told that it must cease to do business because the value of the property was less than the par value of the stock issued for it.

And, again, suppose that 10 out of 20 manufacturing establishments heretofore in competition with each other desire to consolidate into one enterprise. There ought to be a way in which the men in such a venture could submit their plan to the Government and an inquiry made as to the legality of such a transaction, and if the Government was of the opinion that competitive conditions would not be substantially impaired there should be an approval, and in so far as the lawfulness of the exact thing proposed is concerned there should be a decision, and if favorable to the proposal there should be an end of that particular controversy for all time. Such results as these can be attained in no other way than through a commission which, though administrative in its character, would, in some instances, exercise quasi judicial functions. It is believed that through the intervention of such a body of men the legislative policy with respect to combinations and monopolies could be vastly more effectual than through the courts alone, which in most cases will take no cognizance of violations of the law for months or years after the violations occurred and when the difficulty of awarding reparation for the wrong is almost insurmountable.

The committee has not attempted to be comprehensive as to the usefulness of the commission in this field, and has made these suggestions only to indicate in the most general way the assistance that could be rendered in the enforcement of the law.

Third. One of the most serious problems in connection with suits brought under the antitrust act is to find the proper method of disintegrating combinations that have been adjudged unlawful. The dissolution of a corporation or a series of associated corporations must often involve the consideration of plans for reorganization in order that the property which has been unlawfully employed may thereafter be lawfully used in commerce. The courts are not fitted for the work of reconstruction, and whatever jurisdiction they now have, or that may hereafter be conferred upon them with respect to such matters, it can not be gainsaid that a commission, the members of which are in close touch with business affairs, and who are intimately acquainted with the commercial situation, might be extremely helpful in the required readjustment.

Respectfully submitted.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. POMERENE.

With the report in general I am in accord. But there is one feature of it about which I desire to be more explicit, and that is the paragraph discussing the certainty of the provisions of the Sherman law as applicable to certain cases and its uncertainty as applicable to others.

I approve the view that—

> There are many forms of combination and many practices in business which have been so unequivocally condemned by the Supreme Court that as to them and their like the statute is so clear that no person can be in any doubt respecting what is lawful and what is unlawful.

There are other forms of organization and acts which seriously interfere with competition, such as interlocking directories, watering of stock, selling of merchandise in one locality at a less price than in another, and other practices which are so contrary to sound business principles and good morals that they can and should be specifically controlled or prohibited by statute. As to these, in the interest of certainty there should be other and further legislation. But whatever may be the additional legislation, there will be many other contracts, combinations, and practices in "undue and unreasonable restraint of trade," which it is impossible for Congress to define by statute, because any attempt to so define them will, in practice, be found to exclude many other contracts, combinations, and practices which are equally inimical to the public good. As to these, we must always depend upon the sound wisdom and discretion of courts and juries for relief, just as in the past we have been obliged to trust to their judicial administration.

To illustrate: We know that legislatures and courts have constantly refused to define fraud, because the multiplicity of acts and circumstances involved in human affairs make it impossible of definition.

The same may be said with equal truth as to what constitutes "undue or unreasonable restraint of trade."

It is said with a great deal of force that men are not always able to tell in advance whether certain acts are in "undue or unreasonable restraint of trade." But however difficult this may be, it is no reason why they should be left for decision to the selfishness of interested parties uncontrolled by judicial decision under the principles of the common law or under the broad provisions of the Sherman law.

In criminal cases it is often difficult to say in advance whether a given state of facts constitutes a reasonable doubt. But is that a reason why courts and juries should not attempt to say in a specific case whether there was, in fact, a reasonable doubt or not?

In negligence cases it is equally difficult to say whether a given state of facts constitutes contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff or reasonable care on the part of the defendant. But can this be urged as a reason for not leaving special cases to the judgment of the court and jury?

In my judgment, what is "undue or unreasonable restraint of trade" must, in many cases if not in most cases, be left largely for judicial determination, and sound judgment and good morals will be a sufficient guide for those who are actuated by a proper public spirit rather than by selfish motives.

While I believe there can be some additional legislation along the lines indicated, I am firmly of the opinion that the Sherman law is a clear and certain guide for reasonable men who desire to comply with the law and do not exert themselves to evade its provisions.

ATLEE POMERENE.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. TILLMAN.

The undersigned is not now prepared to say that a new national commission should be established for the better administration of the antitrust law. He is inclined to believe that we have too many commissions now, composed largely of so-called "lame ducks," both Democrats and Republicans, who have been defeated at the polls and are given these places mainly as a compensation and means of support. He thinks Congress ought to perform its own functions rather than surrender them to commissions thus created by Executive appointment.

He does not assent to the particular language used on any point in the report of the committee, except where he has specifically so stated.

As the committee is not now ready to propose specific measures of legislation, he prefers to wait and to listen to the recommendations of the incoming President of the United States.

B. R. TILLMAN.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. GORE.

I concur in the main body of the report and in the conclusions arrived at, except as to the specific recommendation looking to the establishment of a commission. Upon that recommendation I reserve my judgment for the present. I could not yield my assent to this proposition without first considering both the principles and details of any measure proposing such a commission. My ultimate assent would depend upon the constitution and character of the commission and upon the extent and limitation of its powers and purposes. It may be possible that a commission could with propriety be vested with power to pass upon the form of a proposed organization, but no commission should have authority to grant indulgences as to the methods, conduct, and operations of any such organization.

T. P. GORE.

Mr. NEWLANDS confined himself entirely to the question of a trade commission bill, and included in his observations his original interstate trade commission bill as tentatively amended and approved by the Interstate Commerce Committee. His views are as follows:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. NEWLANDS.

Whilst I agree with the general conclusion reached by Mr. CUMMINS in his report, I have not been able to study with sufficient care the decisions of the Supreme Court relating to the trusts to enable me to form an independent opinion as to his analysis of them. For years I have contended that if at the time the Sherman Act was passed—the date of its passage being almost contemporaneous with that of the interstate-commerce act regarding the railroads—we had organized an interstate trade commission similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and with somewhat similar powers of investigation and correction, we would have prevented or remedied many of the abuses which have since grown up, and that we would have gradually evolved a system of commercial law, through administrative process, as complete as that which has been built up regarding our system of transportation.

I presented my views relating to this matter at the first hearing of this committee regarding the control of corporations on the 4th day of August, 1911, and on the 16th day of November, 1911 (hearings, pp. 1 to 26, inclusive). I then discussed a bill for the organization of an interstate trade commission (Senate bill No. 2941), which was introduced by me on the 5th of July, 1911, and a substitute bill of the same number, introduced by me August 21, 1911.

As a result of the additional light shed upon this subject by the hearings, I introduced in the Senate, on February 26, 1912, a bill (S. 5485, 62d Cong., 2d sess.) entitled "A bill to create an interstate trade commission," etc.

Later on, as a result of subsequent consideration, this bill has been amended, and I present it with alterations as a tentative proposal for criticism and suggestion. The bill as amended is annexed hereto.

Whilst I believe that the Sherman Antitrust Act should not be altered, I believe that it should be supplemented by such legislation as is shown to be necessary by the experience of the time. Such variety of views exists as to what this supplementary legislation shall be that I do not believe early legislation on this line is practicable. But I do believe that all can agree upon an interstate trade commission with powers of investigation and correction, and with the power to aid the courts in the administration of the Sherman Act and other supplementary legislation; and I believe that such a commission should be organized immediately, so that Congress can soon have the benefit of the recommendations which it will make as the result of its experience.

I shall not enter into any labored argument upon this question. I shall simply content myself with quoting from previous utterances in the Senate.

In the Senate, January 11, 1911:

Mr. NEWLANDS. * * * The railroad-commission bill furnishes a model for the action of Congress upon matters involving minute and scientific investigation. Had we followed the same method regarding trusts that we followed regarding railroads, we would have made much better progress in trust regulation. The antitrust act was passed 21 years ago, about the same time that the railroad commission was organized. The railroad question is practically settled; the settlement of the trust question has hardly been commenced. Had we submitted the administration of the antitrust act to an impartial quasi judicial tribunal similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission instead of to the Attorney General's office, with its shifting officials, its varying policies, its lack of tradition, record, and precedent, we would by this time have made gratifying progress in the regulation and control of trusts, through the quasi judicial investigations of a competent commission and through legislation based upon its recommendations. As it is, with the evasive and shifting incumbency and administration of the Attorney General's office, oftentimes purely political in character, we find that the trusts are more powerful to-day than when the antitrust act was passed, and that evils have grown up so interwoven with the general business of the country as to make men tremble at the consequence of their disruption.

In the Senate, May 16, 1911:

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, whilst I was addressing the Senate yesterday upon the importance of taking up immediately certain questions upon which public opinion has been formed and crystallizing them into legislation, I referred, among others, to the great questions of the combinations of capital called trusts which have assumed of late years so powerful and menacing an aspect. * * *

The Supreme Court yesterday acted upon this matter with reference to one of the great trusts in a decision which applies to them all, and, as the result probably of the inertia and the inaction of Congress, has taken upon itself what the dissenting member of that court, Mr. Justice Harlan, declared to be judicial legislation, and has written into the statute words which Congress never put there; and so to-day we have a decision upholding the antitrust act so far as it applies to unreasonable restraint of trade.

The question, therefore, presents itself to us whether we are to permit in the future the administration regarding these great combinations to drift practically into the hands of the courts and subject the question as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of any restraint upon trade imposed by these corporations now existing and to be brought into existence in the future to the varying judgments of different courts upon the facts and the law, or whether we will organize, as the servant of Congress, an administrative tribunal similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission, with powers of recommendation, with powers of condemnation, with powers of correction similar to those enjoyed by the Interstate Commerce Commission over interstate transportation.

* * * * * * * * *

* * * What has been our experience regarding that branch of interstate commerce which covers transportation? Our experience has been that 20 years ago, just about the time the antitrust act was passed, Congress passed the interstate-commerce act, creating a commission as its servant to attend to its duties under rules prescribed by Congress. The regulation of interstate commerce belonged to Congress. Congress wisely saw that it could not undertake that regulation in all its details; that it could not pass rate bills which would be satisfactory to every section of the country; that it could not reduce rates that were claimed to be excessive and increase rates that were claimed to be too low; that it could not correct the varying abuses which creep into the administration of every great enterprise. Therefore it created this commission as its servant, to carry out its will under rules established by it.

The history of the last 23 years proves the wisdom of our action. By a gradual process of evolution this commission, as the result of gradual improvements in legislation and as the result of constantly increasing powers recommended by it and affirmed by Congress, has become a tribunal second in importance only to the Supreme Court of the land. It has made transportation a science. It has studied all the intricate questions relating to it, and in a recent illuminating decision has formulated a great state paper that has impressed the country and the world with its wisdom.

Now, contrast that action with other action taken by Congress regarding the trusts. It would have been possible 23 years ago, when the interstate commerce act was passed, with reference to interstate trade, to have established an industrial or trade commission or board similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission with reference to transportation. If we had done so and had put upon that commission the same class of men who have been appointed upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, we would have had the constant corrective power of that commission applied both to the existing trade corporations and to the trade corporation afterwards created. Many abuses would have been prevented. Many abuses would have been corrected. As a result of the constant study and inquiry of a competent board engaged in this work as a specialization recommendations would have been made to Congress which would have been accepted, as were those recommendations made with reference to interstate transportation, and a great body of administrative law would have been built up and combinations of capital would have been effected without the abuses which have existed during the past 23 years. * * *

In the Senate, June 22, 1911:

Mr. NEWLANDS. What is the second one which I suggested? I suggested legislation providing, in connection with the Bureau of Corporations, for a board of interstate trade, with powers of examination, correction, and recommendation with regard to interstate trade similar to those conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding interstate transportation. This resolution was offered before the recent decision of the Supreme Court regarding the trusts, and I then declared that, whatever might be the decision of that court, the creation of such a commission was essential. Interstate trade is just as much a part of interstate commerce as interstate transportation. The abuses of interstate trade have become just as great as the abuses of interstate transportation in the past have been. Obviously the teachings of experience lead us to the organization of a commission or board similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission, with a view of taking hold of the great combinations of capital and making them obedient to the law, giving such a commission powers of examination, recommendation, and condemnation similar to those enjoyed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Since that decision the trust managers themselves have seen a great light, and in public examinations have stated that in their judgment the time has come for as complete regulation of corporations engaged in interstate trade as of corporations engaged in interstate transportation. Whether that regulation will ever extend so far as the regulation of the price itself is a matter to be determined in the future, for Congress will be called upon to decide how great these corporations shall be, what the extent of their capital shall be, what number of plants they shall own, and what shall be the extent of their operations. If they conclude to maintain the principle of competition, even though it leads to destruction, there will then, of course, be no necessity of regulating prices. But if they recognize the principle of helpful cooperation instead of destructive competition, then it will be necessary for them in extreme cases to face the question of the regulation of prices just as the prices of any public utility are regulated.

I do not venture to express an opinion now as to what course should be pursued with reference to this great question, but it is time that the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate were entering upon an inquiry of the most important question in economics that has engaged the attention of the country since the railroad question was first presented to it.

Quotation from Mr. NEWLANDS's statement before the committee on the 15th day of November, 1911 (hearings, p. 25):

Senator NEWLANDS. Mr. Chairman, during the late extra session I introduced Senate bill 2941, for the creation of an interstate trade commission with powers over corporations engaged in interstate trade similar in many respects to those possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission over interstate transportation. On the 4th of August, toward the close of the extra session, this committee, of which I am a member, gave me a hearing on the bill, and I made a preliminary statement, explaining its terms and the conditions it was intended to meet. That statement, together with quotations from the President, the Attorney General, and the Commissioner of Corporations, has been printed as the first part of the hearings under the resolution introduced by the chairman.

The bill provides that all interstate corporations (except railroads) whose gross annual receipts exceed $5,000,000 shall make regular reports to the commission as to their business transactions, shall be subject at will to the examination of the commission, and shall, upon complying with such requirements, have the exclusive right to use the title "United States registered." The bill also provides that for violation of the Sherman law, improper capitalization, unfair methods of competition, acceptance of railway rebates, or other improper business transactions the commission may at will cancel such registration. It is recognized that the right of a corporation to publish the fact of such registration will shortly become a valuable financial privilege, and that the fear of cancellation of such right will be a strong restraining influence against improper transactions.

The bill provides a permanent administrative body of trained experts, who shall have as their sole specialty the supervision and registration of large corporations and supply accurate information thereon to the public, and shall make recommendations to Congress for any further legislation that may seem necessary.

I may later on have something further to say before this committee regarding this bill; but I wish to state at present that since the bill was introduced there has been a wide discussion throughout the country upon two divergent lines of thought, one insisting on absolutely free and unrestricted competition as the regulator of corporate business, and the other inclining toward allowing large combinations of capital and applying thereto Government supervision and direction as the prime regulator. It is difficult to say now which of these opposing tendencies should or will ultimately prevail. The bill which I have introduced is, in my judgment, adapted to this undeveloped situation. It will help us to determine which of these theories is the correct one: it will furnish to Congress and to the public the accurate and broad information on corporate conditions that is necessary to determine the line of further advance. It does not affect the operation or the enforcement of the Sherman law; its work of publicity and supervision will tend to promote fair competition and keep equally open to all the highways of commerce. On the other hand, it takes the situation as it is, recognizes that there is a large degree of combination already existing, and makes that condition a subject for supervision, study, and report to Congress. Its frankly tentative character and its moderation recommend it as a step upon which all can unite in doing what is imperatively needed for the present without prejudicing the future.

I trust that the committee will see the wisdom, without waiting for the end of this investigation, of recommending this tentative measure, which will be an aid in the final solution of all the pressing questions relating to trade corporations.

The following is the interstate trade commission bill introduced by Mr. NEWLANDS as tentatively amended by the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The committee took no final action upon it.

[S. 5485, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

A bill to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be referred to and cited as the interstate trade commission act. Corporations a majority of whose voting securities is held or owned by any corporation subject to the terms of this act are referred to herein as subsidiaries of such holding or owning corporation.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby created a body to be known as the Interstate Trade Commission, which shall consist of three members, of whom no more than two shall belong to the same political party. The commission shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the terms of such commissioners so first appointed shall be three, six, and nine years, respectively, and shall be so designated by the President in making such appointments; and thereafter all the commissioners shall hold office for the term of nine years and shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Vacancies shall be filled by like appointment and confirmation for the unexpired term. Each member of said commission shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year. The office of the commission shall be at Washington, in the District of Columbia, but the commission may hold meetings elsewhere when necessary and convenient.

SEC. 3. That the Bureau of Corporations is hereby transferred to and merged in said commission, and all of the powers, duties, records, papers, and funds belonging or pertaining to the Bureau of Corporations shall hereafter belong and pertain to the Interstate Trade Commission, and all the officers and employees of said bureau shall thereupon be officers and employees of the Interstate Trade Commission. The said commission shall also have a secretary, a chief clerk, and such clerks, inspectors, examiners, experts, messengers, and other assistants as from time to time may be necessary and as may be appropriated for by Congress.

SEC. 4. That all corporations engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, excepting common carriers, shall from time to time furnish to the commission such information, statement, and records of their organization, business, financial condition, conduct, and management and the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, and management of their subsidiaries at such time, to such degree and extent and in such form as may be prescribed by the commission; and the commission at all reasonable times, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall have complete access to all records, accounts, minutes, books, and papers of such corporations and their subsidiaries, including the records of any of their executive or other committees. Failure or neglect on the part of any corporation subject to this act or of any of its subsidiaries to comply with the terms of this section within such time after written demand shall have been made upon such corporation by the commission requiring such compliance, as shall be fixed by the commission shall constitute a misdemeanor, and upon conviction such corporation shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 for every day of such failure or neglect.

SEC. 5. The information so obtained shall be public records, and the commission shall from time to time make public such information in such form and to such extent as it may deem necessary.

SEC. 6. That the district courts of the United States, upon the application of the commission alleging a failure to comply with any order of the commission or alleging a failure to comply with or a violation of any of the provisions of this act by any corporation subject thereto, shall have jurisdiction to issue a writ or writs of mandamus or injunction or other order enforcing such order of the commission or commanding such corporation, its officers and employees, to comply with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That for the purposes of this act the commission shall have the power to require by subpœna the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements, documents, or other things of every kind and nature whatsoever relating to any matter under investigation by the commission. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing, and in case of disobedience to a subpœna the commission, or any party to a proceeding before the commission, may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any corporation subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation, or other person, to appear before said commission (and produce books, documents, and papers, if so ordered) and give evidence touching the matter in question, and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. This claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying.

The testimony of any witness may be taken at the instance of a party in any proceeding or investigation pending before the commission by deposition at any time after the inquiry is instituted. The commission may also order testimony to be taken by deposition in any proceeding or investigation pending before it at any stage of such proceeding or investigation. Such deposition may be taken before any person authorized so to do by the commission and who has power to administer oaths.

Any person may be compelled to appear and depose, and to produce documentary evidence, in the same manner as witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify and produce documentary evidence before the commission as hereinbefore provided. Such testimony shall be reduced to writing.

Witnesses whose testimony is taken under the provisions of this act shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

No person shall be excused from attending and testifying, or from producing books, papers, documents, or other things before this commission or in obedience to the subpœna of the commission whether such subpœna be signed or issued by one or more of the commissioners on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify under oath or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before said commission in obedience to a subpœna issued by it in a proceeding instituted upon its own initiative: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying. The purpose of this provision is to give immunity only to natural persons who under oath testify in response to a subpœna of the commission in an inquiry instituted by the commission.

SEC. 8. That the said commission shall, on or before the 1st day of January in each year, make a report, which shall be transmitted to Congress. This report shall contain such information and data collected by the commission as it may deem of value in the determination of questions connected with the regulation of commerce, together with such recommendations as to additional legislation relating thereto as the commission may deem necessary.

SEC. 9. That any person willfully making or furnishing to said commission any statement, return, or record required by this act, when knowing such statement, return, or record to be false in any material particular, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 10. That in case a final decree shall be issued against any corporation under the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, or under sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," which became a law August 27, 1894, the court entering such decree may, in its discretion, refer to the commission its decree, with instructions to take evidence, consider such facts, and report to the court the findings as to method of dissolution or reorganization as the commission shall consider best fitted to carry out such decree; if a reorganization takes place under a decree the commission shall inform itself respecting the reorganization, and if it is of the opinion that it is not in harmony with the decree it shall, through counsel, inform the court for such action as the court may take.

SEC. 11. That the said commission may at any time, upon complaint of any person or corporation, or upon its own initiative, or upon the request of the Attorney General, or of the corporation affected, investigate any corporation subject to the provisions of this act for the purpose of determining whether such corporation has been guilty of a violation of the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, or under sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of "An act to reduce taxation," etc., which became a law August 27, 1894, or of any of the provisions of this act, and may hold such hearings and take such evidence as it may deem necessary; and in case the commission shall find that such corporation has been guilty of a violation of the provisions of said acts or of this act it shall make a finding, stating the facts, and prescribing the acts, transactions, and readjustments necessary in order that said corporation may thereafter comply with the terms of said acts and of this act, and shall transmit a copy of the said finding in full to such corporation. If within 60 days after transmitting said finding, or such extension thereof as shall be given by the commission, the corporation shall not have complied with the terms of the finding, and shall not have performed the acts prescribed as necessary to make it comply with the said acts or with this act, the commission shall report the fact of noncompliance to the Attorney General, together with a copy of such finding, for his action under the said acts or of this act. But the commission may, if it deems it proper, report the facts to the Attorney General without calling upon such corporation for compliance with said acts or with this act.

Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to prevent or interfere with the Attorney General in enforcing the provisions of the act to protect commerce, etc., approved July 2, 1890.

Messrs. Crane, Brandegee, Oliver, and Lippitt expressed themselves as follows:

MINORITY VIEWS.

The undersigned members of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce are unable to agree to the report of the majority of the committee on Senate resolution 98, as to "what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to the creation and control of corporations engaged in interstate commerce and what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to persons or firms engaged in interstate commerce."

While certain features of the report are commendable, there are several conclusions therein which do not accord with our views, and therefore we are prevented from approving the report as a whole.

W. M. CRANE.
FRANK B. BRANDEGEE.
GEORGE T. OLIVER.
HENRY F. LIPPITT.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to make a motion which, I think, under the rules has precedence of the motion made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. I move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Newlands	Simmons
Bankhead	Goff	Norris	Smoot
Borah	Hitchcock	Overman	Thomas
Brady	Hollis	Page	Thompson
Bristow	James	Perkins	Thornton
Bryan	Jones	Pittman	Tillman
Burton	Kern	Poindexter	Townsend
Camden	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Warren
Chilton	Lewis	Root	Wecks
Clapp	Lippitt	Saulsbury	White
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Shafroth	Williams
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Works
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Sherman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has moved to take up the trade commission bill and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has moved as a substitute to take up the river and harbor bill. Is that the parliamentary status?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that to be the parliamentary status at the present time.

Mr. BORAH. There may be a different situation when the caucus adjourns.

Mr. BRISTOW. The inquiry I want to make is whether it is now in order for me to move as a substitute for either or both motions which have been made to take up Senate bill 392, the officers' retirement bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, what is the motion of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. BRISTOW. If in order, I move as a substitute for the pending motions that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 392, which is the officers' retirement bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is the duty of the Chair to first put the question on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and then, if that be rejected by the Senate, to put the question on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Chair if the motion made by the Senator from North Carolina is not a privileged motion, it being to consider an appropriation bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not, in the opinion of the Chair, at the present hour.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not 2 o'clock; and in the opinion of the Chair the motion made by the Senator from North Carolina is not a privileged motion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, of course Senators will understand that I dislike very much to antagonize the motion for the consideration of the interstate trade commission bill, but I am anxious that some arrangement may be made by which we may go on with the river and harbor bill after to-day. If the Senator from Nevada will give us some assurance that he will lay his bill aside for a few days, when there is no Senator ready to speak, until we can get through with the river and harbor bill, I will not press the motion now or at any other time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have no objection to giving that assurance. I wish to say that I hope that this bill will be passed quickly, and I believe it will be passed quickly. I believe that the good sense of the Senate will insist upon its rapid disposal; and I do not believe at all that this measure will be in the way of the river and harbor bill; but I am quite willing, of course, to yield from time to time, as the Senator from North Carolina suggests, for the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I want to ask, if this bill is made the unfinished business, whether it can be laid aside except by unanimous consent?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand it can.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will rule when that question arises.

Mr. JONES. I hope the Senator will take that into consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, of course I have nothing to say with regard to any arrangement which may be made between the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Nevada; but I want it distinctly understood that some of us are not parties to any understanding of that kind, and that we will insist upon the business of the Senate being done in the ordinary and usual way. I fear that the Senator from Nevada is cherishing a false hope if he believes that the trade commission bill can be disposed of in a brief time. I think it will require considerable discussion.

I now make a parliamentary inquiry. If the trade commission bill is taken up on motion at this time and continued after 2 o'clock, would it become the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it be continued until after 2 o'clock and be not displaced by some other bill prior to the adjournment of the Senate, it will be the unfinished business.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, of course Senators will understand that the anxiety I have about passing the river and harbor bill grows out of the fact that the fiscal year will end in a few days. I shall, so far as I am concerned, take my chances. I have no doubt, if the Senate makes the trade commission bill the unfinished business, when that is laid aside the Senate will go on with the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like to submit this: I am agreeable to the motion made by the Senator from Nevada, but my understanding is that when a bill like that becomes the unfinished business of the Senate, it is entirely regular and in order to move to take up an appropriation bill, and that a majority vote of the Senate can so determine, even after a bill of this kind becomes the unfinished business by reason of not having been disposed of before the Senate adjourns to-day. It is with that understanding that I shall make no objection to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, what the Senator from Florida says is, of course, true. It is, however, usual at this time in a session to except appropriation bills from unanimous-consent agreements and other arrangement that proposes to consume the time of the Senate, as very naturally they must be taken care of if we are ever going to adjourn. I would consider that an appropriation bill should come up at any time, whether or not it was in the morning hour; and I certainly should move, if I had charge of one, to proceed to its consideration, even as against the unfinished business. Of course, other matters can be taken up in the morning before 2 o'clock, before the unfinished business is taken up; and there are a good many matters on the calendar that ought to have our attention. There are matters there that have been neglected longer than probably any Congress has ever neglected the pending business of the country. The Senate calendar is clearly in worse condition now, so far as tardiness in the consideration of bills is concerned, than perhaps has ever been the case in the history of the Senate, and, for that matter, I think the same is true as to the House. So I hope that whatever measure may be taken up now we shall understand very fully that the time of the Senate is not foreclosed against the regular calendar business of the Senate. If trust matters are to be taken up, such legislation may be finished in a month or it may be finished in six months; but certainly I do not propose, if I can prevent it, to permit them to absorb completely the attention of the Senate as against other legitimate business that ought to be transacted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say, in response to the Senator from Wyoming, that in case this motion is adopted, I shall ask for the reading of the bill, and then, if there is no Senator who wishes to speak upon the subject, I shall ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. That will give an opportunity for the consideration of the calendar, to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I want to see if I have the correct idea as to the Chair's ruling. Do I understand the Chair to rule that a motion to substitute one bill for another is not in order, and that the original motion must be put before the other is made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair was, that during the morning hour, when there is a motion to take up a bill, that is the question to be put. It accomplishes exactly the same purpose to vote it down as it would to substitute some other bill for it. If the motion is voted down, thereupon a motion may be made that the other bill be taken up.

Mr. BRISTOW. I beg to suggest to the Chair that voting it down would not accomplish the same purpose as a vote to substitute another bill. Such a vote in the affirmative would make the bill substituted the business of the Senate, while the other motion would simply be a negative vote against the original motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may be wrong, but the Chair is ruling that when there is a motion to take up a bill the motion is not amendable. It is a question for the Senate to settle whether it will take that bill up or not.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understand the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from North Carolina have entered into some sort of an agreement in regard to the procedure that shall go on with the trade commission bill. I just wondered whether or not I had the right idea about it. I understand that the Senator from Nevada has no intention of trying to obtain an immediate vote upon the trade commission bill, but that there will be ample and reasonable time for its discussion and consideration from day to day, and that the mere fact that somebody may not be ready to speak to-morrow or the day after will not be taken advantage of to obtain a vote on the bill. Is that the understanding?

Mr. NEWLANDS. There has been no understanding at all regarding that. Of course, I am anxious to have an early vote upon this bill and shall press an early vote, but that, of course, will be done with proper consideration and courteous consideration for those who desire to speak.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understood the Senator to say to the Senator from North Carolina that while this would be the unfinished business, if nobody is ready to speak, he would move to lay it aside and take up the other business of the Senate.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will rest upon what I have already said. I do not wish to get myself into a strait-jacket with reference to this matter.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am not asking that. I only wanted to know what the Senator's idea was.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator can rest assured that so far as the Senator from Nevada is concerned he will preserve the traditional character of courtesy in this body.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have always found him ready to do that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. We are proceeding under Rule VIII. For 10 minutes we have been discussing a question which by Rule VIII is not debatable. It provides that motions made to proceed to the consideration of any matter shall be determined without debate.

The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15613.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the Federal trade commission, composed of five members, not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party, and the said Federal trade commission is referred to hereinafter as "the commission."

The words defined in this section shall have the following meaning when found in this act, to wit:

"Commerce" means such commerce as Congress has the power to regulate under the Constitution.

The term "corporation" or "corporations" shall include joint-stock associations and all other associations having shares of capital or capital stock, organized to carry on business for profit.

"Antitrust acts" means the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890; also sections 73 to 77, inclusive, of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1894; and also the act entitled "An act to amend sections 73 and 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled

'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' " approved February 12, 1913.

SEC. 2. Upon the organization of the commission, the Bureau of Corporations, and the offices of Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of Corporations shall cease to exist, and the employees of said bureau shall become employees of the commission in such capacity as it may designate. The commission shall take over all the records, furniture, and equipment of said bureau. All work and proceedings pending before the bureau may be continued by the commission free from the direction or control of the Secretary of Commerce. All appropriations heretofore made for the support and maintenance of the bureau and its work are hereby authorized to be expended by the commission for said purposes.

Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. A vacancy in the commission shall not impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission.

The commissioners shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The terms of office of the commissioners shall be seven years each. The terms of those first appointed by the President shall date from the taking effect of this act, and shall be as follows:

One shall be appointed for a term of three years, one for a term of four years, one for a term of five years, one for a term of six years, and one for a term of seven years; and after said commissioners shall have been so first appointed all appointments, except to fill vacancies, shall be for terms of seven years each. The commission shall elect one of its members chairman for such period as it may determine. The commission shall elect a secretary and may elect an assistant secretary. Said secretary and assistant secretary shall hold their offices or connection with the commission at the pleasure of the commission. Each commissioner shall receive a salary of $10,000 per annum. The secretary of the commission shall receive a salary of $5,000 per annum. The assistant secretary shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. In case of a vacancy in the office of any commissioner during his term, an appointment shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill such vacancy, for the unexpired term. The office of the commission shall be in the city of Washington, but the commission may at its pleasure meet and exercise all its powers at any other place, and may authorize one or more of its members to prosecute any investigation, and for the purposes thereof to exercise the powers herein given the commission.

The commission shall have such attorneys, accountants, experts, examiners, special agents, and other employees as may from time to time be appropriated for by Congress, and shall have authority to audit their bills and fix their compensation. With the exception of the secretary and assistant secretary and one clerk to each of the commissioners, and such attorneys and experts as may be employed, all employees of the commission shall be a part of the classified civil service. The commission shall also have the power to adopt a seal, which shall be judicially noticed, and to rent suitable rooms for the conduct of its work.

All the expenses of the commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the commissioners or by their employees under their orders in making any investigation or upon official business in any other place than in the city of Washington, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the commission.

The Auditor for the State and other Departments shall receive and examine all accounts of expenditures of the commission.

Witnesses summoned before the commission shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

SEC. 3. The commission shall have power, among others—

(a) To investigate from time to time, and as often as the commission may deem advisable, the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships.

(b) To require any corporation subject to the provisions of this act which the commission may designate to furnish to the commission from time to time information, statements, and records concerning its organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, management, and relation to other corporations, or to individuals, associations, or partnerships, and to require the production for examination of all books, documents, correspondence, contracts, memoranda, or other papers relating to or in any way affecting the commerce in which such corporation under inquiry is engaged or concerning its relations to any individual, association, or partnership, and to make copies of the same.

(c) To prescribe as near as may be a uniform system of annual reports from such corporations or classes of corporations subject to the provisions of this act as the commission may designate, and to fix the time for the filing of such reports, and to require such reports, or any special report, to be made under oath, or otherwise, in the discretion of the commission.

(d) To make public, in the discretion of the commission, any information obtained by it in the exercise of the powers, authority, and duties conferred upon it by this act, except so far as may be necessary to protect trade processes, names of customers, and such other matters as the commission may deem not to be of public importance, and to make annual and special reports to the Congress, and to submit therewith recommendations for additional legislation.

(e) In any suit in equity brought by or under the direction of the Attorney General as provided in the antitrust acts, if the court finds for the complainant, it may, upon its own motion or the motion of any party to such suit, refer the matter of the form of the decree to be entered to the commission as a master in chancery, whereupon the commission shall proceed in that capacity upon such notice to the parties and upon such hearing as the court may prescribe, and shall as speedily as practicable make report with its findings to the court, which report and findings having been made and filed shall be subject to the judicial procedure established for the consideration and disposition of a master's report and findings in equity cases.

(f) Wherever a restraining order or an interlocutory or final decree has heretofore been entered or shall hereafter be entered against any defendant or defendants in any suit brought by the United States to prevent and restrain any violation of the antitrust acts, the commission shall have power, and it shall be its duty, upon the application of the Attorney General, to make investigation of the manner in which the order or decree has been or is being carried out, and as to whether the same has been or is being violated and what, if any, further order, decree, or relief is advisable. It shall transmit to the Attorney General a report embodying its findings as a result of any such investigation with such recommendations for further action as it may deem advisable and the report shall be made public in the discretion of the commission.

(g) If the commission believes from its inquiries and investigations, instituted upon its own initiative or at the suggestion of the President, the Attorney General, or either House of Congress, that any corporation, individual, association, or partnership has violated any law of the United States regulating commerce, it shall report its findings and the evidence in relation thereto to the Attorney General with its recommendations.

For the purpose of prosecuting any investigation or proceeding authorized by this section the commission, or its duly authorized agent or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documents or writings of any corporation being investigated or proceeded against.

(h) The commission is hereby directed to investigate, as expeditiously as may be, trade conditions in foreign countries where associations, combinations, or practices of buyers, dealers, or traders may injuriously affect the export trade of the United States, and also to investigate whether American exporters have combined with each other or with foreign producers or dealers to control prices abroad, and to report to Congress thereon from time to time.

SEC. 4. The powers and jurisdiction herein conferred upon the commission shall extend over all trade associations, corporate combinations, and corporations as hereinbefore defined engaged in or affecting commerce, except banks and common carriers.

SEC. 5. That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful.

The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that any corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce, it shall issue and serve upon such corporation a written order, at least 30 days in advance of the time set therein for hearing, directing it to appear before the commission and show cause why an order shall not be issued by the commission restraining and prohibiting it from using such method of competition, and if upon such hearing the commission shall find that the method of competition in question is prohibited by this act it shall thereupon issue an order restraining and prohibiting the use of the same. The commission may at any time modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any order issued by it under this act.

Whenever the commission, after the issuance of such order, shall find that such corporation has not complied therewith, the commission may petition the district court of the United States, within any district where the method in question was used or where such corporation is located or carries on business, praying the court to issue an injunction to enforce such order of the commission; and the court is hereby authorized to issue such injunction.

SEC. 6. That if any corporation subject to this act shall fail to file any annual or special report, as provided in subdivision (b) of section 3 hereof, within the time fixed by the commission for filing the same, and such failure shall continue for 30 days after notice of such default, the corporation shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each and every day of the continuance of such failure, which forfeiture shall be payable into the Treasury of the United States, and shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States brought in the district where the corporation has its principal office or in any district in which it shall do business. It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, to prosecute for the recovery of forfeitures. The costs and expenses of such prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

SEC. 7. Any person who shall willfully destroy, alter, mutilate, or remove out of the jurisdiction of the United States, or authorize, assist in, or be privy to the willful destruction, alteration, mutilation, or removal out of the jurisdiction of the United States of any book, letter, paper, or document containing an entry or memorandum relating to commerce, the production of which the commission may require under this act, or who shall willfully make any false entry relating to commerce in any book of accounts or record of any trade association, corporate combination, or corporation subject to the provisions of this act, or who shall willfully make or furnish to said commission or to its agent any false statement, return, or record, knowing the same to be false in any material particular, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

Any employee of the commission who divulges any fact or information which may come to his knowledge during the course of his employment by the commission, except in so far as it has been made public by the commission, or as he may be directed by the commission or by a court, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 8. The commission shall have and exercise the powers possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of evidence, and to administer oaths. All the powers, requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by the act to regulate commerce, as amended in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall apply to witnesses, testimony, and evidence before the commission.

SEC. 9. The district courts of the United States, upon the application of the commission alleging a failure by any corporation, or by any of its officers or employees, or by any witness, to comply with any order of the commission for the furnishing of information, shall have jurisdiction to issue such writs, orders, or other process as may be necessary to enforce any order of the commission and to punish the disobedience thereof.

SEC. 10. The several departments and bureaus of the Government, when directed by the President, shall furnish the commission, upon its request, all records, papers, and information in their possession relating to any trade association, corporate combination, or corporation subject to any of the provisions of this act.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question in regard to the measure before we vote on it. I should like to ask the Senator what are the estimated salaries and official expenses connected with this commission?

Mr. NEWLANDS. We have not entered into that question. I presume it would——

Mr. BORAH. I thought perhaps the Senator could not state it accurately, but——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I presume it will be in excess of the expenditures of the Bureau of Corporations, and considerably in excess. I do not recall what the actual expenditure for the Bureau of Corporations is.

Mr. BORAH. I understand, first, we have five commissioners at $10,000 each. Has there been any effort to arrive at an intelligent conclusion as to the probable expense connected with the operation of the committee?

Mr. NEWLANDS. There has been none by the committee.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask further, in what respect, then, will this commission differ from the Bureau of Corporations with reference to the power of investigation and the gathering of facts, and so forth, concerning the business of the country or any particular business which it might be desired to have investigated?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator can easily ascertain that by reading the corresponding section of the two acts.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I suppose so.

I rather suspected, Mr. President, that that was the information which accompanied this bill to the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If the report of the committee is adopted, will the bill then be open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Will the Senator state his question again? The Chair was not giving attention.

Mr. CUMMINS. This bill came to the Senate, was referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee, and that committee now reports, recommending that all after the enacting clause be stricken out, and that the sections which have just been read be substituted instead of the bill as passed by the House. If the report of the committee is adopted and that substitution is made, will the matter that we have adopted for the House text be open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would say that that is a matter which the Chair thinks ought not to be ruled upon in advance. The bill is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment, and the Chair is of the opinion that the ordinary procedure with reference to the matter of which the Senator from Iowa inquires would be that such amendments as are to be proposed to the amendment of the committee ought to be proposed at this time.

Mr. CUMMINS. I feared that was the parliamentary rule, and that if the report of the committee is adopted, which is an amendment of the House bill, then there could be no change in the matter so substituted. In that situation, Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand the Senator to be of the opinion that if the substitute is adopted then we can not, as in Committee of the Whole, amend the substitute?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Presiding Officer just indicated that that was the view of the Chair, and I simply accepted it.

Mr. BORAH. I did not so understand the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa misunderstood the Chair.

Mr. CUMMINS. Possibly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair expressly reserved any statement or ruling upon that question until that point shall have been reached. The Chair stated in that connection, however, that in the opinion of the Chair the substitution of the amendment of the committee now pending is at this time open for amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly I did misunderstand the statement of the Chair; but I think we have a right to be advised with regard to that matter, because it is a vital matter. I do not pretend to be a skilled parliamentarian, and some one who makes such a claim, or who has established such a title, ought to say something at this juncture.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I do not think that description would fit many of us, but if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The inquiry propounded by the Senator from Iowa is completely answered by Rule XVIII. The pending question is to strike out and insert. That presents two questions. The motion to strike out is subject to amendment. Then the new matter to be inserted in lieu of it is subject to amendment. When both have been amended to the entire satisfaction of the body the proposition is submitted as a single question whether the motion to strike out and insert shall prevail. The rule says:

> But pending a motion to strike out and insert, the part to be stricken out and the part to be inserted shall each be regarded for the purpose of amendment as a question; and motions to amend the part to be stricken out shall have precedence.

Motions to amend the original text of the House bill are first in order, and when the proposition to amend has been exhausted then motions to amend the substitute are in order, and when both have been amended to the satisfaction of the Senate then there is submitted the single question to strike out and insert.

Mr. CUMMINS. The effect of the suggestion just made by the Senator from Arkansas is this: The committee has moved to strike out certain parts of the House bill and insert in lieu of those parts certain other matter. The text of the House bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. And the text of the matter sought to be inserted is open to amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is right.

Mr. CUMMINS. But if neither is amended and a vote is had on the recommendation of the committee and the matter is stricken out, the matter proposed by the committee is inserted, it is not then open to amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Under the precedents of the Senate it is not. It has passed the stage when it may be amendable after it has been adopted.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. That indicates a very unfortunate parliamentary situation, because we have here practically an entire bill surrounded and hampered by the rule that has just been read by the Senator from Arkansas. There is no logic in the rule, and in this case it is an exceedingly unfair and unjust rule; but, however, we can not avoid it now.

I ask the Senator from Nevada whether he proposes to press the matter to a vote at this moment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator inquires whether I intend to press it to a vote at this moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Nevada ask for a vote upon the amendment of the committee at this time?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not. I intended to ask whether there were any Senators who wish to speak on the bill this afternoon.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator is talking too low.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It was my intention to ask whether any Senator wishes to address the Senate on the bill this afternoon, and if not it was my purpose to ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. CUMMINS. That would be very considerate on the part of the Senator from Nevada, and I think that is the proper course to be pursued.

I desire to say, Mr. President, that I am thoroughly in favor of the institution or creation of a trade commission. I am thoroughly in favor of the greater part, the most important part, of the bill which has been reported by the committee of which I am a member. But there are certain other powers that ought to be given to the trade commission more essential, more vital to the welfare of the people of this country than any which are given in the bill as it is now before us.

I have had grave doubt whether it would be worth while to create so dignified and expensive and formal a tribunal simply to do the things that it is here authorized and required to do; I think there are things which the commission should do and which it could do to the very great advantage of the people. Those things are represented in certain sections which were originally a part of the bill as reported by the subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee to the full committee. They are, speaking generally, regulations concerning interlocking directorates of competitive corporations, of intercorporate stockholding in competitive corporations, and of holding companies who own and control the stock of two or more corporations which are or ought to be competitive.

These are the subjects which I think the commission could supervise to greater advantage than any other subjects that could be committed to it, and it has been my desire, and it has been the desire, I know, of certain other members of the Interstate Commerce Committee, that in the establishment of the commission we should add these powers precisely as we have given it one power in the bill, and but one power, namely, the power of preventing unfair competition. The sections to which I have referred have a very peculiar history.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says that the commission has been given the power to prevent unfair competition. There are no certain prescribed limits at all. Under the powers of the commission to prevent unfair competition, what possible industrial condition would it not be within the power of the commission to examine, interlocking directorates and everything else?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I can not quite agree with the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. In what?

Mr. CUMMINS. The vice of a community of directors in two corporations doing the same kind of business is that their presence may suppress, overcome, and prevent all competition. The holding of the stock of one corporation by another, its competitor in business, destroys competition entirely.

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator another question. Section 5 says:

> That unfair competition in interstate commerce is hereby declared unlawful. The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

The whole covers every subdivision of the whole, and anything which would result in unfair competition in combinations, holding stocks of corporations, interlocking directorates, and every conceivable industrial condition which would result in unfair competition, would be subject to the investigation of this commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. It might be subject to the investigation of the commission, but it is not subject to the correction of the commission, and that is the main thing. I do not believe, Mr. President, that unfair competition is the synonym of no competition or of imperfect and inadequate competition. The unfair competition that is sought to be reached in the section to which reference has been made——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment. The unfair competition that is sought to be reached in the section to which the Senator from Idaho has referred is that violence of competition conducted through unfair practices and methods which must ultimately result in the extinction of the rival and the establishment of a monopoly. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether, under the first sentence of section 5, everything is unfair competition which a majority of the commission shall determine?

Mr. CUMMINS. I had hoped that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], the distinguished chairman of our committee and the leader of its thought and its purpose, would explain the meaning of section 5.

Mr. THOMAS. I am seeking for light in every direction.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not mean to say that I will not be willing to enter upon an explanation, if it becomes necessary; but my view of it might be a little different from that of the Senator from Nevada. I would rather that he would express his views in advance of mine, and I gladly yield to him to answer the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Nevada has already addressed the Senate this morning upon that and other topics. I am seeking light from every source, and I always feel that I can apply to the Senator from Iowa very successfully as to all matters relating to interstate commerce.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment. My construction of this term is that if we enact this measure into a law the commission to be appointed afterwards will have the absolute power, subject only, of course, to the ultimate determination of the legality of the act by the courts, of arbitrarily determining whether any act submitted to it is or is not unfair competition, whether that act is one which involves no competition or one which involves actual competition, and that as a consequence we are imposing upon the business world a condition almost similar to that which resulted during the Middle Ages in a declaration that all unbelief should be heresy.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have no hesitation in answering the Senator from Colorado, though I would naturally have preferred the Senator from Nevada should first have expressed his view with regard to unfair competition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho, who addressed the Chair?

Mr. CUMMINS. Is it upon the same subject?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it is upon the same subject. I want to say, however, that, of course, we will be anxious to have the view of the Senator from Nevada as well as the Senator from Iowa; but upon this side of the Chamber we rather defer to the Senator from Iowa on matters of interstate commerce. We all know the Senator from Nevada has given a vast amount of attention to this subject, and we are always instructed by his view of a subject. But the Senator from Colorado asked the simple proposition, not what is unfair competition, necessarily, but is not that unfair competition which the majority of this commission under the terms of this bill determine to be unfair competition? Is there any limitation upon their power except the constitutional inhibition which might be invaded against the confiscation of property, or something of that kind? But, within any conceivable range of what anyone conceives to be unfair competition, what limitation is there to the jurisdiction of this commission to determine it to be unfair competition?

Mr. CUMMINS. I intend to answer those questions now.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator will allow me just to add a question, he can probably answer both in one.

Mr. CUMMINS. I shall be very glad to answer the two at the same time.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Iowa said, in reply to the Senator from Idaho, that the bill authorizes the commission to investigate but not to adjudicate the question as to the fairness of competition.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from California entirely misunderstood me.

Mr. WORKS. Then the Senator misunderstood the inquiry.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I said that the bill gave the commission the power to investigate the absence of competition if by interlocking directorates or by intercorporate stockholding between two corporations, but it did not give any power to correct that condition as it did give power to correct the condition of unfair competition.

Mr. WORKS. I think the section itself answers the inquiry made by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Idaho. It provides, in the first instance, that unfair competition is unlawful. Then follows the statement that the commission is empowered and directed to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce. Then follows the provision authorizing the necessary investigation and then it is provided that thereupon the commission shall "issue an order restraining and prohibiting the use of the same"; that is to say, the unfair means of competition.

Now, it is given over absolutely to the commission to determine whether it is unfair, and then to issue an order or resort to a court or any other judicial tribunal that it is unfair. It is proposed to adjudicate the whole question.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, I am very much obliged to the Senator from California for answering the question for me. I ask whether the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] is satisfied with that answer. If so, I need not bother myself to express my own view.

Mr. THOMAS. Until I can get further light on the subject I am satisfied.

Mr. CUMMINS. How is it with the Senator from Idaho? Does he regard the answer as entirely satisfactory?

Mr. BORAH. I regard the answer as satisfactory, but I should like to have the commentary of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from California is only partially right. Every lawyer understands that we can not delegate to a commission legislative power; that when we give to an administrative body the execution of a law of Congress we must at the same time give it a standard, a guide and rule which it is to apply to the particular case and determine whether that particular case falls under the prohibition of the law.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not yield just at this moment. I want to complete my answer.

Thus in the interstate-commerce act we have declared that a common carrier shall not charge an unreasonable rate for the transportation of persons or property. What is an unreasonable rate Congress has not attempted to determine, but has vested the Interstate Commerce Commission with the authority to examine and then to determine whether a particular rate is or is not a reasonable and just rate. It might be at once said that the Interstate Commerce Commission has the authority by a majority vote to declare any rate that it may see fit to declare a just and reasonable rate or otherwise. But that is not expressing it in the form of the law. The office of the Interstate Commerce Commission is to ascertain through an investigation and hearing whether a particular rate is a reasonable charge for the service rendered by the common carrier. Just so, here we have given in this section to the trade commission a standard, a rule which is just as well understood in the law as were the words "reasonable rate." It is just as easy to turn either to the civilized sense of mankind or to the law of the land and ascertain what unfair competition is as to ascertain what a reasonable rate is.

Therefore, I answer the Senator from Colorado by saying that we do not give to the trade commission an unlimited, unbridled license or authority to declare anything unfair competition. We say that if you find that unfair competition exists then you must prevent it, but in order to ascertain what unfair competition is you must go to the courts and to the common sense of mankind, and there are many adjudications upon the subject. The words "unfair competition" are not new in the law, and in my opinion they will become just as understandable as any other rule that we have given to any administrative commission that has hitherto been created. I am of the opinion——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Suppose the order of this commission establishing the fact that there was unfair competition should be reviewed by a court, what rule would the court invoke to set aside the commission other than the fact that the rule which the commission had established resulted or would result in the confiscation of the property?

Mr. CUMMINS. It ought not to invoke any other. The purpose here is not to permit a broad review of the work of the commission by the courts. That was proposed in 1906 when we were amending the interstate-commerce law. If I understand the section correctly, when the commission issues its order restraining such a practice or method, then if the person against whom it is issued refuses to obey it, the commission appeals to the court through a petition, and the jurisdiction of the court is not to review the merits of the controversy. It is not to substitute its own judgment as to unfair competition for the judgment of the commission any more than it is the province of a court to substitute its own judgment as to what constitutes a reasonable rate for the judgment of the Interstate Commerce Commission; but the jurisdiction and power of the court has been limited with respect to the trade commission exactly as it is limited with respect to the Interstate Commerce Commission to the ascertainment of these questions. Has the trade commission arbitrarily issued the order? Has it exceeded its jurisdiction?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, how would the court determine whether or not the trade commission had acted arbitrarily or had exceeded its jurisdiction except by determining the fact that its order would result in an interference with the constitutional rights of property?

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope that is the only event in which the court could interfere with the power of the commission.

Mr. BORAH. That is the question which I asked a while ago—what limitation is there upon this commission to determine what shall be and what shall not be unfair competition other than this power of the court to interfere when it results in the confiscation of property?

Mr. CUMMINS. The question is very easily divisible. If you ask me whether there is any power of review, I answer instantly "no"; but if you ask me, is there any limitation upon the commission, I answer "yes; the limitation of the statute."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment I will do so.

The trade commission is as much bound to obey the law as is any court which is established to administer justice. The trade commission becomes bound to declare what is or what is not unfair competition according to the law of the land, according to the improving and the developing sense of the country with respect to matters of commerce. I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am impressed with the suggestion of the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the point that there are possibilities in the construction of the word "unfair," which leaves the matter wholly to the discretion of the tribunal which is designated as the commission, and I now ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] does the Senator from Iowa see any more danger in allowing the exercise of discretion to the commission to decide what would be "unfair" in the matter of competition in trade than that which the Supreme Court of the United States intruded into the Sherman antitrust act when it introduced the words "undue" to the phrase "restraint of trade," making the prohibition of restraint of trade depend on it being "undue" before it can be denounced by the Sherman antitrust law? Is there any greater discretion vested in the commission to ascertain and determine the meaning of "unfair" or any more arbitrary discretion than that vested in the board of directors of different companies or in the lower courts to decide as to what is "undue" restraint of trade as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there would be no greater difficulty. When one undertakes to say what is an undue restraint of trade or commerce he is at once plunged into as much confusion, certainly, as he is when he undertakes to say what is or what is not unfair competition.

Mr. BORAH. But, Mr. President, may I suggest the fact that you have put into this proposed statute the word "unfair," which obligates the commission to enter that domain which has no circumscribed limits at all? We are not saying here that this commission shall determine, for instance, that competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful, but that unfair competition which necessarily invites the tribunals to the field of speculation as to what they consider unfair is unlawful.

I have not suggested that it is a dangerous proposition; I do not know but that we must rest that discretion somewhere; but I was anxious to know what limitation there was upon the commission in the exercise of that discretion. Suppose the commission should say that "this is unfair competition," who will review their judgment? Who will review their discretion? When you get a tribunal to arbitrate on that judgment and discretion, what can that tribunal do?

Mr. LEWIS. My answer, Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEWIS. I beg pardon, I thought the Senator from Idaho was addressing his observations to me. If I am not intruding upon the Senator from Iowa now——

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very glad to yield, but I simply want to advise the Senate that I have not yet been permitted to even suggest what I rose to say.

Mr. LEWIS. I will not interrupt the Senator from Iowa from his continuing course. Not speaking as the chairman of the committee, for the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is the chairman, and I am but speaking as an humble aid of his, this would be my answer: If any commission or any body of men constituted in this Government should render an opinion based on discretion that was so apparently arbitrary and unjust it would be reviewed by a court of equity upon the facts being properly set forth and under the definition by laws heretofore prescribed upon the question, touching the general meaning of "unfair competition," there we would have the reviewing power. In a court of equity is the review. Such is my judgment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the whole policy of our regulation of commerce is based upon our faith and confidence in the administrative tribunals. If we are not willing to entrust the commercial fortunes of the United States to the honor, the learning, and the integrity of administrative tribunals, we had better suspend and cease any attempted regulation of commerce. I look upon this application of power to the trade commission as no greater, as involving no graver consequences, no more danger to vested rights, than the discretion that we have necessarily reposed in the Interstate Commerce Commission and that we have reposed in the courts when we ask them to apply the rule announced in the antitrust law. If anything can be more indefinite or vague than the prohibition against the restraint of trade or commerce, it has yet to be brought to my attention. What is a restraint of trade or commerce depends entirely upon one's economic and sociological view of industrial society.

Mr. LIPPITT. Psychological.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I will not include psychological; I do not believe it involves that element in our affairs. We are here endeavoring to sustain competition; that is the primary purpose of the antitrust law; it is the chief object of all these laws that we are now proposing; it is the only justification for the establishment of a trade commission; for if we do not desire to maintain the competitive force as a part of our industrial commercial life, then all these things are unnecessary.

We have chosen to report a rule for the trade commission in the language which has been suggested, namely, "unfair competition." It is that competition which is resorted to for the purpose of destroying competition, of eliminating a competitor, and of introducing monopoly. That is the "unfair competition," in its broad sense, which this bill endeavors to prevent.

If any Member of the Senate can suggest a better rule than that, can suggest more understandable words for that standard,

I have no doubt that the chairman of the committee, and I know that I, as a member of the committee, will be very glad to substitute that better definition; and I think it is the duty of every Senator here who believes that we ought to keep competition as a part of the protection of American commerce to devote his mind for the next few hours or few days to the ascertainment of that one thing. Can you furnish the Senate a better definition than "unfair competition"? If you can I am sure that those of us who believe in the general policy of this section of the proposed law will welcome its adoption in the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question as to whether or not he is in favor of conferring upon this commission the power to determine absolutely, and without appeal or review upon appeal, the question of unfair competition in any given case?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am. I have the same confidence in the commission—or I shall have—that I have in the court. I believe it will do justice in a greater number of cases than will be done in the courts. Neither am I disparaging the courts, for I think no man excels me in reverence and admiration for our judicial system; but whenever you attempt to regulate commerce in this way through the medium of lawsuits, you have a miserable failure. If you are to submit to a court the question of what constitutes unfair competition, you have submitted the rights of the citizen to the judgment of a fellow citizen; and I shall feel just as safe in the hands of a trade commission as in the hands of a court. Aside from that, whenever you submit a regulation of commerce to the review of the courts through the tedious processes of lawsuits, through the ordinary way of taking testimony, you have destroyed the efficiency of the statute. Therefore I answer the Senator from South Dakota very frankly and plainly that I am in favor of excluding courts from the review of the discretion or judgment of a trade commission.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator one further question. Does the Senator from Iowa understand the bill to so exclude the courts from reviewing and rendering a decision on the question?

Mr. CUMMINS. In helping to prepare this legislation I tried to make it so that the courts would not have the power to review the discretion and the judgment exercised or the facts passed upon by the trade commission.

Mr. STERLING. Well, Mr. President, without agreeing with the contention of the Senator from Iowa upon that proposition I will say that, in my judgment, the bill, in the paragraph found on page 21, does exclude, by plain implication and meaning, any review upon the part of the courts.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure it was my purpose, and I think it was the purpose of the other members of the committee, to so arrange the phraseology of this section that it would accomplish that very object.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I was not here during the first part of the remarks of the Senator from Iowa with reference to the provision now being discussed. I should like to ask the Senator where would the trade commission go in order to find out what was meant by "unfair competition"? Would they go to the decisions of the courts and to the common law?

Mr. CUMMINS. Partly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, where else? To their own inner consciousness?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, sir; no more than the courts would go to their inner consciousness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What I am trying to get at is this: Is there a definite meaning to the expression "unfair competition" which has been laid down either under common-law rules or by decisions of the courts?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And that is precise, so that any man with the requisite amount of intelligence and familiarity with the decisions could determine exactly what it was?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is much more precise than the meaning of the words "restraint of trade or commerce" were.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would not depend——

Mr. CUMMINS. It is much more precise than the meaning of the words "a reasonable rate" in connection with the transportation charges of common carriers were.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course the word "unfair," in common understanding, has a pretty flexible meaning. Would the Senator understand, for example, in the case of two railroads engaged in interstate commerce, if one of the railroads misrepresented the facilities of the other and in that manner diverted trade to itself, that that would be unfair competition?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, it would be unfair.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will be very glad to answer the Senator, but I do not want to commit anybody else to my views as to the application of the proposed law to individual instances.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I may be wrong about it, and further study may convince me that the Senator from Iowa is right; but it occurs to me that we are using a term that will be very difficult of application. It seems to me that it would depend upon the point of view, and I mean by "the point of view" the personal point of view of each member of the proposed commission as to what constitutes "unfair competition."

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it would depend upon the personal point of view, although I do agree that it would be difficult to apply the standard. That is unquestionably true; that is true of every law that we pass.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes; that is true. The Senator seemed to think that I was attempting to cross-examine him. I am not. I am asking these questions in absolute good faith. I wanted to get the Senator's view with reference to the case which I presented where two railroads are competing with one another. Certainly if one railroad company misrepresents the facilities or the service which the other railroad company is furnishing, that is an unfair thing; we would all concede that. I wanted to know whether or not, in the Senator's view, that kind of a practice would be included in the term used?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then I hope the Senator will not think I am cross-examining him if I ask him why not? If it is unfair, and everybody will agree that it is unfair, why does it not come within the provisions of this proposed law?

Mr. CUMMINS. The unfairness must be tinctured with unfairness to the public; not merely with unfairness to the rival or competitor. I put now to the Senator from Utah a question. I will give him a case, one of the last cases I tried when I was at the bar. A company was manufacturing soap, and it had taken the trade name of "White Laundry" soap; it had built up a business; and the people were in the habit of calling for this commodity by the name of "White Laundry." A rival sprang up and called its soap "Crystal White Laundry Soap," and it began to occupy the territory formerly held by the first producer, and was making its way pretty rapidly when the first producer filed a bill in equity, claiming that it was unfair competition, because the people who called for the particular article in the ordinary course of trade did not discriminate between the two; that when they called for "White Laundry" and were supplied with "Crystal White Laundry" soap, they did not detect the difference; and that, therefore, the competition was unfair. The meaning of the words "unfair competition" has been laid down in cases of that kind a hundred times. That is one class of cases to which this standard would apply.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, Mr. President, I can quite well understand that everybody would agree that in the case which the Senator cites that would be unfair competition.

Mr. CUMMINS. If we can apply it only to one case, let us take that one.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But we have not confined it to one case; we have used the term broadly.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that is the only thing that "unfair competition" means, we have confined it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator says that it must involve unfairness to the public as distinguished from unfairness to a rival.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not say that is so in every instance, but that is the thought in all. We are not simply trying to protect one man against another; we are trying to protect the people of the United States, and, of course, there must be in the imposture or in the vicious practice or method something that has a tendency to affect the people of the country or be injurious to their welfare.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what the decision was in the case stated by him?

Mr. CUMMINS. The decision was an injunction restraining the second producer from using the words at all.

Mr. LIPPITT. That is, the company using the name "Crystal White Laundry?"

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask whether the "Crystal White Laundry Soap" was sold at a less price?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not remember. I can bring in a few cakes of the soap, if the Senator from Rhode Island would like to enter into the details.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should be very glad to have them, for I have no doubt it is a very good article, or the Senator would not have been engaged in the litigation.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly, my client was a very responsible litigant.

Mr. LIPPITT. But the Senator was talking about unfair competition involving an element of unfairness to the public. I was wondering, in this very case, if the party who made the "crystal white laundry" soap had sold it at a price, say, of 75 cents, while the other party sold his soap at $1, whether the public was injured.

Mr. CUMMINS. The court thought so.

Mr. LIPPITT. I wanted to get that information about it, because it seems to me that when you come to the question of what is "unfair competition" and such unfair competition must involve an element of unfairness to the public, if the competition is of such high character as to reduce the price to the public, it is going to be a very difficult question to say that it is injurious to the public. I presume that is what the Senator means by saying "unfair"; I presume he means if it is unfair to the public, it is injurious; and that because in some way it will ultimately result in higher prices to them, but if the competition results in lower prices to the public, it is fair to them?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not always.

Mr. LIPPITT. The proposition is so mixed up with that idea that I scarcely see how one can be separated from the other.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think it is mixed up with that at all. If one goes into a store and desires a certain thing and through a misrepresentation, such as I have indicated, he takes another thing he is injured, and the people generally are injured if the same thing is practiced on them, without regard to the price, without regard to the quality of the goods involved.

Mr. LIPPITT. I can see where the practice in the case the Senator cites might be very unfair competition, so far as the original owner of the brand is concerned, if this other brand induced customers to take another article when they might have taken his; but when you begin talking about whether or not it is fair or unfair to the public, if the article is equally good and sold at a lower price and by the use of it the customer is introduced, at a saving in dollars and cents, to a new article much to his advantage, it seems to me you are getting on ground where it will be very difficult for the commission to decide. I think the case the Senator has cited, if you carry it a little further than he did, is illustrative of the extraordinary difficulty cases of this kind are going to present to the commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not a bit of doubt, Mr. President, of the difficulty of the cases. We have never accomplished anything good yet without great difficulty. If those who passed the antitrust law and those who passed the interstate commerce law had been appalled because they were difficult of administration, we would have yet been without any regulation of interstate commerce.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if I understand aright, the Interstate Trade Commission is designed to be somewhat of an aid to the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not say so.

Mr. BORAH. Well, I understood a statement to that effect was made the other day.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho permit me to go on and state what I rose to state? I have not in my remarks gone over the provisions of this bill nor have I become their sponsor or their defender in all their parts.

Mr. BORAH. I simply desire to say that when this bill was brought into the Senate, the Senator from Nevada stated that he wanted speedy action. I asked the Senator from Nevada a couple of questions which I thought were pertinent, and I received no answer. I supposed that somebody connected with the bill was willing to inform the Senate in view of the fact that we are to proceed speedily to vote upon it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am willing to respond to any question with regard to the bill, but I hope that I will not be led at this time to review all its provisions.

I rose, Mr. President, to indicate that there ought not to be any vote upon this bill this afternoon. That was my only purpose. I am not the author of section 5, which has excited so much dispute in the last hour. I believe in section 5, but I do not believe it is important at all as compared with certain other sections which ought to go into the bill, conferring other powers upon the trade commission. I have been defending section 5 because I have been led into it by one inquiry after another. I was entirely sincere when I said that I would have much preferred that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] should defend and explain this section before I attempted to give my views upon it.

When I was diverted into this discussion I was just suggesting that there were certain sections reported by the subcommittee to the full committee relating to interlocking directors and to intercorporate stock holdings and to holding companies. They were afterwards segregated from the bill, for the reason, I assume, among other things, that a bill known as the Clayton bill had passed the House, had come to the Senate, and had been referred to the Judiciary Committee, and that certain sections of that bill covered interlocking directors and intercorporate stock holdings. That embarrassed us somewhat, and it was difficult to determine just what ought to be done in order that the subject might be considered in an intelligent way. The Judiciary Committee has been debating in that field for two days now; and this morning, at the suggestion of members of the Judiciary Committee, I offered the sections to which I have referred as amendments to the bill now before the Senate, and asked that they be referred to the Judiciary Committee for its consideration and report. These proposed amendments have been referred to the Judiciary Committee, and that committee will have them under consideration; and I do not want any vote taken upon this bill that will preclude amendment to the matter sought to be substituted for the House bill until the report of the Judiciary Committee comes in.

Really, that was the only purpose I had in mind when I rose. I had no thought of discussing the bill generally, except to express my general approval of it, provided we clothe the commission with sufficient power to warrant the establishment of such a tribunal.

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORATES AND INTERCORPORATE STOCKHOLDINGS.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the Senator from Iowa regarding interlocking directorates and intercorporate stockholdings, I have to say that I have known for a long time that the Senator was quite desirous of having legislation upon that subject incorporated in the trade commission bill. At one time I was disposed to consider it very favorably myself; so much so that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] were made a subcommittee to study that question, and I am sure the full committee is exceedingly indebted to these gentlemen for the thorough study which they gave the subject. I realize, however, and the committee realize, that the danger of running outside of the strict lines of a trade commission bill would be that we would perhaps arouse the opposition of those who would otherwise be the friends of the bill, and that that opposition would produce delay in the consideration of and action upon the bill. We thought it, therefore, much more logical, with a view to immediate achievement, to confine the bill simply to the organization of a trade commission.

It is true, as the Senator said, that we wandered slightly outside of the lines of a purely trade commission bill by inserting this provision with reference to unfair competition; but so far as I was concerned—and I think that was the judgment of the committee—the section itself was so unobjectionable that we felt sure it would arouse but little opposition and that it would strengthen rather than weaken the bill.

My individual opinion is that an interlocking directorate would come under this provision with reference to unfair competition if an interlocking directorate were used for the purpose of creating a community of interest between two or three or four corporations that would make them more powerful in their competition with an individual competitor; and I wished the test to be not simply the fact that there were common directors in numerous corporations, but the fact that the creation of that common directorate involved oppression to the independent concern, and thus involved unfair competition.

We all know that these so-called interlocking directorates are organized under the laws of the various States. We have very few national corporations, so we are acting, recollect, with reference to the organization and business of purely State corporations which are engaged, in greater or less degree, in interstate commerce. If the States permit common directors, I do not think the United States should interfere with that practice unless it involves a restraint of interstate commerce; and an undue restraint of competition does constitute a restraint of interstate commerce.

So I have been opposed to wholesale legislation regarding both interlocking directorates and intercorporate holdings. I think those matters may be wisely left to the legislation of the States, except where the existence of an interlocking directorate or the existence of an intercorporate holding constitutes in itself a restraint upon interstate commerce.

We all know that there is great apprehension, also, among numerous corporations throughout the country that have common directors. Those corporations may not be in competition at all, though they may be engaged in the same kind of business, or the competition may be so slight as to be absolutely inappreciable; and yet we do know that in various States and communities there are men who are regarded as commercial and business leaders whose position on the directorate of any corporation adds strength to it and gives security to the stockholders. To limit unnecessarily the utilization of the services of such men in common directorates of corporations, unless such common directorates have the effect of restraining trade, would be, in my judgment, very unwise.

Besides that, so far as I am individually concerned, I have had some regard for psychological conditions, to which the President has referred. I believe the country can get into a state of mind. I believe it has gotten into a state of mind. I believe that the economic readjustments necessarily following any change in the tariff contributed something to that state of mind. I believe the antagonism of the great banking institutions of the country in the creation of our banking law created a state of mind in many men throughout the country engaged in banking who simply followed the great leaders in New York and the other big financial centers and followed their thought without thinking for themselves. We all know that the ultimate effect of that act will be beneficial and not prejudicial; and yet the agitation regarding it has had the immediate effect of tying up the credits of the country and the transactions of the country and to that extent crippling production and trade.

I believe with reference to this trust legislation that whilst we have in view only the outlaws in business and are going to create large powers only for the purpose of paralyzing their efforts to monopolize trade, we are likely in general legislation to alarm men who are not engaged in monopolistic practices and who have no reason for apprehension, and yet who are under apprehension and who beg Congress to adjourn in order that business may have a chance. So far as I am concerned I do not want to add to this anxiety, to this state of mind, to this psychological condition which exists in a greater or less degree, and which, in my judgment, will disappear just as soon as Congress adjourns. I want to see Congress adjourn, however, as the result of honorable achievement and not simply because of fear to act upon things upon which we ought to act. I believe in acting upon those things, however, in such a just and reasonable way as to reassure the public mind and to allay apprehension.

So far as these interlocking directorates and intercorporate holdings are concerned, I believe they will come within the provisions of section 5 regarding unfair competition, and will thus accomplish the purposes which the Senator from Iowa has in view. If at any time I could feel that the addition of these sections to the bill itself could be properly guarded, so as not to alarm these common directors in small corporations throughout the country and add to this state of mind, I would acquiesce in it, provided it would speed the passage of the bill; but if it is going to enlarge the field of contention and delay the consideration of and action upon this bill I should feel that I would not be discharging a public duty by acquiescing.

LEGAL DEFINITION OF UNFAIR COMPETITION.

Now, regarding the question of unfair competition. I did not say much upon that subject in my opening remarks, simply because I did not think it required much discussion. I suppose it will be apparent to every mind that if a commission could be called upon by Congress to determine what was unjust discrimination, what was a reasonable rate, if a great public service, the Forest Service, could be called upon under a general rule of legislation to prescribe rules and regulations the violations of which would involve criminal liability, it would not be held for a moment that the declaration by Congress that unfair competition was unlawful, and the reference to a commission to determine, according to the facts and circumstances of the case, whether this provision had been violated, was a delegation of legislative power.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the courts had for years used the term "unfair competition," and had by a long line of decisions given it a legal interpretation and significance, no one would make that contention for a moment; but must there not always be a starting point, where the courts give a term a legal significance? There must be a first case in all the law that has been built up at common law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Just one moment, and then I will yield. The trade-mark was upheld at common law, and the trade name, not because statutes gave a proprietary right in it—I believe the trade-mark legislation was subsequent to these decisions—but because it is practically a violation of a property right of a man to take up and utilize a trade-mark or a trade name with which he has built up a business. It is against good morals and good conscience for his competitor to do it, and the court would intervene, either through injunction or by damages in a suit for injury. I imagine there must have been a first case there, as there must be a first case everywhere.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. These conditions of unfair competition, if the Senator will permit me to complete logically what I was going to say——

Mr. McCUMBER. I was going to ask the Senator if he would define what he understands the court to have defined unfair competition to be, not in trade-mark cases, because they are between individuals, but what does the court say unfair competition consists of?

Mr. NEWLANDS. My attention has not yet been drawn to more than one case where the court has upheld this doctrine.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Was that a trade-mark case?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; it was not. It has used the term "unfair competition" there, and I will refer to that case in a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me in order that I may make a brief statement in connection with the question that has been asked by the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The term "unfair competition" has a more or less fixed meaning in law. It is a term that is known to the law, and has been defined in part by the courts. It is defined in some of the law dictionaries as "unjust, inequitable, or dishonest competition." Those words, of course, are of generally well-understood meaning.

By reference to what is now, I believe, a pretty well-recognized standard authority on the meaning of terms, namely, "Words and Phrases," volume 8, we find that the words "unfair competition" have received definition by the courts in quite a number of cases. Like any other term, this one has not received such a definition as would include all of the practices that might come within it.

I quote from the volume just referred to:

> With respect to articles placed upon the market for sale, it is only when the one article is dressed so as to represent the other, and to deceive a proposing purchaser as being that other, that there can be said to be a case of "unfair trade." (Sterling Remedy Co. v. Eureka Chemical & Manufacturing Co. (U. S.), 80 Fed., 105, 108; 25 C. C. A., 314.)

Another case:

> The doctrine of unfair competition in trade rests on the proposition that equity will not permit anyone to palm off his goods on the public as those of another. Unfair competition in trade, as distinguished from infringement of trade-marks, does not involve the violation of any exclusive right to the use of trade-marks or symbols. The word may be purely descriptive, and the mark or symbol indicative only of style, size, shape, or quality, and as such open to the public. Yet there may be unfair competition in trade by an improper use of such mark or symbol. (Dennison Manufacturing Co. v. Thomas Manufacturing Co. (U. S.), 94 Fed., 651, 656.)

Further cases are cited in the volume that I have already designated.

> The term "unfair competition in trade" includes the simulation by defendant of the packages of plaintiff, putting up and selling packages of the same general appearance as those of the plaintiff. The court will only interfere to protect the plaintiff and the public, and for the suppression of unfair and dishonest competition, when "the resemblance is such that it is calculated to deceive, and does in fact deceive, the ordinary buyer, making his purchases under the ordinary conditions which prevail in the conduct of the particular traffic to which the controversy relates." (T. B. Dunn Co. v. Trix Manufacturing Co., 63 N. Y. Supp., 333, 335; 50 App. Div., 75.)

As I stated a moment ago, while the courts, so far as I am informed, have not gone so far as to define every case or every practice in trade which might constitute unfair competition, still the words "unfair competition" have a recognized meaning in law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. And it is better to use this term, which has come to have a more or less definite meaning in law, than to single out one or two of the large number of practices which are unfair and place an inhibition against them. The term "unfair competition" in trade will embrace every practice which may be held by a court to be unjust, inequitable, or dishonest; and when Congress legislates on this subject I can see no reason for limiting the statute to one or two practices, when there are many which are equally objectionable.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. With the permission of the Senator from Nevada——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say that I am exceedingly indebted to the Senator from Arkansas for his interruption, and I should be glad to yield to others; but I wish to conclude my remarks, which I will do in a few moments, and yield the floor.

Mr. President, the citations which the Senator from Arkansas has just given were unfamiliar to me. When he interrupted me I was about to remark that I knew of but one case where the term "unfair competition" has been used; but I was urging that there must always be a commencement for a legal term in the administration of the law, and that certainly in the evolution of the law we are not always confined to the terms that have existed in the past. The law itself at any time can create a standard and can call upon an inferior tribunal to administer it.

VARIETIES OF UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES.

I was curious to know how many unfair practices there were that were generally recognized, and I found these:

Local price cutting; that is to say, the cutting of prices by a competitor in a locality where competition existed whilst upholding prices in the field of monopoly, the cutting of prices being with a view to injuring and destroying the business of the competitor.

The operation of bogus independent concerns, where a corporation having a large business of monopolistic character, unwilling to reduce prices in order to meet the prices of a competitor, organizes an independent concern having independent administration for the purpose of entering the field of the adversary and cutting prices with a view to his destruction.

In transportation, the maintenance of "fighting ships," where a great steamship monopoly organizes fighting ships to operate against an independent concern, these fighting ships making rates below cost with a view to the destruction of the adversary.

Then, there are fighting brands used, I believe, in the tobacco business and other businesses—brands that are not generally utilized at all in general sale, but are brought into play and operation wherever a rival appears and wherever the field of monopoly is invaded.

Then there is the lease, sale, purchase, or use of certain articles as a condition of the lease, sale, purchase, or use of other required articles, making use of a patented article as a means of monopolistic control over other articles that were not patented; exclusive sale and purchase arrangements; rebates and preferential contracts; espionage and the use of detectives—a method quite frequently pursued, a method proved to have been employed in the case of the National Cash Register Co. It was proved there that they had men in the employ of their rivals, that they had every form of espionage and detection, and that they even resorted to bribery of the employees of the rival concerns.

Then come coercion, threats, and intimidation.

The peculiarity of these practices is that just as soon as one is brought under the direct condemnation of the law another is invented, so that if you should attempt by direct legislation to cover every one of these, and you should secure judgment against those practices, the very day after the judgment was rendered new practices would be invented that would not come within the wording of the law. I questioned the representative of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association who appeared before us upon this question, and let me say here that the Ohio Manufactuers' Association, the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, and the General Vehicle Association, representing an enormous capitalization, all, as I understood them, declared themselves before our committee as being in favor of a trade commission. When I addressed one of the representatives of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association——

Mr. LIPPITT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask the Senator if the trade commission that those people indorsed was not one entirely different from this, and if it did not have an entirely different purpose?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think if the Senator will look over the report of the proceedings he will find that their attention was directed to this kind of a commission, and my recollection is that it was to section 5. I do not recollect whether it had been inserted in the bill then or whether we simply had it in contemplation, but I questioned the representative of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association and the Illinois Association with reference to unfair competition, if they would object to such a provision, and the answer came from one of them that it was better to cover all unfair practices by a general phrase, for he said if there are 20 to-day and all are condemned expressly by law, another will be invented to-morrow. Our object is simply to maintain by law good morals in business as in other matters.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I must decline to yield for the moment.

Mr. LIPPITT. I had not finished my question, but, of course, if the Senator prefers not to yield——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am going to close in a moment, and then I will be glad to answer any questions.

COMMISSION TO HAVE LARGE DISCRETION.

Mr. President, there is no reason why there should not be good morals in business as there is in any matter. You can not take a body of five men, intelligent men, composed as this body will be of lawyers, economists, publicists, and men experienced in industry, who will not be able to determine justly whether the practice is contrary to good morals or not.

Mr. President, the objection was made that this commission may arbitrarily determine. I do not know how a man can determine anything without perhaps arbitrarily determining it. That objection does not have, in my judgment, very much strength unless the idea is conveyed by an arbitrary determination that the tribunal determines without listening, without a hearing. The bill provides for a hearing. It opens up every avenue of information, investigation, and inquiry, and calls upon this commission to determine only after hearing both sides. Then the matter goes to the court, and the court is to determine whether the commission has acted within its authority and has also acted in obedience to the Constitution. If its action involves the confiscation of property, if its action involves something not within the authority conferred, the court can act, but within the authority granted, the action of the commission is, and ought to be, final and conclusive.

I would rather have the opinion of such a commission upon a question of good morals in business than to have the opinion of the court upon such a question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I had supposed after several years of very earnest study on the part of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] that he would not only be capable, but would also be very anxious and willing and, in fact, would court the opportunity to make his pet measure just as clear as possible to the Senate. I confess I was a little surprised to find that the Senator rather sought to avoid or did not wish to be troubled by answering the numerous questions by those who do not see clearly what is intended by the words "unfair competition," which he has used in the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would be glad to answer any question the Senator chooses to put to me, but I rose to address the Senate on the subject brought up by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and I wished to conduct my remarks in an orderly way. I may say here that, individually, I for a long time have regarded the practice in the Senate of carrying on a conversational debate as one tending to a tremendous prolongation of discussion. But I certainly would not expect to institute a reform in this particular bill which I am presenting here, and I will be very glad to answer any question the Senator may choose to ask me.

Mr. McCUMBER. Section 5 reads:

> That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful.
> The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.
> Whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that any corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce, it shall issue and serve upon such corporation a written order—

To cease such methods.

This is certainly a very important step and a very advanced step toward the field of paternalism in putting every business under the strict supervision of the Government. When we take a step of that character we ought to understand just where we are going and exactly what the step means to us.

I confess I can not agree with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] that the term here used would be applicable only to those cases in which the public itself might be interested. If I understand the clear provision in this case, it is a question as between corporations or between manufacturers or between commercial bodies, because it speaks of unfair competition between those bodies or those persons.

We understand, of course, that anything that is not fair must be unfair, and everything that is not honest, that is not straightforward, that is not sincere in trade must necessarily be unfair.

What I wish to arrive at is whether you contemplate that the Government of the United States is to go into the business of controlling the commercial morals of every individual in the country and enforce a standard, and if it is to enforce a standard what that standard is to be. The case cited by the Senator from Iowa is simply a case as between two corporations, one selling soap and the other selling soap. The court did not inquire whether the public was benefited by one or the other. It simply inquired into the question as to whether the competitor was injured. It did not consider the public interest at all, but inquired whether there was any character of deception imposed upon the other manufacturer.

Now, is that to be applied in the cases under this "unfair competition" provision in the bill? We can only understand a matter of this kind by considering it in the light of a concrete case. I may have before me, for instance, an advertisement concerning automobile tires. That is a business which has grown wonderfully in the last 20 years, and there is considerable competition in order to obtain business. Here is a manufacturer, in one column he gives the price of his tires of a certain size; he gives the standard prices of other manufacturers of tires of the same size; then he has a column showing that his particular tire is sold in the market 30 per cent cheaper than the other; then this manufacturer follows that up with a declaration that his particular kind of tire is the very best known, and that his tire is equivalent to the best tire manufactured in the country.

Now, suppose one of the other companies appear before this commission and make the declaration that the competitor who is selling his tires 20 or 30 per cent cheaper is guilty of unfair competition, and they set out the fact that the tire is not up to their standard of manufacture, will this commission have to go into that question, and will it decide that question and call the other manufacturer before it and try out the case? If that is true, then every manufacturer of cotton or silk or woolen cloth who claims that his fabric is as good as the best can also go before the same commission. It seems to me, after reading the provision, that it is absolutely without limit; that there is no standard to go by except the standard which may be in the mind of the individual

I am sure that I agree with the Senator; I would like to see all business carried on honestly and fairly and eliminate all deceptions in every kind of trade; but I want to know whether that is really to be accomplished in this bill and whether it is to be made a governmental function to enforce upon every individual doing business in the country a code of morality concerning his commercial transactions.

Now, let me ask the Senator a concrete question upon the supposition which I have made. Under this bill would the commission be compelled to try the case as between these two tire manufacturers?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of course, it is possible in criticizing this bill to state extreme cases that apparently reduce the bill to an absurdity, though I am not inclined to admit that the case to which the Senator has referred would have that effect. I presume that this tribunal will act as the courts do according to the legal maxim de minimis lex non curat. I imagine that a tribunal of this kind will not concern itself about trifling affairs. A complaint may be presented to it and the whole matter be conducted by correspondence. The attention of the recalcitrant party, or the alleged recalcitrant party, may be called to the alleged practice and the whole matter disappear by correspondence. But I assume that whenever the commission feels that the matter is of sufficient importance, both between the parties and with reference to the public interest, to call the parties before them and have a hearing it will be done.

Now, recollect, that in all the cases that I have referred to as involving unfair practice there would be a remedy to the individual, either at law or in equity. The difficulty that we find, however, is that owing to the growth of these enormous corporations, which no one wishes to destroy—I am not speaking of monopolistic combinations, I refer to large aggregations of wealth in corporate form—it is very hard for the individual to maintain his ground. If you say to him, "Well, you have a right at law or a right in equity which will be enforced," it means very little to him, because it means the employment of a lawyer against lawyers of great skill and repute. It means the collection of evidence. It means a large expenditure.

Now, the society has an interest in these questions. It not only has the interest of protecting an individual against oppression and wrong, but it also has the general interest in the maintenance of good morals. So we concluded when we passed the interstate-commerce act to relieve every shipper of the responsibility and the burdens of individual litigation with a great railroad, because we knew that the mere possession of an abstract right at law meant nothing to him. We placed society between him and the corporation with which he dealt, and we organized a tribunal conducted at the expense of society with a view to seeing that injustice to the individual was not accomplished.

We are simply carrying out that rule now with reference to trade. Either you have to break up these great combinations of capital, perhaps forbid the organization of corporations at all, or you must adopt some social machinery which will protect the individual from oppression and wrong. This tribunal is simply for the purpose of economically giving to each individual, at the lowest cost of effort and money, the power of asserting his right which exists in law or in equity.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I asked a question of the Senator. It may be that I am a little dull, but I must admit that I do not know yet whether the Senator holds that in the case I have mentioned the parties in dispute over auto tires could go before the commission and have their cases adjudicated if this bill becomes a law.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Anyone who felt himself injured by such a condition as the Senator refers to could, of course, apply to this commission. It would then be in its discretion as to whether it would grant a hearing. I would not expect it to take hold of every trivial matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. Would the Senator regard a matter of this kind as trivial?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If it is not trivial in its significance, and could be corrected by correspondence, I would expect that to be done. When I say "trivial" I do not mean in the amount involved but I mean trivial in the sense that it is so near the dividing line between good and bad morals that people would differ with reference to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there were 400,000 autos manufactured in the United States this year, without taking into consideration the number that have been manufactured in the last 10 years, a portion of which are still running. Each of those autos will, on the average, take three sets of tires a year, so the Senator can understand that the bill is somewhat important in such a case as I put.

I was looking a very short time ago at an advertisement which compared a certain manufacture with that of the United States, taking, for instance, 4½ by 36, price $52—and here is something else to be purchased of exactly the same make at $36—and it declares that its manufacture is equivalent to the very best United States tires. This advertisement goes out to the purchasers, and, of course, if the tire is just as good, the other manufacturer must be imposing upon people to the extent of hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of dollars yearly. It can not be a trivial case. A difference of some $15 or $20 per tire is not a trivial matter when you consider the enormous quantity that are sold in the United States.

Therefore in the case that I have given I selected one that I thought would be very important on account of the enormous sums that are expended by the American people in that line alone. If the commission would take cognizance of that matter, they must also consider any other matters that are brought before them to determine whether or not a competitor in any line of trade is honest and fair and sincere in his advertising, in his declarations and statements, and that would involve an investigation into the merits wherever a complaint was lodged.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Did the Senator understand me to assert that the case to which he referred was trivial? I did not so state. I made a generalization.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question before he takes his seat. I may have misunderstood the Senator, but I gathered from what he said that no business concern of the country will be affected by the provisions of the bill unless there is complaint of unfair competition between the one or the other of the parties undertaking a prosecution. Did I understand that to be the Senator's position?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not know whether I said that. I think the Senator states the fact as to section 5; that is, if I understand his statement properly.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF ANNUAL REPORTS.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I should like to ask the Senator what this provision means. The bill first provides for a commission of five members, to be appointed by the President, and then in section 3 the bill provides that the commission shall have certain powers, and, among other powers, I notice in subsection (c) the following:

(c) To prescribe as near as may be a uniform system of annual reports from such corporations or classes of corporations subject to the provisions of this act as the commission may designate, and to fix the time for the filing of such reports, and to require such reports, or any special report, to be made under oath, or otherwise, in the discretion of the commission.

From the reading of that power imposed upon the commission it seems to me that the commission will have to prescribe a uniform system of annual reports—from whom; from what business?—and to inquire whether it is unfair competition or not. The bill provides that it shall be "from such corporations or classes of corporations subject to the provisions of this act."

Mr. President, evidently it means that there are whole classes of business in this country directly competing unfairly with each other, and whole classes of corporations in this country that shall be required to make annual reports to this commission.

It seems to me that that is a pretty broad provision, and I wish to know what the Senator really understands that provision to mean. If it means that the requirement of annual reports shall be made under the powers given the commission, for instance, what class of corporations in this country would be compelled to make those reports annually?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it is very clear as to corporations that only those corporations are to make reports which the commission designates. The commission could designate one; it could designate a hundred; it could designate a thousand. I presume the commission would exercise that power with reference to some corporation that was under suspicion.

Mr. SMOOT. It says here:

(c) To prescribe as near as may be a uniform system of annual reports from such corporations or classes of corporations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; I was going to refer to that. At first the question was considered as to whether it might be well to call upon all corporations subject to this act to make reports, just as all the railroad companies of the country are compelled to do; but the committee was of the opinion that such a system would be bulky, that it would be unwieldy, would be troublesome to a great many corporations that were conducting their business fairly with regard to the law; and so they determined that those corporations which the commission designated should make annual reports or special reports.

It was the assumption that the commission would have discretion, just as the Bureau of Corporations has. The Bureau of Corporations has had large powers, and yet I know of no case where it has been alleged that they have been used oppressively or to the inconvenience of business men generally. Enormous powers are given to the Internal-Revenue Bureau as to the income tax, and so forth. All those powers can be, of course, exercised in a most unreasonable and oppressive way, but it is our experience that they are not.

Mr. SMOOT. That only applies to corporations that are actually under investigation, but this goes further than that, and it says, "Such corporations or classes of corporations."

Mr. NEWLANDS. I admit that there is little more difficulty with reference to classes of corporations. I am not prepared to say how these corporations shall be classified. I assume that if they can not be classified the commission will not classify them; but there may be a case where it is important, with a view to securing information as is required under this act and with a view to controlling and covering an entire industrial situation, to call upon certain classes of corporations for their reports for a considerable time. I can understand, for instance, how it might be necessary to require corporations against which a decree of dissolution had been ordered to require that they should make reports, either annual or special, for a considerable time so as to keep them under the observation of the law and to make the decree itself effective.

I assume that the power will not be exercised unless there is necessity for it.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice also another peculiarity in the wording of this subsection.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment. The Senator will notice it says "to prescribe as near as may be a uniform system."

The Senator does not believe that a uniform system of annual reports from all kinds of corporations and all classes of corporations and all varieties of business can be made? It seems to me that it would be impossible to have a uniform annual report from all the different organizations and business concerns of the country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I wish to say that the committee realized the difficulty which the Senator has suggested. For that reason we did not feel that there could be one uniform blank applied to all corporations. There were other matters which were under consideration. Suggestions were made that we should only apply the provisions of the bill to corporations of a given capital stock or of given gross earnings. That suggestion was met by the further thought that many corporations which perhaps might be subject to criticism would be among those of a smaller capitalization.

We also realized that it would be next to impossible to require reports from all corporations in the country, and that it was necessary to have this commission clothed with powers which would enable it to get information from corporations which were under suspicion or ought to be investigated. It might be, for instance, that corporations which were engaged in manufacturing a given line, as, for example, harvesting machinery, ought to be inquired into, because there might come to the commission's knowledge such a state of facts that it would necessitate immediate investigation along a particular line. For that reason it was thought best to provide that the commission might classify corporations, and say that all engaged in the manufacture of harvesting machinery should be required to make reports; and as to them a substantially uniform kind of report could be required; that a report which might be required of a harvesting machine company would not be applicable to a manufacturer of cereal products, or of iron products, or of chemical products, or something of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. But that is what the provision specifically states.

Mr. POMERENE. No; I think not.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I am objecting to.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator from Utah misconstrues it.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not read it in any other way. This section says so specifically. I can not see how the Senator can construe the language in any other way than that the commission under that power is—to prescribe as near as may be a uniform system of annual reports from such corporations or classes of corporations subject to the provisions of this act.

That is not modified in any way. It does not classify such corporations by saying that one class of corporations shall make one uniform report and that another class of corporations shall make another uniform report.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will permit me, I will say I think he has not read the entire paragraph. It says:

Corporations or classes of corporations * * * as the commission may designate.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; I understand.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, then, what is wrong in having this commission designate, for instance, the manufacturers of harvesting machinery, and say that class shall make a report of a given kind; that manufacturers of jewelry shall make reports of a given kind, and so forth?

Mr. SMOOT. That would be perfectly true if the commission only designated one class of business, but under this same provision they have the power to designate 50 classes of business.

Mr. POMERENE. They may do so; that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. And under the provision all 50 of those must have a uniform system of annual reports.

Mr. POMERENE. Now, if the Senator will pardon me again, he does not have in mind the complete language of the section, which says:

As near as may be a uniform system.

Of course if one line of business is entirely different from another line of business and the kind of information which the commission would require was different in the one line of business from what it was in the other line of business, clearly, it seems to me, under a fair construction of this language, they can determine that there shall be a blank of a given kind in the one line of manufacture and a blank of another kind for another line of manufacture.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the very argument of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and also that of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] proves beyond question, to my mind, that there are words in this provision which should not be there. To make it perfectly clear and to follow out the practice of the Bureau of Corporations as it exists to-day and as referred to by the Senator from Nevada the provision should read in this way, and I believe it would meet every case that could possibly be thought of by the trade commission:

To prescribe as nearly as possible a system of annual reports from such corporations subject to the provisions of this act as the commission may designate.

Then, of course, it would mean that the commission would begin an investigation; that the commission would call for the annual reports of that particular business which they had under investigation or as to which they anticipated making an investigation. There would be no question, then, as to just exactly what was meant.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator from Utah will put his amendment in form, it will be brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah before he takes his seat whether the provisions of subsection (b) of section 3 are not sufficiently extensive to produce the results that are sought to be obtained or intended to be secured by subsection (c)?

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me that the provisions of subsection (b) are even broader than those of subsection (c); and that was one point that I was subsequently going to take up with the Senator and ask him to explain the difference between the two.

Mr. THOMAS. Perhaps I have anticipated.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if I might intrude just at this point, I wish to say that I was rather surprised to hear the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], in referring to subsection (c), say that that was intended simply to apply to corporations under suspicion or under investigation. I think just the opposite is the case. I think the whole intent of subsection (c) was to provide a uniform system of annual reports from all corporations that were subject to the provisions of this act, and the only explanation of the language that is used there must be that it is in contemplation that all the corporations that are subject to this commission shall annually make certain reports of their business, such reports as the commission may designate; that those corporations may, for the purpose of convenience, be divided into classes, and that there may be a different report for each class that may fit the particular requirements of that particular class; but there is no possible use, there is no possible meaning to subsection (c) in reference to the other parts of the bill, unless the purpose of that is to have all corporations file certain reports. In all the discussions of the committee, as I remember them, that is what was then had in view.

In addition to that the commission is also empowered to ask for certain special reports under certain special circumstances. The distinguished Senator from Nevada will well remember that one of the witnesses before the committee, in discussing this subsection (c) and in considering the effect of it, took up the question of the expense of providing these reports; he went into it very elaborately, and, assuming that there were 350,000 corporations subject to the authority of the commission, assuming that perhaps 150,000 of them were of comparative insignificance, there were at least 200,000 corporations of consequence subject to the commission that would be obliged to make these annual reports. According to his estimate it would cost those business corporations $20,000,000 a year to make those annual reports.

That is all in the testimony. I do not remember that when that testimony was given or when that statement was made there was any idea in the mind of any member of the committee except that subsection (c) provided that every corporation should in some way, by the means of this commission and through the authority of subsection (c), be compelled to through the authority of subsection (c), be compelled to reveal to the public certain general items in regard to their affairs.

Then in other parts of the bill the commission is authorized to ask for all sorts of special reports from corporations under suspicion, and so forth—correspondence and various other matters. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada if he did not speak a little unadvisedly perhaps when he assumed that subsection (c) was meant to apply only to a corporation under suspicion?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, my impression is that I did not use that language. My impression is that the language I used——

Mr. LIPPITT. I understood the Senator to use that language, and I think the Senator from Utah so understood him.

Mr. NEWLANDS. My impression is that I used that case as an illustration of what might be done under this bill; that the commission could call upon corporations under suspicion to make special reports.

Mr. LIPPITT. Certainly the gist of the Senator's remarks was that the commission was not going to exercise all of its powers; that it only possessed those powers, but it was not expected that it would exercise them except in special cases. Still, if the Senator agrees with my interpretation of it, there is nothing more to be said.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] wished me to give an illustration of cases in which classes of corporations would be called upon for reports, and I instanced that as a case. I told him that I could not at the time think of others, though perhaps I mentioned another class. I do not recall. I will say, however, that a class has come to my consideration since I yielded the floor, and that is of corporations that are engaged in the export trade. I could understand very readily how the commission might deem it wise to call upon corporations engaged in the export trade to make either annual or special reports with a view to discharging their duty. Under this section of the bill, subsection (h), it is provided:

(h) The commission is hereby directed to investigate, as expeditiously as may be, trade conditions in foreign countries where associations, combinations, or practices of buyers, dealers, or traders may injuriously affect the export trade of the United States, and also to investigate whether American exporters have combined with each other or with foreign producers or dealers to control prices abroad, and to report to Congress thereon from time to time.

I can understand how it might call upon that class of corporations. I can not, however, understand how there can be any very general exercise of these powers that would apply to every corporation that is engaged in the export trade. As a matter of practical judgment I have been unable to think of such a necessity, though some such necessity might arise in a limited way. Of course, one of the witnesses before the committee conjured up all kinds of cases in which corporations could be called upon for both annual and special reports, and he figured that these reports might be of such a general and comprehensive as well as specific character as to require the services of a lawyer, the services of an accountant, and so forth; and he figured that there was a very large expense to each corporation. He multiplied it, I think, by one hundred and fifty or two hundred thousand, which made it a very large sum; but, of course, it was a fanciful statement which did not impress the committee, and I am sure did not impress the good judgment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, on the contrary, if the Senator will allow me to say so, it impressed my judgment so much that I think his figures are too small. I have no doubt that it will cost the corporations of this country that amount, and I have contemplated as a very important addition that ought to be made to this bill that in the case of every investigation made by this commission they ought to be instructed to ascertain the cost of the investigation to the party investigated and make that cost a part of their report, so that it might be known. I think to-day that the Interstate Commerce Commission in relation to railroads ought in some way to let us know what it cost the railroads to respond to the demands that they have made upon them.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean the cost to the company or the cost to the commission?

Mr. LIPPITT. The cost to the company. I think that the cost to the people investigated is of the most serious consequence. An instance was called to my mind only a few days ago of two or three corporations in one of the Western States that were accused of having violated in some way the anti-trust law. A suit was brought against them, and they were found not guilty; they were found not to have violated any law. Nevertheless, not counting the interruption to their business which occurred in consequence of that suit, the direct cost to those corporations was $40,000. They were penalized $40,000; which is a very considerable sum for having committed no guilty act, for they were declared absolutely innocent. I am sure that in the case of the railroads to-day, if we knew the figures, if we could get at the cost involved in responding to the demands of the Interstate Commerce Commission, we should have some very valuable information in arriving at an estimate of its value to the public.

I think if we are going to create a commission of this kind we ought to put ourselves in such a position that we will be in possession of the facts about its operations, the benefit it produces, and the injury it may commit, for ultimately, it is not necessary to argue, the community will have to pay every single dollar of cost that the business of the country is put to by the establishment of a commission of this kind. I think it is one of the elements that ought to make us hesitate a long time before we rush blindly into the establishment of such an agency of the Government as this, the ultimate limit of the expenditures of which it is absolutely impossible for any man to foresee.

So that when the Senator from Nevada says that I was not impressed with the statement of that witness that the cost to the business of this country—and that means to the people of the country—would be $20,000,000, I want to say to him that there was no piece of evidence that was given by any witness before the committee that impressed me so much. I have thought of it over and over again, and the more I have thought of it and the more I have considered it with reference to specific instances that have come to my knowledge from time to time as the result of these investigations the more I believe that it is a very moderate figure indeed.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has finished, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada for his views on another question which occurred to me in connection with section 5, particularly in regard to the penalty that is provided in that section for unfair competition. It has occurred to me on reading it over that section 5 is simply a section to give immunity for acts of unfair competition, that the whole effect is to enable acts of unfair competition to be committed practically without penalty and for an indefinite time.

The course of procedure provided for there is that where unfair competition is suspected, it is to be investigated by the commission. If the parties are found guilty, they are to be ordered to stop, and if they fail to stop, the matter is to be brought to the attention of a court, and the court is to issue an injunction. So that the only time at which they would be obliged to cease unfair competition would be after a court had issued an injunction; and unless they should violate the injunction and should therefore be guilty of contempt of court, I can not see that there is provided any punishment or any penalty of any kind for unfair competition.

Acts of unfair competition of various sorts and of a very complicated nature have been enumerated here to-day, any one of which brought before this commission would mean an investigation that might reasonably take six months to complete. Such acts of unfair competition may be committed by something like 350,000 different corporations. It is perfectly evident that the commission would be overrun with complaints of that kind; it is perfectly apparent that it would be utterly beyond their power to attempt to decide more than a very small proportion of the complaints of acts of unfair competition that might be brought to their attention, and the only penalty provided is that after a court has issued an injunction and the practices are continued the offender might be guilty of contempt of court.

I am not a lawyer, and I am making these suggestions largely to secure information, because this feature of the section has struck me as I have gone over it; but it seems to me that section 5 takes the place of any provision there may be in the present law regarding unfair competition; it is the last word of legislation on that subject; it shows how unfair competition is to be treated in the future. What would happen practically if that section should be enacted into law would simply be that parties engaging in acts of unfair competition would be perfectly free to go on indefinitely until such time as some court may issue an injunction, and then they would have to stop. As the Senator himself has well said, there are innumerable forms and different devices for practicing the same unfair competition. A corporation which may perhaps be found guilty of some particular form of unfair competition could immediately engage in some similar form of unfair competition, and then that case would have to take its turn on the calendar, and perhaps not be decided for years following. I do not know whether I am right in this interpretation of the section, but I should be glad to hear the chairman's views in regard to it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will state that there is no other penalty in this act with reference to unfair competition than the one which the Senator suggests, and that is, if the order of the court is disobeyed, the court will then deal with the offender; but proceedings under this act will not, of course, interfere with the private right of any man who is injured by a competitor by practices such as have been referred to to bring a suit either at law or in equity for the enforcement of his rights. This bill itself constitutes the extent to which society itself, in its collective capacity, will move in the direction of protecting a man against unfair competition.

Now, I will state that throughout this bill, so far as I am individually concerned, I have not been disposed to suggest extreme penalties. I thought it only fair that, inasmuch as this was a new provision of law, to be tested through this tribunal, the parties brought before it, at all events in the earlier stages, should have the opportunity, without facing the penitentiary, to assert their rights, or what they claim to be their rights, either before the commission or before the courts, and that the penalty should be imposed only in case of disobedience to the order of the courts. Of course we could have put a provision in the bill that after an order was made by the commission every day's failure to comply with it would involve a fine of a thousand dollars a day or a hundred dollars a day, or whatever else we might make it, or perhaps imprisonment.

Mr. LIPPITT. I only wanted to see whether the Senator and I understood the section alike. I think we do. From what the Senator says, I infer that my interpretation of it is substantially in accordance with his.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I want to ask the Senator from Nevada whether the committee has considered the constitutionality of the following provision of section 5:

> SEC. 5. That unfair competition is hereby declared unlawful.
> The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Observe there is not a single line in the bill defining what, as a matter of law, constitutes unfair competition. By the language of the bill just quoted, there is conferred upon a board of five men the power to determine, in accordance with their own standards and their own lights, their own opinions, what is fair and what is unfair competition.

Does the Senator think that such arbitrary, all-embracing power can be conferred upon a mere board of men without violating the provisions of the Constitution, which insure to every citizen the equal protection of the law, the right to own property and to not be deprived thereof except by due process of law, the right to be governed by the rules of law and not by the decree or mandate or caprice of a man or set of men, and which guarantee to every man the right to conduct his business himself under the rules of law and not under the decrees of individuals or boards? Has the Senator's committee considered these questions?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the Senator from Missouri that he probably has not been in the Chamber——

Mr. REED. I have been serving on a committee, and have not heard the speech of the Senator.

Mr. NEWLANDS. This matter has come up for discussion during the afternoon in the Senator's absence, and it has been pretty thoroughly gone over by a number of Senators. Briefly speaking, the only contention which can be made regarding the constitutionality of section 5 is that it is a delegation of legislative power; that Congress, instead of defining explicitly the offense that is unlawful, has left it to a commission to determine what acts come within the general phrase, and has thereby turned over to it one of its own powers of legislation.

Mr. KERN. The same as in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes. Now, with reference to that, we have to say that it is impossible, of course, to define in the law every phase of what is termed "unfair competition." If we should in the law attempt to do so, practices covered by the definition might be discontinued to-morrow and other practices equally effective substituted in their place. It was therefore necessary to put in some general phrase that would cover the practices which in common parlance are covered by the term "unfair competition," an enumeration of the practices of which I gave.

The first question was whether "unfair competition" had a legal significance. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] read citations from a number of authorities showing that that term had a legal significance. Of course, the term has probably been used more in America in the past 10 or 15 years of trust organization than during any other period, and it is now receiving, not only in the courts, but generally among economists, a fixed significance. I read from one decision in South Dakota, where the courts condemned a certain practice as constituting unfair competition.

The committee is of the opinion that this term is capable of interpretation by a commission just as thoroughly as the term "reasonable rate" by the Interstate Commerce Commission or the term "unjust discrimination" by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Senator will, of course, understand that the power to regulate commerce is a legislative power vested in Congress. Congress could not take hold of all the various phases of commerce, and therefore it created the Interstate Commerce Commission, an administrative tribunal, as its servant to carry out that power under a rule fixed by it, and that rule was that it should fix reasonable rates and prevent unjust discrimination.

It is true, perhaps, that those words, "reasonable rates" and "unjust discrimination," have been used through the authorities for centuries, possibly, and had a fixed significance, which, perhaps, the term "unfair competition" has not yet gained. I mean to say, the term "unfair competition" has not been used so frequently as conveying an idea as these other terms, but there must always be a time when the use of a phrase shall commence as indicating at law a certain thing.

Now, then, the question is what unfair competition covers. It covers every practice and method between competitors upon the part of one against the other that is against public morals, in my judgment, or is an offense for which a remedy lies either at law or in equity.

Mr. REED. These things, however, are not embraced within the terms of the bill under consideration.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I gave an enumeration, which I will repeat briefly, of some of the practices which constitute unfair competition. You will find them treated under that head in the works of economists upon this new phase of industrial organization.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator now going to quote from the opinions of economists or from the law?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; I am not going to quote at all. I am simply going to refer to practices as I have already given them.

Mr. REED. Pardon me, I just want to get this clear. The Senator said that these practices were referred to in the works of economists as unfair. I wanted to know if they were specified and defined in the decisions of the courts as unfair and illegal or if they are simply commented upon in the works of economists.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; while I can not speak with definiteness, you will find the words "unfair" and "oppressive" used in the decisions of the courts in reference to certain practices.

Mr. REED. Oh, yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Such expressions are used with reference to local price cutting, with reference to the operation of bogus independent concerns that are intended to help out a monopoly in competition with its antagonist, the maintenance of "fighting ships," rebates, preferential contracts, espionage, and the use of detectives, coercion, threats, intimidation, and the bribery of employees. I imagine that possibly there would be remedies for all those things either at law or in equity; but society, as I remarked a few moments ago, is taking hold of this thing and doing away with the necessity of the individual dealing with a great organization and resorting at great expense to the courts. This tribunal, composed of economists and lawyers and men experienced in industry, is called upon to apply this standard of the law, namely, that unfair competition is illegal to the varying facts, situations, and conditions affecting interstate trade.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss this legal question to-night. I want to make just one or two statements.

In the first place, I think there are many good things in this bill. In so far as the bill undertakes to create a board which shall ascertain facts, make investigations, and report the facts thus found to the proper tribunal or to the public, the objects of the bill are wholesome. The bill is, in the main, soundly constructed. I do not say that without qualification, although at the moment nothing occurs to my mind that can be regarded as a substantial criticism of the chief phases of the bill.

There are, however, two propositions embraced within this bill which, to my mind, can not be accepted without great danger to the public and without jeopardizing the entire bill.

In the first place, I would regard it as of great danger to the public if we were to enact any statute having for its purpose the creation of a commission to act as a buffer between trusts, pools, and combinations and the strong arm of the courts. If there is a crying necessity in this country to-day, it is that the administration of justice shall be more speedy. Surely nothing in the nature of additional impediments should be desired.

If, then, it is any part of the purpose of this bill to create a tribunal which is to hold a sort of preliminary examination and to determine whether it thinks a law has been violated, and that examination must be had as a condition precedent to the enforcement of the provisions of the antitrust statutes, I have this to say, that such a law is the kind of law, such a scheme as that is the kind of scheme, which would naturally be concocted and recommended by those engaged in combinations in restraint of trade. Naturally trust magnates will acclaim a law of that kind, because they will thereby gain delay; they will thus secure two trials where they now have one; they will gain the opportunity to throw numerous legal obstructions in the way of the officer of the law who undertakes a prosecution, civil or criminal, under the antitrust statutes.

The scheme I am discussing was advanced a few years ago upon the theory that it was a very bad and wicked thing to take a lot of poor, innocent, and unsuspecting gentlemen who had created a trust and did not know they had created a trust, who had engaged in a conspiracy unwittingly and unintentionally, who were restraining trade without being aware of the fact that they were restraining trade, and suddenly confront them with the statute and with an indictment or a petition in equity. It was claimed that there was a twilight zone, and that those who groped within that shadow land ought to have a kindly hand to guide them out of it and into the realm of honesty and fair dealing and legality.

Mr. President, I have never had any patience with that claim. If one dollar had been expended for the purpose of keeping clear of any trenchment upon the antitrust laws of this country where ten thousand dollars have been expended to devise plans to violate their spirit and yet escape their letter, not a single man would ever have unintentionally violated the trust laws.

I am not in favor of any law that creates a buffer between the courts and the criminal who has violated the laws of his land.

I have been serving upon the Judiciary Committee most of the afternoon and have missed the debate. Possibly what I am about to suggest has already been brought forward. I shall this evening content myself with a mere statement of my second objection, which is that this bill in plain terms undertakes to confer upon five men a power that is more arbitrary than that possessed by any king or potentate of earth. It is a power not to govern according to the common law, not to govern according to the acts of Congress or the Constitution, but to govern according to their own will and pleasure.

The Federal Government has the power to declare what is unfair trade so far as interstate commerce is concerned, to lay down rules of conduct, to denounce certain acts as unfair, and to fix the penalty for the violation of its laws; but all this can only be accomplished by the acts of Congress. A law of the land is required. The people must, through their representatives in the Congress, lay down the law which defines what is legal and what is illegal. Having enacted such a law, Congress may then take a further step and provide for the tribunals to enforce that law. But Congress can not create a tribunal and authorize it to create laws. Congress can not create a board and empower it to govern by its own reason, to rule by its own discretion, to do that which to it seems proper, and penalize the citizen for refusing to render obedience. Accordingly, we may provide what is unfair trade and we may confer upon a board certain powers with reference to the enforcement of that law; but even then we can not confer upon any board such rights as will deny to the citizen a full and fair trial upon the fact in court as to whether he has violated the law.

Why, Mr. President, think of saying in this land of the free—and there is still a presumption that it is a land of the free—that five men can sit down in a room and say: "We think, Mr. Jones, that what you are doing with your property is not fair. We have no rule to guide us. We have no law to blaze the way. Nobody has told us what is unfair. Congress has enacted no statute; the courts have registered no precedents; but we do not think your method of doing business is fair; anyhow it does not meet with our approval, and therefore you shall not do it." Will anyone pretend that such a decree is due process of law? Will anyone claim that the man against whom such an arbitrary decree has been leveled has been accorded the equal protection of the law? The old Constitution still exists, and while it lives you can not lay your hands on a penny's worth of a man's property except pursuant to a law, nor even then until he has had his day in court.

Mr. President, this is a most astounding proposition. You might just as well pass a statute providing: The President of the United States is hereafter authorized to do whatsoever shall to him seem best and proper with reference to the goods, wares, and chattels of the people of the United States, and having determined what is best and proper the people shall obey, and if they do not obey the courts of the land shall enforce the decree of the President by mandatory injunctions or by levying a fine upon recalcitrant citizens.

What would be left of constitutional liberty? What would be left of the law of the land? What difference would there be between this country, under those circumstances, and France under Louis XIV?

But you exclaim it is a commission that is to exercise these beneficent prerogatives. The word "commission" has become a holy term upon the lips of the reformer. "Commission!" Ah, here we have the magic word which opens all doors, sets aside all constitutions, annihilates all laws, unlocks all riddles. It is the star that is to lead us from the labyrinth of constitutional difficulties into those sunlit fields where the Constitution ceases from troubling and government by law is laid quietly to rest.

But, sir, you can no more confer arbitrary power upon a commission than you can upon the President of the United States, or upon a constable in Jones Township, in Hickory County, in the State of Nowhere.

Why, Mr. President, things of this kind, not half so radical, have been attempted, and they have been stricken down with absolute universality. I call attention to just one instance, the case of Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. against McChord, decided by Judge Evans, of the United States court of Kentucky. (103 Fed. Rep., 216.)

The action was brought to enjoin a State board of railroad commissioners from even making a preliminary order under the following statute of Kentucky:

An act to prevent railroad companies or corporations owning and operating a line or lines of railroad, and its officers, agents, and employees, from charging, collecting, or receiving extortionate freight or passenger rates in this Commonwealth, and to further increase and define the duties and powers of the railroad commission in reference thereto, and prescribing the manner of enforcing the provisions of this act and penalties for the violation of its provisions.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

SECTION 1. When complaint shall be made to the railroad commission, accusing any railroad company or corporation of charging, collecting, or receiving extortionate freight or passenger rates over its line or lines of railroad in this Commonwealth, or when said commission shall receive information or have reason to believe that such rate or rates are being charged, collected, or received, it shall be the duty of said commission to hear and determine the matter as speedily as possible. They shall give the company or corporation complained of not less than 10 days' notice, by letter mailed to an officer or employee of said company or corporation, stating the time and place of the hearing of same; also the nature of the complaint or matter to be investigated, and shall hear such statements, arguments, or evidence offered by the parties as the commission may deem relevant; and should the commission determine that the company or corporation is, or has been, guilty of extortion, said commission shall make and fix a just and reasonable rate, toll, or compensation which said railroad company or corporation may charge, collect, or receive for like services thereafter rendered. The rate, tolls, or compensation so fixed by the commission shall be entered and be an order on the record book of their office and signed by the commission, and a copy thereof mailed to an officer, agent, or employee of the railroad company or corporation affected thereby, and shall be in full force and effect at the expiration of 10 days thereafter, and may be revoked or modified by an order likewise entered of record. And should said railroad company or corporation, or any officer, agent, or employee thereof, charge, collect, or receive a greater or higher rate, toll, or compensation for like services thereafter rendered than that made and fixed by said commission as herein provided, said company or corporation, and said officer, agent, or employee, shall each be deemed guilty of extortion, and upon conviction shall be fined for the first offense in any sum of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, and upon a second conviction in any sum not less than $1,000 nor more than $2,000, and for the third and succeeding convictions in any sum not less than $2,000 nor more than $5,000.

SEC. 2. The circuit court of any county into or through which the line or lines of road carrying such passenger or freight, owned or operated by said railroad, and the Franklin circuit court shall have jurisdicton of the offense against the railroad company or corporation offending, and the circuit court of county where such offense may be committed by said officer, agent, or employee shall have jurisdiction in all prosecutions against said officer, agent, or employee.

SEC. 3. Prosecutions under this act shall be by indictment.

SEC. 4. All prosecutions under this act shall be commenced within two years after the offense shall have been committed.

SEC. 5. In making said investigation said commission may, when deemed necessary, take the depositions of witnesses before an examiner or notary public, whose fee shall be paid by the State, and upon the certificate of the chairman of the commission, approved by the governor, the auditor shall draw his warrant upon the treasurer for its payment.

Briefly, this act provided that a complaint could be filed before the railroad commission charging any common carrier with being guilty of extortion by charging freight or passenger rates which were unjust; that the commission should notify the company; that it should hear argument and evidence; that if it found the company had been guilty of extortion it could then fix a rate; that when the rate had been so fixed, if the road charged a higher rate it should be guilty of extortion, and thereupon it could be brought into court and the fact shown that the board had made the order to which I have referred, and that if the company had violated this order it should be held guilty and fined.

That law is in many respects paralleled by this bill. The law of Kentucky, however, did not attempt to go nearly so far as this bill. Besides, this bill deals with all those kinds of businesses which have never been held to be subject to public regulation in the same manner that railroads and other common carriers have been. The court held the Kentucky statute unconstitutional.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. In what year was this?

Mr. REED. In 1900. The act was challenged upon the following grounds:

First, in authorizing the commission to fix rates in certain instances upon interstate commerce.

That is immaterial here, because the case did not go up on that point.

Second, in authorizing the commission to deprive them of their property without due process of law; third, in authorizing the commission to take from them the equal protection of the law; fourth, in authorizing the commission to take their property for public use without just compensation; fifth, in authorizing all of these things to be done by a body of executive officers who are not a court, and who are without judicial powers

The court has this to say:

The Supreme Court of the United States in many cases has announced certain fundamental principles which have a more or less direct bearing upon the questions involved in these cases.

Citing especially Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. against Minnesota (134 U. S.), where the court says:

The question of the reasonableness of a rate of charge for transportation by a railroad company, involving as it does the element of reasonableness, both as regards the company and as regards the public, is eminently a question for judicial investigation requiring due process of law for its determination. If the company is deprived of the power of charging reasonable rates for the use of its property, and thus, in substance and effect, of the property itself, without due process of law, and in violation of the Constitution of the United States, in so far as it is thus deprived, while other persons are permitted to receive reasonable profits upon their invested capital, the company is deprived of the equal protection of the laws.

Citing some cases. Among other authorities, the court quotes this language from Mr. Justice Brewer, which I read because I think it is a good thing to occasionally go back to fundamentals:

These cases all support the proposition that, while it is not the province of the courts to enter upon the merely administrative duty of framing a tariff of rates for carriage, it is within the scope of judicial power and a part of judicial duty to restrain anything which, in the form of regulation of rates, operates to deny to the owners of property invested in the business of transportation that equal protection which is the constitutional right of all owners of other property. There is nothing new or strange in this. It has always been a part of the judicial function to determine whether the act of one party (whether that party be a single individual, an organized body, or the public as a whole) operates to divest the other party of any rights of person or property. In every constitution is the guaranty against the taking of private property for public purposes without just compensation. The equal protection of the laws, which, by the fourteenth amendment, no State can deny to the individual, forbids legislation, in whatever form it may be enacted, by which the property of one individual is without compensation wrested from him for the benefit of another or for the public. This, as has been often observed, is a government of law and not a government of men—

I hope the sentence last read will be applied by Senators to the remarkable section of this bill which seeks to substitute for a government of law the government of a board of five men.

Justice Brewer, proceeding, said:

And it must never be forgotten that under such a government, with its constitutional limitations and guaranties, the forms of law and the machinery of government, with all their reach and power, must, in their actual workings, stop on the hither side of the unnecessary and uncompensated taking or destruction of any private property legally acquired and legally held.

Mr. President, that declaration is founded on the old rock of the Constitution. Starting with it as a premise, the United States district court says:

It will be observed that there is no general power delegated to the commission to fix rates, nor does the statute creating the commission give it any such right. Its sole authority in the premises is stated in the act above set forth, and must be based upon its conviction of the railroad of extortion. It can not move until what we may call this jurisdictional fact has been ascertained to exist; and then, having proceeded to determine that the railroad has been guilty of extortion, although it has been furnished with no unmistakable statutory standard as to what is to be held to be extortion, it lowers the rate of that road for that particular service. Its own opinion—its own judgment—is the sole guide upon both questions.

"Its own opinion" and "its own judgment" is to be the sole guide of the commission sought to be created by this bill.

If the law only conferred on the commission power to fix a schedule of rates for all railroads in the State generally, it would be the duty of the court to await its action in that regard and then permit those rates, if called in question, to stand or fall as they might, in the court's judgment, be just and reasonable, or the reverse. It might be conceded that, in case a railroad commission was given general power to establish a schedule of rates, a failure on the part of a carrier to conform to those rates when established might be made punishable. (Reagan v. Trust Co., 154 U. S., 362; 14 Sup. Ct., 1055; 38 L. Ed., 1024.) But this does not yet reach the cases before us. Here the power given is to be exercised only where the commission has "determined" that the railroad company has been "guilty of extortion" in a given instance or instances complained of, and then apparently only by way of punishment therefor, or as an occasion for laying a foundation for other punishment, although the legislature has established no definite test—

Always the court comes back to the fatal defect, namely, that the law failed to furnish any definite test.

The court continues:

When the commission has "determined" that the company is "guilty of extortion," it shall then fix the rate thereafter to be charged in similar cases by that company only, and not by carriers generally. This shall be entered upon the records of the commission. Afterwards, if the company thus found "guilty of extortion" shall in a like case charge or collect a rate greater than the one thus fixed, or if any of its employees shall do so, it shall be guilty of the crime of extortion. These matters all bear the marks of a judicial proceeding.

What about this commission that without any guide of law, without any statute to follow, is to sit down and say, "We think this transaction is fair, we think this other transaction is unfair; we think Jones treats his competitors fairly; we think Smith treats his competitors unfairly"? Who is to determine what is fair and what is unfair? The commission. How will it determine the all-important question? Will it proceed according to the precedents of the courts, or will it examine dissertations upon ethics? Will it accept the western code of honor, or will it go down East for its rules of business fairness? Will it adopt the morals of the stock exchange or the Sunday school? No man can say, no man dare hazard a guess.

I quote again from the opinion:

But the act goes further and provides that if, after the rate is thus fixed—after this possible punishment is thus inflicted—that company charges a higher rate for similar services, however reasonable it in fact might be in the judgment of a court, the real judicial tribunals of the State are then given the power to punish it or its employees therefor though the power is apparently withheld from those courts of judicially inquiring whether the rate thus fixed under these circumstances by the commission was just or reasonable.

And that very objection lies to this bill.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may interrupt the Senator, does he construe the pending bill as giving the commission arbitrary power to determine what unfair competition is?

Mr. REED. Unquestionably I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Irrespective of what may be recognized as unfair competition under the decision of the courts?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I undertake to say that there are no decisions of courts that amount to a rule of law as to what constitutes unfair competition. There is no guide, and the chairman of this committee said a moment ago there was no guide when he said to us, "You can not write a description of what is unfair competition into the law." Manifestly if there was a guide it could be written into the law; if there was a rule it could be embraced in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I was simply going to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that if the commission does not determine what is unjust competition, who will determine it under the bill?

Mr. POMERENE. Of course the committee determines it, but it is under well-defined principles of law as to what is unfair competition.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Just a moment, please. Let me illustrate. If we were to follow the logic of my friend from Missouri, a statute which would declare it unlawful to obtain by any false pretense any property of value would be unconstitutional because there was no statute on this subject. Everyone knows that a false pretense has not been defined as a general proposition, but the law is being enforced and courts and juries are obliged to rely upon the particular circumstances of each particular case. So, also, when it comes to the question of fraud generally, we have never attempted to define fraud. Courts do not attempt it, legislatures have not attempted it, because the affairs of mankind are so multitudinous and in such great variety that it is utterly impossible of definition. It is just so, as the Senator from Nevada suggested during the afternoon's debate—unfair competition is not susceptible of a general definition which would embrace all kinds of unfair competition. That is impossible.

There are certain decisions, certain principles of common law which form landmarks which may guide us. Of course, this commission could not declare a thing to be unfair competition which was not unfair competition under the well-defined principles of the law. If they were to attempt to do that it is quite clear that any court would interfere.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wish to say to the Senator that among the powers conferred upon this commission is the power to determine what is unfair competition. Section 4 of the bill says:

> The powers and jurisdiction herein conferred upon the commission shall extend over all trade associations, corporate combinations, and corporations as hereinbefore defined engaged in or affecting commerce, except banks and common carriers.

Then the very next section says:

> That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful.

And it is for them to determine what is unfair competition under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. This act does not attempt to declare what is unfair competition. It assumes that that is defined under the general principles of the law. Now, as to whether a given state of facts shall be determined by the commission as unfair competition, of course it is up to the commission to decide.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I was reading the decision of the court, but the remarks of both the Senators, while very illuminating, have carried us away from the decision.

Mr. POMERENE. I apologize to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Oh, no; that is all right; I am simply making that statement so that my failure to at this moment reply will not be misunderstood. I prefer to go on with the decision.

I, however, at this time will apply this much of it to a part of the statement of the Senator from Ohio. One of the very reasons why the court struck down this attempted legislation was that it did not lay down a general rule; that the board did not act under a general rule either adopted by itself or adopted by the legislature; and that the court's order did not apply universally to all trade conditions and to all concerns engaged in transportation; but that it applied in a particular case. The court calls attention very sharply in its reasoning to the distinction between applying a rule of law generally to all of a business class and the mere arbitrary declaration that a particular act done by a particular man was just or unjust, reasonable or unreasonable. You must first have the rule of law and it must be applicable to all of a class. And so the court says:

> Third. The most prominent feature of this legislation is the manifest purpose, if possible, to regulate rates by severe punishments for single offenses, rather than by means of real attempts to solve the immense problem of fair and reasonable freight and passenger charges, by industrious and earnest efforts to ascertain what they should be. But even if the spirit of the statute be extreme and harsh rather than moderate and fair, this would be unavailing to the complainants if the provisions of the act had been kept within constitutional bounds. As already indicated, the act does not fix nor attempt to fix, nor requiring the fixing of, rates equally and generally for all.

Neither does this act provide for the establishment of a rule or decision equal to all, but allows a different rule for each individual, the solitary limitation being the discretion of the board.

"It aims alone at single instances, and as a condition precedent to the right of the commission to make any change in any existing rate it requires that the commission shall find the railroad guilty of extortion without defining in any precise sense what that is. On the hearing upon the charge before the non-judicial administrative body, a species of notice and an opportunity to be heard as to the reasonableness and justness of the rates is given. But all that is thus done is preliminary to having a justification for the further step, if the railroad charges an excess rate over that thus fixed, of having it convicted of another and further extortion, without any provision in the act that the judicial tribunal which shall try the accused for that offense may investigate and decide whether the rate fixed in this extraordinary preliminary proceeding before the administrative body was reasonable or just."

And that is true as a criticism of this bill.

> No opportunity for such an investigation is afforded by the statute when the courts are given jurisdiction of the cases, and it is by no means certain that those courts would feel constrained to give the relief in the absence of an express statutory requirement. These considerations, therefore, seem to bring this case within the principle first above quoted from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Minnesota case. If it had been the intention of the legislature to recognize the right to a judicial investigation of the reasonableness of the rates fixed under the provisions of the act, and to afford an opportunity therefor before a conviction upon an indictment for extortion, it would have said so in unmistakable terms, etc.

The fourth division of the opinion is:

> Fourth. And it may be that the principles announced by the court of appeals in Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Commonwealth (99 Ky., 132; 35 S. W., 129; 33 L. R. A., 209), by which section 816 of the Kentucky Statutes, which made it an offense for a carrier to charge more than a "just and reasonable rate," was held to be void for uncertainty, would apply in this connection.
> Sixth. * * * and the court is of the opinion that the act violates the constitution of the State in attempting to confer upon the commission what are judicial powers and functions, to wit, the power, after complaint and notice given, to "hear and determine" that the railroad has been "guilty of extortion."

That is exactly what you do here. You confer that judicial power expressly here—> and as a consequence after that finding to further decide that the freight rate of that road for similar services shall be a lower figure. These steps, as they apply only to individual instances and are not a method of fixing rates generally, constitute the very essence of a judicial proceeding and judgment. Indeed, this ground of relief may possibly broaden out so as, per se, to aid all the others.

> The court is always reluctant to interfere with the exercise by any State officer of his official functions; but in the most eminent degree the safety of the property and the rights of the citizens of the community depend upon the supremacy of the Constitution. The value of these safeguards is not diminished because individuals associate as a body corporate. They are citizens none the less, and the court must not shrink in clear cases from discharging its plain duty to uphold the dominant authority. If, as before intimated, the act in question only empowered the commision to fix rates generally and for all alike, which would be a mere administrative work, the court would not interfere until that power had been exercised and the propriety of the result called in question; but here not only may a rate in a single instance be fixed by a process plainly unconstitutional, but the most serious, not to say excessive, punitive consequences may be visited not only upon the railroad but also upon the individual citizen whom it may employ.

The court upon all of these grounds and for all of these reasons held this act to be absolutely unconstitutional, and so clearly unconstitutional that they would arrest an attempt to enforce it before even the board had acted.

Mr. President, Senators tell us that "fraud" has not been defined. Oh, yes, it has been defined a thousand times. The definition is written on almost every page of every law book. Nobody has undertaken to say what particular collation of facts shall be necessary to constitute fraud, because the facts which may be employed are as multitudinous as the leaves upon the trees; but the rules by which we are to determine whether a transaction is fraudulent have been laid down for centuries; and whenever the combination of facts in a given case comes within the purview of those rules, fraud exists. But the rules are there; and when a statute is passed denouncing fraud it deals with a subject which has been clearly defined in the common law, in equity jurisprudence, and in previous statutory enactments. So you do not escape at all by the fraud argument.

Fraud has been defined; false pretenses have been defined; tricks and devices have been defined by a general rule, both in the statute law and in the decisions of the courts. Of course, we have not undertaken in any law to specify all of the things which may constitute a fraud. You have, however, laid down well-known rules as to what constitutes fraud.

This bill leaves us as much in the dark as would a bill declaring that "whoever shall do anything which is wrong shall be punished." If such a bill were presented, I presume the wise lawyers would get on their feet and illuminate the situation in this manner: "Why, many courts have said that this thing is wrong; therefore we have a definition of wrong." You have just exactly the same kind of definition of what is "unfair trade" in the decisions as you have of what is "wrong" in the decisions, namely, a court in describing some particular act has said it was an unfair act of trade, or in describing some particular act has said it was a wrongful act; but no statute merely declaring that "whoever shall do wrong shall be punished" would be a valid statute, because, instead of giving the citizen a guide as to that which is wrong, a guide that is written in the law which he can observe, he is relegated, not to the law, but to the opinion of an individual as to what is wrong.

You can not say to me that I shall be tried, fined, and imprisoned, or that my property shall be taken because five gentlemen think I have been doing wrong. Under the Constitution of the United States you must, by law, inhibit conduct before there can be an offense. In this country you can not pass a law providing that whenever five or six eminently respectable gentlemen, jurists, wise men, and economists (as the Senator from Nevada assures us they shall be) get together and say that they think something is wrong, that that shall be wrong, because that is putting the Government of the United States into the hands of those four or five men, and giving them the power to say what is lawful and what is unlawful, whereas, under the Constitution of the United States, that power is reserved to all the people of the United States, not to five people of the United States. That will of all the people of the United States must be engraven in the law, and that law must be passed by the House of Representatives and by the Senate, and it must be signed by the President.

You are substituting the decree of five men here for a law of Congress. If you can delegate this great power to this little commission, you can create a commission and turn over to it every power of the Federal Government, and if you ever embark upon a crusade of that kind, and if it be sustained by the courts, it will not be long until the Constitution shall have become a rope of sand. Instead of this being a government of constitution and of law it will be a government of men ruling over the people. That, sir, is a monarchy, not a republic.

Mr. President, I rose to talk but two or three minutes, intending merely to formally state some objections to one clause of the bill. I have been led to extend my remarks beyond the original intent.

In the future I expect to submit some additional authorities upon the legal questions I have referred to.

Mr. STONE obtained the floor.

REGULATION OF STOCK EXCHANGES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment on a matter of privilege, as to which I have been waiting to speak for a good while?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair assumed that when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] rose it was for the purpose of interrupting his colleague. The Chair desires to recognize the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, this morning upon the convening of the Senate the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. OWEN] filed a report on a bill to regulate the stock exchanges through the Post Office Department. I entered the Chamber a few moments later, and therefore was not here in time to challenge the report. The fact is the report was adopted at a meeting of the committee at which a quorum was not present. Concerning the facts there is really no dispute.

There are 12 members of that committee, and the Senators present at the meeting to which I refer were Mr. OWEN, Mr. LEE of Maryland, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. BRISTOW, and Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senators absent were Mr. WEEKS, Mr. REED, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. NELSON, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. POMERENE, and Mr. HOLLIS. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] was in attendance at a meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations, as indeed I was; the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] was engaged in the Committee on the Judiciary; the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I understand, was also engaged in the Committee on the Judiciary; the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] was engaged on the business of the Senate elsewhere. It is fair to say that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] had indicated to the chairman a willingness to be counted present to constitute a quorum, and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] authorized himself to be counted as in favor of the bill; but under the rules of the Senate a constructive quorum is not sufficient where objection is made. I therefore ask that the bill be taken from the calendar and that it be recommitted to the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in answer to the statement of the Senator, I will say that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is not in the city and will not be in the city for some two or three weeks, and any ruling which the Chair might make upon this matter I would prefer go over until the Senator from Oklahoma returns.

I want to say to the Senate that the chairman of the committee has been exceedingly anxious for a number of weeks to get a report upon the bill. In the first instance, there was a vote taken some three or four weeks ago. There were present, including one or two members who requested that they be counted to make a quorum, a sufficient number. While the question was up it was suggested that the Senator from Oklahoma make the report. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] was present upon that occasion and stated that he should like to have time to file the views of the minority. That seemed to be satisfactory, and it was supposed that the report on the bill would be made. Some question arose concerning the matter, and the Senator from Oklahoma felt that there ought to be some confirmation of that action upon the part of the committee. He sent out notices several times, but no quorum appeared. He sent out notices again for a meeting this morning. The notice was for 10 o'clock. I was there in person at 10. We had some other business to transact. This matter was brought up about half past 11 o'clock, and the vote was taken on the matter about 25 minutes of 12 o'clock.

It then appeared that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] was present, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] was present, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] was present, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] was present, and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] was present. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] retired from the room, saying that he had an engagement at one of the executive departments, and it would be necessary for him to go, but he wanted his vote counted to constitute a quorum and also in favor of the bill. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] had sent word or had seen the Senator from Oklahoma and had stated that he would like to be counted to make a quorum, so that made seven members, according to the procedure in such cases in the committees of the Senate. A motion was made to report the bill; there was a vote taken. Three or four members voted in favor of it, and there seemed to be none who voted directly against it, although there were some expressions of doubt as to whether we ought not to have another meeting of the committee.

The Senator from Oklahoma stated that he would like to have another meeting of the committee, but expected to leave the city to-day to be absent for three weeks, and that he wanted the bill reported so that any discussion or criticism of the bill might take place while the Senate was considering other measures.

It seems to me, Mr. President, in view of the custom in the committees of the Senate of allowing Senators to ask that they be counted present to make a quorum, that this bill has been reported in the usual way. It is true that we tried to get a quorum in the committee on several occasions. Day before yesterday, as I have said, there was a call for a meeting, and to-day there was a call for a meeting, and we waited until half past 11 o'clock before any motions were made. It seems to me, in view of that, and the custom of the Senate being as I have indicated, that a motion ought not to be made, and ought not to be sustained if made, that this bill be taken from the calendar until at least the chairman of the committee is here to present his view of the matter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the chairman were here a delay of a day or two would be all right, but the chairman has gone to Europe. He left immediately after this action was secured. No possible harm can come from recommitting the bill to the committee, where it properly belongs, until a majority of the committee or a majority of a legal quorum present vote it out. The bill can not be taken up during the absence of the chairman, and the placing of it upon the calendar is simply a violation of the proprieties and rules of the Senate. I ask, therefore, that the bill be recommitted to the committee. It will then be there for consideration in a proper and legitimate way when the committee is called together.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that there is a motion to recommit or a request for a ruling by the Chair that the report was improperly made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; there is no request for the Chair to decide whether or not the report was improperly made. The Chair would refuse to decide any such question as that if it were presented to the Chair, believing that the question as to whether a report has been made properly or improperly is one for the Senate of the United States to settle.

The Chair understands the motion to be one which is sometimes made, though not frequently, but one which is properly made, to take the bill from the calendar and re-refer it to the committee; but under the rules of the Senate, unless unanimous consent is given, that motion must lie over for one day and come up regularly under the rules of the Senate to-morrow. If there is objection to taking the bill from the calendar and re-referring it to the committee, it will go over. Is there objection?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I hope it will go over, for I fear it will lead to debate and perhaps a call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am willing to have a vote without any debate.

Mr. STONE. The motion of the Senator from Nebraska can be pending. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the Senator if he will not allow a vote to be taken as a matter of courtesy to members of the committee who were not present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the bill being taken from the calendar and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. HOLLIS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection, and the motion of the Senator from Nebraska will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. KERN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has been recognized. To whom does he yield?

Mr. STONE. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Mr. KERN. I submit the following order, for which I ask present consideration.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 26, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 25, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, let Thy blessing descend copiously upon these Thy servants. Keep them and theirs in health, strength, vigor during the heated and enervating season through which we are passing, that they may hallow Thy name in thought and purpose, that the interests of our Republic may be subserved and advanced in all that makes a nation great; that peace, prosperity, justice, mercy, truth, and righteousness may obtain throughout our borders. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—PLAZA AWARDS.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims be discharged from further consideration of Senate bills numbered 11, 23, 31, and 2245, and that they be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia under Rule XXI. The engrossed bills, with the accompanying papers, I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. They are private bills, are they not?

Mr. POU. I think they are, Mr. Speaker. They belong to the Committee on the District of Columbia; I know that.

Mr. MANN. What do they relate to, may I inquire?

The SPEAKER. To Plaza awards. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Federal reserve act and to incorporate therein the instructive utterance by the Comptroller of the Currency, Hon. John Skelton Williams, on May 13, 1914, before the annual convention of the North Carolina Bankers' Association at Raleigh, N. C.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the speech that the Hon. John Skelton Williams made before the convention of the North Carolina Bankers' Association at Raleigh, N. C. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ELECTRICAL PROTECTION TO VAULTS OF GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, while the sundry civil bill was under consideration there was a matter under discussion in regard to an appropriation for electrical protection of Government buildings, including that at San Francisco, Cal. I did not get the telegrams I have now in time to submit to the House and offer an amendment to the bill. I got the telegrams last night. I now ask unanimous consent that I may insert these telegrams in relation to that appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of certain telegrams. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what do they relate to?

Mr. RAKER. There has been an appropriation carried of something like $19,000, providing for electrical devices for Government buildings at San Francisco and elsewhere. The present bill did not carry that item, and I would like to have these telegrams go into the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object, Mr. Speaker. There are 5,000 of these telegrams in the House to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objects.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned yesterday the previous question was ordered on the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and all amendments had been agreed to except what is known as the Ferris amendment. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that it be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill and amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

Amendment offered by Mr. FERRIS:

"Amend, page 99, line 18, by striking out the figures '$300,000' and inserting in lieu thereof the figures '$400,000.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] demands a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 22.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the Ferris amendment will, when their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 90, answered "present" 7, not voting 182, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is agreed to. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out the figures "$2,649,500" in the Dupré amendment and insert the figures "$2,909,500."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to recommit the bill with instructions, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GARDNER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to strike out the figures "$2,649,500" in the Dupré amendment and insert the figures "$2,909,500."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that that motion to recommit is not in order, because the House has adopted an amendment which struck out of the bill the sum of of $2,650,000 and inserted the figures $2,649,500; and having stricken out and inserted certain language, it is not now in order to strike out what was so inserted and to substitute something else.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GARDNER. I desire to be heard on the point of order. Does the gentleman from New York desire to go ahead, or shall I go ahead?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The matter was liberally argued yesterday and determined, and the entire matter is before the Chair. If the gentleman wishes to discuss the point of order, that is one thing. I hope the Speaker will not permit the House to waste time in discussion of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts, and will not hear anybody else on this point of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, held this motion to be out of order yesterday he cited two precedents—first, a decision made by Mr. Chairman Olmsted in the case of the Philippine tariff bill, and, second, a decision made by the present Speaker in 1913, on a motion to recommit the District of Columbia appropriation bill, made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN]. Now, what is it proposed to do? The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] offered an amendment yesterday reducing by a nominal amount the appropriation for the Immigration Service and simultaneously enacting certain substantive legislation. To make the substantive legislation in order he was obliged to make a nominal reduction of the amount carried for the Immigration Service. Now, in this particular case it is true that I propose to alter the amount which the House adopted by the Dupré amendment——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. While the gentleman's motion as offered is to change the amount in the amendment, is it not a fact that there is no amendment now before the House? The engrossed bill has been read. Amendments have disappeared, and the gentleman's motion is simply to direct the committee to change certain figures in an engrossed bill, which are just like any other figures in the engrossed bill.

Mr. GARDNER. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion, which I understand, of course, is in aid of my proposition; but I am afraid that I shall be met by the point of order that you may not in a motion to recommit include an amendment which would have been out of order if offered while the bill was being considered for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman if that is not sound doctrine?

Mr. GARDNER. That is absolutely sound doctrine, but I am asking the chairman to overrule the decision of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield, I do not think it is accomplishing indirectly what you could not accomplish directly. There is no Dupré amendment now. That has been disposed of. The bill is engrossed. The Speaker has no knowledge as to amendments now. You have an engrossed copy of the bill before the Speaker. What difference does it make how the amount got into the bill? Here is the engrossed bill. The amendments are lost sight of, disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Speaker has notice of the amendments which were reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and he has knowledge of the amendment which was agreed to by the House.

Mr. MANN. But the House has adopted every part of the bill, whether it be by amendment or without amendment. A paragraph that is read and passed over without objection or amendment is adopted by the House. But it is all right now to increase the amounts in the bill; any part of it is subject to amendment by a motion to recommit.

Mr. GARDNER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to proceed for a few minutes consecutively, because I think this is one of the most important rulings that has been before the House for some time. If the ruling of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] should stand, I say without hesitation that it will be possible in the future, by means of a blocking motion, to prevent amendments to a paragraph increasing amounts carried in a bill above the amounts desired by the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, what the gentleman held was this: You may not amend a bill by altering words which the House has already adopted in an amendment. That is sound doctrine if the bill is on the same reading or the same stage and if the proposition is an identical proposition, but it is not sound if the amendment proposed is an entirely different proposition, as it is in this case.

The whole principle is admirably argued in Hinds' Precedents by Speaker John W. Taylor, from the State of New York, page 385, fifth volume. I call the attention of the Speaker to this merely as history. Speaker Taylor points out that the reason for holding that the House ought not to be called upon to amend or alter an amendment which it has adopted is because the House ought not to be called upon to pass twice on the same proposition. That is good, sound common sense. The House ought not to be called on to pass twice on the same proposition, unless in different stages of the bill; but this is an entirely different matter.

Here is the situation: The gentleman from Louisiana offered an amendment, which was adopted. Pending the adoption of that amendment the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] tried to amend the Dupré amendment in such a way as to increase the amount carried in the bill. The Chair held that motion out of order, because if the Mann amendment were adopted, then the Dupré amendment would no longer fit the Holman rule. Therefore, during the pendency of the Dupré amendment there was no way under the sun by which the Committee of the Whole, if it objected to this laying of the cold hand of death on the immigration bill and the Immigration Service which is going on, there was no way on earth that they could consider the question pending the disposition of the Dupré amendment.

The moment the Dupré amendment was adopted, then, when we tried to put vitality into the Immigration Service in compliance with the demands of the bureau, we were met by the point of order that, the Dupré amendment having been adopted, there was no way to get our amendment in, because any increase in the appropriation would alter the words just adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

If the Chair holds my pending amendment out of order, I shall make another trial to get it in, because I consider it a question of vast importance to prevent the Immigration Service from being cramped, even if we are forced to allow the cold hand of death to be laid by order of the President on the immigration bill. There must still be some way in which the House can express itself.

I want to call attention to the essential difference between the precedent cited by the gentleman from Tennessee and this present proposition. When Mr. Parker of New Jersey sought to amend the Philippine tariff bill in the Committee of the Whole, his proposition was to undo that which the committee had just done. Last year Mr. Burleson proposed an amendment to the District appropriation bill dealing with the half-and-half principle. The House settled the question by a vote in favor of Mr. Burleson's proposal. Thereupon the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] tried, by a motion to recommit, to get the House to undo that which it had just done. It is true that Mr. MARTIN inserted other words. It was not a square repeal; but the motion to recommit included the undoing of that which the House had just done. In this case I do not propose that we undo one jot or one tittle of that which the House ordained when it adopted the Dupré amendment. I contend that we must not be estopped from offering the House an opportunity to increase the appropriation for the Immigration Service merely because of this technical intrusion on that particular part of the Dupré amendment which was adopted as a pure technicality solely in order to bring that amendment within the Holman rule.

If such an interpretation of parliamentary laws is to obtain, you have added another to the very many shackles which prevent the House from exercising its right of amendment. I deplore the forging of a new shackle. One of the greatest difficulties about parliamentary law in this House is this: There are already too many devices making it difficult to obtain votes on proposals which do not conform with the will of committees in charge of bills. Here is the situation: From the moment Mr. DUPRÉ was recognized there has never been a time when the House, if it so desired, could secure an opportunity to raise the amount accorded the Immigration Service; that is, so far as appears from the result of my efforts.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the ruling which was made by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, who was in the chair yesterday. After the amendment was agreed to in Committee of the Whole, it was not in order at that time under the consideration of that paragraph to amend the amendment which had been agreed to. There was a way by which the Committee of the Whole might have amended that, in my opinion. If, when the Committee of the Whole had finished the consideration of the bill, and the motion to rise and report the bill favorably to the House was made—if the committee had defeated that motion, it was then in order to amend any part of the bill, including any amendment which had been agreed to. The Speaker may remember that that has been done in the House while he and I have been Members of the House. Probably the most celebrated case was that of the Cleveland public building, where an item having been passed, it was proposed to amend after the item had been passed. That was held to be out of order. When the Committee of the Whole had concluded the consideration of the bill, the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge moved to rise and report the bill favorably to the House, and the Committee of the Whole House voted down the motion. The Chair then held that it was in order for the committee to do something, and the committee having declined to report the bill favorably as it stood, it was in order to offer a motion to amend any part of the bill. Such a motion was made and was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Was not that the case where the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] was absent from the Chamber temporarily, and the item was passed in his absence, and he could not get back to that portion of the bill to offer an amendment without unanimous consent, which he could not obtain, and it was not the case of where something had already been adopted by amendment?

Mr. MANN. There is no distinction between a portion of the bill which has been passed without objection or amendment and an amendment which has been agreed to. After a paragraph of a bill has been read in Committee of the Whole and the committee has passed to another paragraph it is not in order to offer a motion to amend the paragraph that has been agreed to. That has been agreed to just as much as the motion to amend has been agreed to after it has been passed over. The ruling of the Chair was that it was in order, the committee having refused to rise and report the bill favorably, to then amend any part of the bill.

We come now to the point of whether it is in order on a motion to recommit. All of the amendments have been merged in the engrossed bill. It is in order on a motion to recommit, and has been so held, to move to strike out the very language which has been inserted by an amendment. It is for the House to determine on the motion to recommit whether it may strike out any portion of the engrossed bill. The bill as an engrossed bill is an entirety. The gentleman might offer a motion to strike out any paragraph in the bill or to amend with a germane amendment any paragraph in the bill. The gentleman now moves to recommit to amend an amount in the bill. There is no sacredness about the fact that that amount has been inserted by amendment. That has no more effect than any other amount that is in the bill which has been passed without change. All that has been agreed to by the committee, all that has been agreed to by the House, to the extent of ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and any amendment which is germane to the bill may now be offered as a motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Chair to section 948 of the Manual:

> It is not in order to move to recommit with instructions to eliminate amendment adopted by House.

That was elaborately argued and decided by the Speaker on May 22, 1912.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair, of course, is always very careful to listen to any arguments on parliamentary points that are made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], because they have studied these matters a great deal.

A brief statement of this case is that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ] offered an amendment striking out and inserting. That was agreed to. The Committee of the Whole had a perfect right to vote down the Dupré amendment if it wanted to. There was no constraint upon it to vote for Mr. DUPRÉ's amendment unless it so desired, and the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows that it was very elaborately argued by able men. The only question is whether after that has been done you can do it over again. That is a question that has been decided, not very frequently, but still ever since the days of Thomas Jefferson. On page 194 of Jefferson's Manual, section 466, there is the following:

> But if it had been carried affirmatively to strike out the words and to insert A, it could not afterwards be permitted to strike out A and insert B. The mover of B should have notified, while the insertion of A was under debate, that he would move to insert B; in which case those who preferred it would join in rejecting A.

The rule to recommit which is pertinent here is this: That you can not do anything by a motion to recommit that you could not do in the committee by way of amendment. The gentleman from Massachusetts was shut out in the Committee of the Whole.

One of the best presiding officers who was not a Speaker who has been in this House since the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], or the present occupant of the chair has been here, was the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Marlin E. Olmsted. In section 5766 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, the case is well stated by that gentleman, and this is about 40 years after the decision by Mr. Speaker Taylor, of New York, cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]:

> Words embodying a distinct substantive proposition being agreed to as an amendment, it is not in order to amend by striking out a part of those words with other words.

That is a decision by Mr. Olmsted.

The present Speaker ruled to the same effect, without giving any reasons for it, on February 6, 1913, on the District appropriation bill. So far as one of the propositions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is concerned, the present Speaker, in section 948 of the Manual, after a very thorough study—because the matter came up on a Wednesday and went over until the next Wednesday—rendered an elaborate opinion about doing by indirection what one can not do by direction. It can not be done.

The motion to recommit is ruled out of order.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. To offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was attempting to get recognition, and unless the gentleman from Massachusetts is opposed to the bill I am entitled to preferential recognition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Massachusetts to be opposed to the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know whether he is or not.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am entitled to preferential recognition on a motion to recommit.

Mr. GARDNER. I think not. I am opposed to the bill as it stands, I will say.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman must be opposed to the bill without any qualification.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. If the gentleman from New York will state that he is opposed to the bill without qualification——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not. I am in favor of the bill, and so is the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman says he is opposed to it as it stands.

Mr. GARDNER. I will correct that, Mr. Speaker, and say that I am more opposed to it than the gentleman from New York is. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I do not know, after what was done a few moments ago, but I would be opposed——

The SPEAKER. There is no use in arguing this thing. The Chair held, touching the mode and practice here three years ago, that where the gentleman from Illinois made a motion to recommit and the Chair ruled it out as being not germane, that he would give him another chance to offer another motion, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois to make two motions to recommit; but, of course, there ought to be a limit to it somewhere.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unless the gentleman is opposed to the bill, then, under the rules, the gentleman in charge of the bill is entitled to recognition for a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman qualifies——

Mr. FITZGERALD. He must be opposed; there is no qualification in the rule. It says preference shall be given to those opposed to the bill. Well, the gentleman can not say he is somewhat opposed to it or is opposed to it. He must be so opposed to the bill in its present form that when it comes to a vote he will not vote for it. That is opposition to the bill.

Mr. GARDNER. But, Mr. Speaker, there is another rule the gentleman overlooks, which the Speaker suggested just now. The gentleman from New York did not invoke his right to offer to recommit until he offered two motions. Now, the Speaker has just stated that about three years ago when one gentleman had an opportunity to make a motion to recommit and that was held out of order, he said he would give him another opportunity.

The SPEAKER. That was a case arising on a tariff bill, as the Chair remembers now the ruling on it, and the gentleman from Illinois himself had some sort of suspicion that part of the motion that he had to recommit was not in order. That is, the Chair assumes that from his subsequent conduct.

Mr. MANN. The suspicion was that through partisan motives it might be held out of order.

The SPEAKER. Anyhow, he came with two motions to recommit in his pocket and he offered the first one and the Chair ruled him out, and then he immediately offered the second one, and somebody raised the objection that he had already offered a motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But he was opposed to the tariff bill, and there was no qualified opposition to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the Chair allow another statement?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to finish his own statement. Now, being opposed to a bill has various degrees. You may be opposed to it absolutely and essentially; and, of course, if a man in that frame of mind were asked the question if he is opposed to the bill and if he says he is he says he is without any hesitancy; but suppose a man is only opposed to part of a bill, he has a right to recognition in preference to a man in favor of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, that is not a correct ruling in that I am opposed to part of this bill, but I am for the bill, and the test is I will vote for the bill in its present shape, and I apply that test to the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Did not the Speaker recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker had recognized the gentleman, and he had started his amendment or motion to the Clerk's desk under the order of the Speaker before the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] addressed the Chair.

Mr. MANN. That settles it.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the Chair permit a word there?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. I want to call the attention of the Chair, in case I should be obliged to offer another of these motions, to the fact that a similar situation arose in the case of the convict-made goods bill, a short time ago. I have a right, so long as it is not dilatory, to go on offering motions to recommit in a bona fide attempt to get one which the Chair will hold in order. To speak accurately, there has been no motion to recommit before the House to-day, because the Chair has ruled adversely. Now, if the Chair holds this motion out of order, I maintain that I have the right to offer another one.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GARDNER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to insert a new item, on page 150, at the end of line 21, as follows:

"For additional expenses of the Immigration Service in enforcing the Chinese-exclusion act and the immigration act of February 20, 1907, $260,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a paragraph in the bill deals with this subject, and any amendment to appropriate additional money must be made to that paragraph. This amendment is a separate paragraph and is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. On appropriation bills amendments must be germane to the paragraph to which they are offered. Now, the paragraph in the bill after which the gentleman proposes to insert as a new paragraph this provision contains an appropriation for all the services enumerated in that paragraph. If such a practice as this were to be permitted, we would then have this procedure: We would have motions to reduce the amount carried in a particular paragraph in order to let in legislation, and then an additional paragraph to increase the amount carried in the paragraph carrying the amount for the particular service. The rule is well and definitely settled that amendments must be to the paragraph, if there be a paragraph in the bill to which it is germane.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman read the language?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The language is:

IMMIGRATION SERVICE.

For all expenses of the enforcement of the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States, including the contract-labor laws; cost of the reports of decisions of the Federal courts, and digests thereof, for the use of the Commissioner General of Immigration; for salaries and expenses of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed to enforce said laws; enforcement of the provisions of the act of February 20, 1907 entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," and acts amendatory thereof; necessary supplies, including exchange of typewriting machines, alterations, and repairs, and for all other expenses authorized by said act; also for preventing the unlawful entry of Chinese into the United States, by the appointment of suitable officers to enforce the laws in relation thereto, the expenses of returning to China all Chinese persons found to be unlawfully in the United States, including the cost of imprisonment and actual expense of conveyance of Chinese persons to the frontier or seaboard for deportation, and for the refunding of head tax upon presentation of evidence showing conclusively that collection was made through error of Government officers; all to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, $2,650,000.

Now, that is in the most comprehensive language in which it can be stated as to all the expenses of enforcing the laws relative to the regulation of immigration, the exclusion of Chinese or other persons excluded under the law.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be heard on that. I call the attention of the Speaker, in the first place, to the ruling where it has been held that the fact that a proposed amendment is inconsistent with the text or embodies a proposition already voted upon presents no question of order. It is a matter to be passed on by the House, rather than by the Speaker. Whether or not this proposed amendment is inconsistent with the first part of the paragraph is of no importance. But it is not inconsistent——

The SPEAKER. From where is the gentleman reading?

Mr. GARDNER. From page 190 of the Manual.

Now, I start to read at the top of the page:

If an amendment be proposed inconsistent with one already agreed to, it is a fit ground for its rejection by the House, but not within the competence of the Speaker to suppress as if it were against order.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is mistaken in saying there is any inconsistency. I drew that amendment to cover the expenses of enforcing the act of 1907 and the Chinese-exclusion act. The rest of the paragraph covers all immigration acts. It covers, for instance, the provision of law which prevents the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol. That is in the immigration act of 1903. It covers all sorts of things. It covers the white-slave act; that is, the act aimed against the importation of white slaves. My amendment refers to the enforcement of two specific acts. I offer my amendment as a new paragraph. Now, the rules say:

An amendment inserting an additional section should be germane to the portion of the bill to which it is offered.

It has been frequently ruled that when a bill is being read paragraph by paragraph instead of section by section that the same meaning is to apply to the word "paragraph" as ordinarily is applied to the word "section." Now, then, I say the whole question is this: Is the section or paragraph which I propose germane to the part of the bill to which it is offered? Now, if the Chair will look on the previous page of the bill, page 149, he will see the words "Immigration Service." Now, if he will turn over to page 151 of the bill, he will see the next subdivision; and it is in between those two, under the subdivision headed "Immigration Service," that I offer my new section or paragraph.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] anything further to submit?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In section 5818, volume 5, of Hinds' Precedents, it says:

On March 10, 1902, while the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was considering the bill (H. R. 11728) relating to the Rural Free Delivery Service in the Post Office Department, Mr. George W. Smith, of Illinois, offered an amendment to a certain paragraph of the bill.

Mr. CLAUDE A. SWANSON, of Virginia, made the point of order that the amendment was not germane to this portion of the bill but would be germane to the fourth paragraph.

The Chairman said:

"The Chair is clearly of the opinion that inasmuch as the bill is now being considered by paragraphs, and inasmuch as the amendment offered by the gentleman is expressly covered by paragraph 4, toward the close of the bill, this amendment is germane to that paragraph and not to the paragraph now under consideration. * * * It seems to the Chair that the admission which the gentleman has made would indicate quite clearly that this amendment is in order, not to the pending paragraph but to paragraph 4, because the gentleman says that paragraph would have to be stricken out if this were adopted. The Chair rules that it is not now in order, but that it would be in order when paragraph 4 is reached."

The Chair held it was not in order at that point. Here is in this bill the paragraph covering the matter covered by a motion to recommit, and that is the only paragraph to which an amendment providing additional money would be germane. The offering of an amendment proposed as a new paragraph is, in effect, offering it at some point not germane, because it is not the identical part of the bill in which the service referred to is covered.

The SPEAKER. What is the section the gentleman was reading?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Number 5818.

Mr. GARDNER. I should like to be heard on the citation. It refers to a proposition to amend a particular paragraph, made by Mr. George W. Smith, of Illinois. The question raised was not as to whether the proposition would be in order as a new paragraph. The question was, Was Mr. Smith's amendment in order on that particular paragraph? The Chairman, Mr. GILLETT, of Massachusetts, held that it was not in order on that particular paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In section 5820 the Chair points out where the amendment is offered that there is a paragraph in the bill in which the amendment is germane, to which it should be offered, and therefore holds it out of order unless offered to the particular paragraph. He says:

On March 25, 1904, the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when Mr. Marlin E. Olmsted, of Pennsylvania, proposed an amendment relating to the duties of carriers in the Rural Free Delivery Service.

Mr. Jesse Overstreet made the point of order that the amendment was not germane.

The Chairman held:

"The Chair thinks that on the question of germaneness the question of comparison as arising in the arrangement of a bill comes in; that if an amendment is more appropriate to one paragraph than to another, it is not to be considered germane to the paragraph to which it is less appropriate. Section 3 relates to securing revenue from the Rural Delivery Service. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted] refers to soliciting which may be done by the carrier. The Chair feels quite clear that this amendment would more properly come in as an amendment to the paragraph relating to the privileges of free-delivery carriers. Therefore the point of order is sustained."

My position, Mr. Speaker, is that the paragraph in the bill provides an appropriation for the service mentioned by the proposed amendment. Therefore amendments proposing to add additional moneys for the purpose of carrying out that service are germane only as amendments to that particular paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to——

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer another motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that two are enough.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that I have not made a motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion is dilatory.

Mr. GARDNER. It is not intended to be dilatory, by any means.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is. The Chair likes to give every gentleman a chance, but he thinks the third motion to recommit in this case is dilatory.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the Speaker hear me?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The question of dilatoriness is a question of the motive of the man who offers the motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if I can get recognition I will move to recommit the bill.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. I rise to ask for the regular order. We have had two decisions, and is not that sufficient?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] on the point of order.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, have we not had a decision?

The SPEAKER. You have had a decision on two different propositions.

Mr. GARDNER. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that I have the right to offer a motion to recommit, and that I have the right to be heard.

The SPEAKER. There is no use for the gentleman from Massachusetts to be heard on that proposition. The Chair thoroughly agrees with him that he has the right to make a motion to recommit, and the Chair recognized him twice to make another motion to recommit along the same lines. The Chair thinks the present motion is dilatory, with all due respect to the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair hear me on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair said he would, if the gentleman has anything to submit.

Mr. GARDNER. But the Chair permitted an interruption.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not prevent the interruption. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Chair does not think it is dilatory. It is not offered for the purpose of delay. That is what dilatory means.

The SPEAKER. Of course; but the gentleman has already offered two motions.

Mr. GARDNER. I assure the Chair it is for the purpose of getting a vote of the House, and not for the purpose of delay. I am sure the Chair must understand my motive. To say that this is dilatory means that I am trying to filibuster, instead of which I am trying to get a record vote in the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, was I recognized to move to recommit?

The SPEAKER. Not yet.

Mr. GARDNER. This motion, Mr. Speaker, is not dilatory. I am desirous of getting a vote. I believe I have a proposition that is in order. I deny that I have made a motion to recommit. A motion to recommit means a motion to recommit which is in order, not a motion to recommit which is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman this question: Is the proposition he has on hand now the same as those others?

Mr. GARDNER. It is to accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman's position is to appeal from the Speaker's decision. The Speaker has decided this matter, and the only recourse for him is to appeal from the Speaker's decision to the House.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Connecticut is confusing that. The Speaker decided against the motion that I made. He then proceeded to recognize somebody else, and I made the point of order that I am entitled to make a motion to recommit; and if the gentleman from Connecticut, whose knowledge of parliamentary law is——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] states the question of dilatoriness correctly; that is, every man must come to his own conclusion, and the Speaker has to come to his, and that is as to whether or not the motion to recommit is a proposition that is dilatory. Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts has been ruled out of order twice, and if he has another proposition of the same character——

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, he may wish to accomplish the same purpose, and should be given an opportunity to offer an amendment which the Speaker may hold to be in order. Now, we have had two motions made. The Speaker has ruled them both out. I think in each case the Speaker was wrong. But the Speaker's decision stands until he changes his mind hereafter, as he probably will. [Laughter.] But in good faith the gentleman from Massachusetts is seeking to get a proposition before the House. Certainly that can not be called dilatory.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Suppose this is ruled out?

Mr. GARDNER. It is a question of my motive entirely.

Mr. MANN. If the Speaker gets to the point where he thinks the gentleman is simply trying to delay, all right. Of course the Speaker has the right at any time to recognize anyone else to make the motion to recommit. But in fairness to the gentleman, as long as he is endeavoring to present a proposition that is distinct, I think the Speaker ought to recognize him.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, I would like to submit this question to the Chair, that the question as to whether it is dilatory or not is not necessary to be passed upon at this time. After all, it is merely a question of exercise of the right of recognition, a power that lies with the Speaker.

Now, the Speaker has twice recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer a motion to recommit. The motion has been offered in good faith and has been held to be out of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] then rose and asked recognition for the purpose of making a motion to recommit. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Massachusetts are in very much the same attitude with respect to this bill. According to statements made by each of them from the floor, they are both for the bill, although opposed to some features in the bill. It is merely a question of recognition, and I submit that the gentleman from Massachusetts having been twice recognized, it is now in order to recognize the gentleman from New York, without any reference to the question whether the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts is dilatory or not. He has had his opportunity.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that you will find 20 men opposed to the bill, and to other bills, if the Speaker is going to be arbitrary about it.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, when two Members offer motions to recommit, I have always understood that when both men say they are in favor of the bill and one man really wishes to recommit it and the other does not, the Chair would recognize the one who really wanted to recommit. I think the Chair has recognized that principle heretofore.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts will send up his motion, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GARDNER moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to insert, on page 150, line 21, at the end of the line, the following: "Provided further, That the following additional amount be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the expenses of the Immigration Service in the enforcement of all immigration laws, $260,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that is an amendment to an amendment already adopted.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amendment should have been perfected.

Mr. GARDNER. The decision from which the chairman has quoted expressly says that words may be added to an amendment already adopted. I call the attention of the Speaker to section 5764, on page 387, volume 5, of Hinds' Precedents, and to section 5759, on page 385. I read the syllabus:

Words once inserted in a paragraph by way of amendment may not be stricken out by another motion to amend.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has sustained that.

Mr. GARDNER. Then it says:

But words on the same subject, even though inconsistent, may be added to the paragraph.

That is in section 5759, on page 385.

The SPEAKER. That is the Taylor decision.

Mr. GARDNER. That is the Taylor decision. Now, in section 5764, page 387:

While it is not in order to strike out a portion of an amendment once agreed to, yet words may be added to the amendment.

There never has been a decision contrary to that recorded in Hinds' Precedents or elsewhere, so far as I know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the situation presented by the gentleman is entirely different. The amendment which he wished to add to the words was an amendment which struck out a particular sum in the bill and inserted another sum. Now, it is not in order to change the sum of money that was fixed in the paragraph. The gentleman insists that it is in order to add to these words other words which increase the amount that was fixed by the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, a very small part of the preceding paragraph——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee struck out $2,650,000 and inserted $2,649,500, and provided for the manner in which the commissioner of immigration at New Orleans should be appointed. That language was inserted in the bill. Now, the gentleman says that he can offer an amendment adding to that amendment, in effect, a proviso which increases the amount in that amendment. If that is not doing by indirection what he could not do directly, I do not know the meaning of the words.

Mr. GARDNER. Why does the gentleman say I am adding in effect to the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because that is what the gentleman is doing.

Mr. GARDNER. No; it is adding to the whole paragraph, to which the Chair has ruled that my amendment must be germane.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is increasing the amount that the committee fixed in the bill.

Mr. GARDNER. And there is nothing in the rules to prevent it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes. The Speaker has already ruled that you could not do indirectly what you can not do directly by a motion to recommit. If that ruling be not sustained, then our whole system is broken down in attempting to protect these bills under the Holman rule. For instance, the gentleman's proposition is that you can first strike out of a bill a sum of money, and insert a smaller sum by one dollar, in order to make legislation in order, and that then you can immediately add a proviso, naming an additional sum which increases the original amount in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Evidently that can not be done under the rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is what this amendment proposes to do.

The SPEAKER. If the Holman rule could be worked that way, it would be the most remarkable trap that was ever prepared for a legislative body. If you could do that, the proposition would be that after cutting down an amount you could come along with an amendment to that to increase the amount. How does the gentleman from Massachusetts claim this is germane?

Mr. GARDNER. The paragraph which it seeks to amend is the paragraph on the Immigration Service. It has just been contended by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that my proposal was not in order as a separate paragraph, and the Chair so ruled.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole deliberately reduced the amount. Of course, the Chair does not know how many Members were here, or anything about that. Now the gentleman comes along with his proposition and undertakes to increase the amount. The Chair rules it out of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to recommit the bill, and on that he demands the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to recommit.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12045) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12792. An act for the relief of Mrs. Thomas G. Prioleau, widow of Thomas G. Prioleau; and

H. R. 13153. An act for the relief of Pete Jelovac.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] calls up the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 13679) and asks unanimous consent to have the statement read in lieu of the report.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is the object in having the statement read instead of the report?

Mr. LEVER. As a matter of fact, I believe the statement is longer than the report.

Mr. MANN. I think it is the best statement on an appropriation conference report that I have ever seen. I have no objection to its being read.

Mr. LEVER. I am much obliged to the gentleman. I withdraw the request because the statement is longer than the report.

Mr. MANN. I do not object to the request. It is such a good statement that I think it really ought to be read.

Mr. LEVER. Very well.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 892).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13679) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915 having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 15, 23, 25, 26, 27, 28, 33, 34, 35, 44, 45, 46, 48, 58, 59, 60, 61, 65, 67, 71, 72, 79, 82, 100, 101, 103, 114, 123, and 132.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 18, 19, 21, 22, 24, 30, 32, 36, 37, 39, 42, 43, 52, 54, 55, 56, 57, 63, 64, 66, 68, 70, 75, 76, 80, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 104, 105, 112, 113, 121, 122, 125, 126, 127, 130, 133, and 135, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$339,880"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 16: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: On page 7 of the bill, line 2, after the word "that" at the end of the line, insert the following: ", in the judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the amendment strike out the words "this appropriation" and in lieu thereof insert the following: "the appropriation made herein for necessary expenses of the Weather Bureau outside of the city of Washington"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$375,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$478,170"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment No. 120: This amendment authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to inspect Irish potatoes in those States where a quarantine has been established by the Secretary of Agriculture against the movement of such potatoes in interstate commerce, and appropriates $100,000 for that purpose. The House agrees, with an amendment providing an appropriation of $50,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, with those States in the inspection of Irish potatoes where a quarantine has been or hereafter shall be established by the Secretary of Agriculture prohibiting the movement of such potatoes in interstate commerce. This authority is necessary on account of the outbreak of the powdery scab in the State of Maine, which strikes at the Irish potato industry of the country.

Amendment No. 121: This amendment strikes out the word "and" on page 63, line 23, of the bill, in the item for demonstrations on reclamation projects. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 122: This amendment inserts, after the word "advice," on page 63, line 23 of the bill, the following words, "and in other ways." The House recedes.

Amendment No. 123: This amendment inserts, on page 63, line 24 of the bill, after "projects," the words "and elsewhere." The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 124: This amendment increases the sum allowed by the House for demonstrations on reclamation projects by $25,000, making the total for that item $50,000. The House agrees with an amendment making the total $40,000.

Amendment No. 125: This amendment strikes out the word "land," in line 3 of page 64 of the bill, and inserts in lieu thereof the word "farming," so that the language will read, "International Dry Farming Congress." The House recedes.

Amendment No. 126: This amendment increases the appropriation by $10,000 allowed by the House for an exhibit at the next annual meeting of the International Dry Farming Congress, to be held at Wichita, Kans. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 127: This amendment strikes out the provision of the House bill making immediately available the sum referred to in amendment 126. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 128: This amendment increases the percentage of receipts allowed the States under the Weeks law from 5 to 25 per cent. The House agrees with an amendment allowing the increase in percentage and striking out the following language at the end of the amendment: "the purpose of this amendment being to increase the percentage payable to each State from moneys received as provided in said section from 5 to 25 per cent."

Amendment No. 129: This amendment makes the total for experiments and demonstrations in live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States $100,000, instead of $50,000, as allowed by the House. The House agrees with an amendment making the total $60,000.

Amendment No. 130: This amendment authorizes and directs the Secretary of Agriculture to prepare a plan for reorganizing the work of the Department of Agriculture, such plan to be submitted to Congress in the Book of Estimates for the fiscal year 1916, and provides that the estimates for the department for that year shall be prepared and submitted in accordance therewith. The House agrees.

Amendment No. 131: This amendment provides for leave of absence not to exceed 30 days in any one year for employees assigned to duty in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Guam, but provides that the same may be taken once in two years, and that leave of absence may be extended to three months if taken once in three years, or four months if taken once only in four years. The House agrees with amendment allowing 30 days' annual leave to these permanent employees at those stations, and in exceptional and meritorious cases, where the employee is ill, this leave may be extended, in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, not to exceed 30 days in any one year.

Amendment No. 132: This amendment makes available the money provided by the Weeks law for the employment of agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required for the purpose of said act in the city of Washington. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 133: This amendment enables the Secretary of Agriculture to exchange general scientific apparatus and laboratory equipment purchased from any appropriation of the Department of Agriculture. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 134: This amendment authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make studies of cooperation among farmers in the United States in matters of rural credits and other forms of cooperation in rural communities; to diffuse that information to the people of the country; and provides an appropriation of $50,000 for that purpose. The House agrees to the item with an amendment making the appropriation $40,000.

Amendment No. 135: This amendment provides for investigating the grading, weighing, and handling of naval stores, and the preparation of definite type samples thereof and appropriates $5,000 for that purpose. The House recedes.

Amendment No. 136: This amendment enables the Secretary of Agriculture to print certain maps relating to the location and extent of certain kelp beds on the Pacific coast and provides an appropriation of $7,000. The House agrees with an amendment inserting, after the word "Secretary," the following words: "of Agriculture."

Amendment No. 137: This amendment limits the amount of money that may be used by the Department of Agriculture for the purchase, maintenance, and repair of motor vehicles and motor boats necessary in the conduct of the work of the Department of Agriculture and makes the use except for official service of such vehicles and boats a misdemeanor punishable by fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than six months. The House agrees with an amendment providing that the lump-sum appropriations available for the work of the department shall be available for the purchase of motor vehicles and motor boats necessary in the conduct of the field work of the Department of Agriculture, and limits the amount that may be used for the purchase of such motor vehicles and motor boats to a sum not exceeding $10,000, and provides that such vehicles and boats shall be used for official service; and provides further that the Secretary of Agriculture on the first day of each regular session of Congress shall make a report to Congress showing the amount expended under this paragraph for such purchase during the preceding fiscal year.

Amendment No. 138: This amendment represents a corrected total.

On page 13 of the bill, line 21, the total for the Bureau of Animal Industry was left unchanged by the Senate. This total as corrected to correspond with the amendment of the Senate bill should have been $2,335,026. As the bill was amended in conference this total should read $2,320,026 and this correction was made by the conferees.

A. F. LEVER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas for a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What disposition was made of amendment 48, the restoration of the item for the purchase of garden seeds?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman answers that question the Chair would like to ask him a question. Is this a complete report?

Mr. LEVER. This is a complete report. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that the Senate receded on amendment numbered 48, the item for seeds is restored, and there is no change whatever in the amount.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want to make some inquiry about a matter that has just come to my attention, and I do not know of a better time or place than now and here. I have here a statement coming from Kellway & Son, of Langsport, Somerset, England, saying that they have entered into a contract with the Government of the United States for the sale of 40 tons of flower and garden seed for this year. Does the gentleman from South Carolina know anything about that?

Mr. LEVER. Not about that particular matter. The department advertises for bids for garden seeds, and I take it, if the correspondence is correct, the contract was made after due advertisement for bids.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What I want to get at is the policy involved—whether or not these seeds were purchased in England because it was hoped that the department would get a variety of seed that would be useful in introducing new plants into the United States or whether it was done because a lot of miscellaneous and badly mixed seeds could be purchased cheaper in England than they could in the United States.

Mr. LEVER. I take it that if this contract has been made with parties in England to furnish garden seed, that the contract was made for two reasons—first, that the seed in question tested up better than other seed offered the Government; and, second, that everything else being equal, the seeds were cheaper than they could be bought here. I take it that the gentleman has reference to garden seeds.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They are supposed to be garden and flower seeds. I take it that if they are for use for the next fiscal year that the seeds are not yet grown and could not possibly have been tested. I am wondering if, as is stated here, that they have had other contracts for the furnishing of seeds, that they are in any way responsible for the mess of stuff that has been sent out this year. I do not know whether the gentleman from South Carolina has had his attention called to it or not, but this year cucumber seed and cantaloupe seed were mixed indiscriminately; watermelon seed and pumpkin seed were mixed indiscriminately, six separate kinds of lettuce in one small package, all marked some sort of special lettuce; and yet there were six kinds in that one little package—all poor.

Mr. LEVER. I will say that I have not had my attention called to that matter because I have been busy with other things, but I am glad that the gentleman has called attention to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I feel sure that if the gentleman had had his attention called to it he would not have insisted on the restoration of the item for the purchase of garden seeds for another year, because the seeds sent out this year will unquestionably cause Congressmen a great deal of trouble. They will have difficulty in explaining how it is that cucumbers and cantaloupes are all mixed up together in the same package. I feel very sure that the cantaloupe served for breakfast will not mix well with the cucumber that is intended for salad for dinner.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that I have sent out the quota of seeds to which I am entitled, and I have had no complaint. The seeds have been planted and ought to be up by this time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman will hear from his constituents later after he gets home, if we ever adjourn, in the campaign. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is a policy in the department to give these contracts to foreign seed growers, as indicated by this letter?

Mr. LEVER. I would not say that it was a policy of the department to give it to foreign seed growers. I think, all things being equal, the department would favor its own people; but if the contract is made, I take it that it has been made for the reason that after advertising was done and bids came in and the testing was made it was found that they could buy better seed and cheaper there than they could in this country.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I take it that the seeds contracted for are not yet grown, as they are now in the plant.

Mr. LEVER. Every contract provides that the seed must come up to a certain test as to vitality.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. MANN. I happened to have a talk with Mr. Tracy as late as last night. Mr. Tracy is the man in the Agricultural Department who for many years has had the immediate charge of the seed distribution. He told me that there was a very great shortage of garden seeds in the United States; that he had endeavored to make arrangements for the purchase of seed wherever he could get it in the United States, but that there was still a shortage and that it would be necessary to buy more or less seed in Europe.

Mr. LEVER. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How can anyone know that there is a shortage on the 25th of June of seeds in the plants that are now in bloom?

Mr. MANN. If my friend from Kansas was at all familiar with the seed trade, he would understand that contracts are usually made in advance for the raising of seed, and that is the way the shortage occurs. People do not start in, as a rule, to raise large quantities of seed unless they know where they can dispose of it. These contracts are usually made in advance with people who raise the seed. In many cases contracts are made where the person furnishes the seed from which the seed is to be grown.

Mr. LEVER. That is a correct statement of fact.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it not true that we have large numbers of great seed growers in the United States? How could it be contended that there was a shortage of seed and that the contract was necessarily made with the seed grower in Somerset, England?

Mr. MANN. For instance, most of the garden pea seed is raised in Idaho, while the sweet pea seed is raised in California. They know very well at this season of the year whether they are going to have a reasonable crop of seed that will be in the market.

Mr. LEVER. And, more than that, the department knows the amount of seed that will be available.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that I have promised to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, if I may yet have the indulgence of the chairman for a moment further——

Mr. LEVER. I yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] say is the fact, that American seed growers were not competing in these bids for congressional seeds for next year, I am just wondering if it is because they feel they can not compete with the seed growers of foreign countries under present conditions.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the language of either the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] or myself would bear that inference. The proposition we lay down as the fact is that we can determine the amount of seed to be produced the year following largely from the bids of those who are bidding for the seeds.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Has it ever occurred before that it was necessary for the United States to go to foreign countries to secure 40 tons of flower and garden seeds?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to me there?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] were familiar with the seed business of the country he would know that there are certain varieties of garden seed that can not be procured in this country of the same quality as can be procured on the other side of the water, particularly in Holland and France.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That can not be urged in behalf of the garden seeds that are sent out by Congressmen, especially this year.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Let me say this, that any American dealer of extensive character in garden seeds, if he were to quote prices on certain varieties of garden seeds, would be obliged to purchase those seeds in Europe, so that the Government by dealing direct with the foreign dealer is thereby saving a considerable amount. I have had some experience in that line, being engaged in a small way in dealing in seeds, and I know that these American dealers are obliged to place their orders with the foreign grower for certain varieties of garden seeds in order to supply the American market, and the department, in my judgment, is in line with good business methods when it is placing its contracts with foreign dealers.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That may be where seeds are raised and sold for private distribution; but in this case I can not concede that the gentleman from Colorado has stated the real reason for this enormous purchase of seeds in foreign countries, because the standard of the seed does not come up to the standard that he has indicated in garden seeds.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon, and I will take issue with him on the statement regarding the quality of the seeds.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know something about the character of seeds sent out this year, and they are, as I have stated, a badly mixed lot of poor seeds.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman what the conferees did with Senate amendment No. 41? I will state to the gentleman that I have received a great many letters and telegrams in regard to this particular amendment, which applies to the funds of the General Education Board, and these letters and telegrams insist that whatever may be the disposition of Congress in regard to the matter, the wording of that amendment was unjust and was an unwarranted reflection upon the members of the Education Board and the work that is being done by it.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to answer that question. I, too, have had a great many letters on that proposition, and I agree fully with the spirit of those letters.

In this connection I desire to say that the General Education Board since 1906 has been doing cooperative work with the Department of Agriculture in its farm demonstration practices in the South, and that with these funds a tremendous revolution has been accomplished in the agricultural practices of the South. I for one desire to have it go upon record that I very greatly appreciate the work the General Education Board did among the southern people. The House conferees were not willing that there should be enacted a law which on its face slapped in the face the General Education Board. We did not feel that it would be very generous or charitable or that it would show the proper motive and impulse on the part of those who have been the beneficiaries in a measure of this fund. Hence the Senate receded on this language and accepted the following language:

$673,240: Provided, That the expense of such service shall be defrayed from this appropriation and such cooperative funds as may be voluntarily contributed by State, county, and municipal agencies, associations of farmers and individual farmers, universities, colleges, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, other local associations of business men, business organizations, and individuals within the State.

The Senate agreed to that language, and that is in the law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The amendment which has been proposed by the conferees carries out the purpose and spirit of the Senate amendment without the words which have been construed by some as a censure and reflection on the education board.

Mr. LEVER. Exactly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman that I thoroughly agree with him as to the great value of the work that is being done in the country, and particularly in the South, with funds from this board, both as to higher or secondary education, and also as to rural education, and the work that has been done by representatives of the board with reference to boys' corn clubs and girls' canning clubs, and so forth. It is a work so valuable that it ought to be encouraged and not discouraged or frowned upon. In this connection I desire to read and have printed in the RECORD a letter from Prof. Bruce R. Payne, a distinguished educator and president of the George Peabody College for Teachers at Nashville, Tenn., and also a telegram from Mr. James E. Caldwell, one of the most prominent citizens of Tennessee.

The letter and telegram are as follows:

GEORGE PEABODY COLLEGE FOR TEACHERS,
Nashville, Tenn., May 27, 1914.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice from the Associated Press account that there has been introduced a measure in the United States Senate depriving the South of the services of the General Education Board in respect to farm-demonstration work; also another measure has been introduced endeavoring to revoke the charter of the General Education Board.

I have been most intimately connected with the work of the General Education Board in the South for the past 10 years, and I wish to bear testimony that no organization, no individual has done as much for the building up of our higher education, of our secondary education, for the wonderful advancement and improvement of rural education and methods of agriculture in the South as has this organization and its representatives.

Many of them are southern men, and I wish to assert, without fear of successful contradiction, that they have worked through our southern people exclusively, have not even imposed their own suggestions, except when requested to do so, and have left it to the wisdom and good sense of our good people to spend for social uplift and donations made.

Furthermore, there have been literally thousands of boys and girls in the Boys' Corn Clubs and the Girls' Canning Clubs whose lives have been made richer, whose earning capacity has been increased, whose outlook upon their own future has become more thrilling because of the work carried on by the southern people whose salaries have been paid and whose traveling expenses have been furnished by the General Education Board. The southern representatives of this board created our high-school systems

No greater calamity could happen to the educational interests of the South and the 148,000 teachers therein than the revoking of the charter of the General Education Board. It will be a great calamity if these men should be divorced from the farm-demonstration work, which they have inaugurated of their own free will and accord, without the assistance (and sometimes without the encouragement) of the Government. Their accumulated experience can not be duplicated by others. Their personal interest in our people is a matter of tender regard.

Every man and woman in the South, and every representative of the best interests of our people, owes a debt of deep gratitude and sincere appreciation to the General Education Board and its representatives. Whatever is done in this matter should be done in a spirit of gratitude. But I hope that nothing will be done that will deprive the 8,000,000 children of the South, the citizens of to-morrow, of the services of these men who have given so much of their lives and of their time.

I beg, therefore, to urge upon you, in representing us, the grateful beneficiaries of the first and greatest and most liberal philanthropical organization of America, not to interfere with their endeavors, for in so doing you will throw the most appalling hindrance before us, who are fighting on the firing line for the economic, intellectual, and moral freedom of the South.

Sincerely, yours, BRUCE R. PAYNE.

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 1, 1914.

JOE BYRNS,
Congressman from Tennessee, Washington, D. C.:

It appears that the Agricultural appropriation bill contains language reflecting on the General Education Board in a most offensive manner. As I have a good deal of personal knowledge of the workings of that board and an acquaintance with the men directing its affairs, I am in position to know that it is not deserving of any sort of censure; but, on the contrary, so far as Nashville and Tennessee in particular and the whole South in general are concerned, there is every reason to be under lasting obligation and should be deeply grateful for the favors which that board has shown. The George Peabody College for Teachers, at Nashville, owes its very existence to the General Education Board, which has rendered it most valuable assistance in every way and responds to its needs promptly and unhesitatingly. It would be nothing short of a crime for Congress to use any language reflecting on the General Education Board or any of the people connected therewith, and I sincerely trust that you will exert yourself to the utmost to prevent any such outrage being done.

JAMES E. CALDWELL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss the same amendment which was referred to in the colloquy between the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. This is Senate amendment No. 41 and affects the appropriation for farmers' cooperative demonstration work. The House bill carried an appropriation of $378,240, which was increased in the Senate by $300,000, with a proviso that no part of that sum should be used in connection with any money contributed or tendered by the General Education Board or any like organization.

And, as the chairman said, the conferees agreed to a substitute for the Senate proviso by providing that it may be used with cooperative funds contributed by States, counties, and municipalities, and by public organizations within the State, so that under the amendment as agreed to by the conferees there can be hereafter no contribution to the farmers' cooperative demonstration work from the General Education Board, because it is not an organization within the State. Now, Mr. Speaker, if Congress determines to make the appropriation sufficient to defray the expenses of this farmers' cooperative demonstration work, there can certainly be no objection; but I do wish to refer in a brief way to this work as it has been conducted in the past and the great aid which has been rendered through the General Education Board. This farmers' cooperative demonstration work is the most valuable activity which has ever been organized to help the average farmer, no matter in what section he lives, but particularly in the South, where it had its origin. This work was initiated by Dr. Seaman A. Knapp, who was put in charge of the work for the eradication of the boll weevil, and out of his efforts for the eradication of the boll weevil came the organization by him of what came to be known as the farmers' cooperative demonstration work. He desired and many of the citizens of the South who had become familiar with its great benefits desired to extend it to all the Southern States, in addition to those which were suffering from the ravages of the boll weevil. At that time Congress declined to make the necessary appropriation, and later Dr. Knapp appealed to various sources and finally to the General Education Board, and that board in 1906 began to make its contributions, and since that time has contributed as much as $1,000,000 in annual amounts.

Now, great benefits, as the chairman has well said, have been received by the farmers of the South through this work, and it has been made possible through the donations of this General Education Board. It is not for Congress to impugn the source from which the General Education Board obtained the money nor can we with propriety do so. Congress has for years refused to appropriate for this great work a sufficient sum, and it is to the credit of this board that it recognized the value of the work and made possible its continuance. The fact is that this money was accepted with the knowledge and approval of the President and of the several Secretaries of Agriculture, all the officials of the Agricultural Department, and of the people of the States of the South, who have enjoyed the benefits of this farmers' cooperative demonstration work. In explanation of this farmers' cooperative demonstrative work it may be said that county agents go upon the farm and bring the knowledge of better farming methods to the farmer himself. There have also been established boys' corn clubs, girls' clubs, girls' canning clubs, and other organizations of boys and girls seeking to familiarize them with the work of the farm and also tending to make rural life more attractive.

Now, in another body and from private sources there have been criticisms of the manner in which this fund has been expended and used. I have had it from the highest authority that at all times this cooperation by the board had no strings attached. The General Education Board heartily approved of this work and made annual appropriations therefor, but the expenditures were made entirely by the officials of the Department of Agriculture. The board had nothing to do with the sections or States in which the work was to be done, with the employment of agents or the other officials who were to conduct the work, and it had no connection with any legislation which was enacted from time to time for the enlargement of this work. Nor has there been to my knowledge—and I can speak from knowledge of the conduct of this work in North Carolina—any politics in the prosecution of this farmers' cooperative demonstration work, nor has the General Education Board sought to influence its action in the slightest degree.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Is it not true that a member of the General Education Board is our Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. SMALL. I am inclined to think he is a member of the General Education Board, or has been.

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. FESS. That probably is an explanation, somewhat, of the opposition?

Mr. SMALL. Well, I do not know whether it explains any opposition to this cooperation or not. I can say this, however, that this cooperation had the entire approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wilson, and has, I presume, the entire approval of the present Secretary of Agriculture, Dr. Houston, and those who know the latter gentleman will testify that the fact that he has been a member of the general education board would not in the slightest degree militate against the proper and wise expenditure of this fund in cooperation with the farmers' cooperative demonstration work.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the citizens of North Carolina—and I believe I bespeak the sentiments of the farmers and all citizens of other Southern States—appreciate and are grateful for these contributions which made possible the establishment and enlargement and prosecution of this farmers' cooperative demonstration work to the extent to which it has been prosecuted and which has almost brought about a renaissance in agricultural methods.

In every Southern State there has been an increased production of all the staple crops. New and better methods, diversification of crops, better implements, and more comfortable homes have enthused the farmer and rural life has been made more attractive. I have stated before, and it will bear repetition, this class of work has wrought more for the benefit of the average farmer than has ever been before accomplished. Its value has been recognized outside of the South. In the preceding paragraph of this bill is carried an appropriation of $400,000 for the same character of educational work among the farmers of other sections of the country. It may now be said to have earned universal approval. This is the highest commendation of the farmers' cooperative demonstration work.

Now, I am in favor of Congress appropriating the entire sum necessary to continue this work. Through the generous cooperation of the General Education Board it has passed through its experimental stage and its value has been amply demonstrated. Its critics have been silenced. Congress is simply discharging a duty it should have assumed in the beginning. But as a citizen of one of the States of the South I resent any insinuation that this money heretofore contributed by the board has been expended in any other than a proper and legitimate way, and I assert again the great benefits that have accrued to the farmers of the South. Why, Mr. Speaker, this contribution by the board does not represent the entire amount which has been expended in this work. For instance, this work has been instituted in almost every county in North Carolina under a cooperative plan of contribution. The county authorities would contribute, say, from $300 to $1,000. The Department of Agriculture would contribute out of this fund from the board a like amount, and frequently local organizations and individuals would still contribute a like sum.

The whole amount would be controlled and expended by the officials of the farmers' cooperative demonstration work, representing the department, in paying the salary of a county agent, who would conduct this work among the farmers. The selection of this county agent was made by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. Speaker, the farmers' cooperative demonstration work was devised and initiated by Dr. Seaman A. Knapp. He was reared and educated in Iowa, but had resided in the South for about 25 years prior to his death in 1911. He came to know our people and our resources. He also knew our limitations and handicaps. When the boll weevil began its ravages, he was detailed by the Department of Agriculture to study the problem and propose some method of eradication. Among other remedies, he strongly urged diversification of crops in substitution of the one-crop system of cotton. Through the wisdom of this man it is now conceded that the boll weevil may be controlled in large degree, and that what was regarded as a great calamity was in reality also a blessing.

Out of this work grew the farmers' cooperative demonstration work, which has spread throughout the country. This latter work has also made possible the Lever law for further agricultural extension work through the State agricultural colleges. Dr. Knapp was a pioneer and a builder. He had a constructive mind. Above all, he gave his talents and himself in the service of man. His work will be his most enduring monument.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER in the chair). The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes additional to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. SMALL. Now, Mr. Speaker, just a word about the cooperative work of the General Education Board in North Carolina. Through the contributions by this board an organized attack has been made upon the hookworm disease. There was prejudice in my State originally against this organized work and against the source from which the money came. But that has entirely disappeared, and in the hundred counties of North Carolina there have been county appropriations averaging $250 to the county, in addition to the amount contributed by the General Education Board. And the State of North Carolina has made a general appropriation of $8,000. In the great campaign which has been waged for better educational facilities in North Carolina the General Education Board has generously cooperated. Their contributions were made at a most opportune time and have been of very great value to the State.

I wish to say in conclusion that the people of the South, having been the beneficiaries of contributions from this board, which have been wisely expended and with great benefit to the people, it ill becomes Congress or any citizen of the country, and certainly any citizen of the South, to impugn the motives of the donor or to exhibit ingratitude. I distinctly disclaim any such sentiments for the people of my State or of any Southern State. We are neither ingrates nor cowards. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used 32 minutes and has 28 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this conference report shows the great power that conferees have in enacting legislation on an appropriation bill. I venture the statement that there are not six Members in this House who are acquainted with the legislation enacted in this conference report. Here we have a bill containing 133 Senate amendments, brought into the House and referred to conference, without the Members being given any opportunity whatsoever to vote upon these all-important amendments, unless the House does the almost impossible and votes down this conference report in its entirety. Every one of us knows how futile it is to attempt that process in the closing days of a Congress. And I wish to call the attention of this House to two or three important amendments which I believe would not carry if the House had been given opportunity to vote upon them.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. GARNER. Was not the gentleman given his opportunity, when the proposition of referring this bill to the conference was up, of having a vote on these particular provisions of which he speaks?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER. You agreed they should go to conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; and we had every expectation that some of these measures, and particularly those amendments that were beyond the power of this committee to legislate upon, would be disagreed to, and that there would not be a full and final agreement.

Now, my time is limited, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has told me he can not yield me any more time. So I will have to decline to yield further.

One amendment I wish to call attention to is that amendment which seeks to amend section 13 of the Appalachian and White Mountain Forest Reserve act, where, instead of the existing law granting 5 per cent of the profits from the sale of these lands purchased by national funds in the establishment of these national forests, there is an increase of 25 per cent. How can any person justify the diversion of 25 per cent of the profits of national funds for the benefit of only the States in which those forests reserves are located? It is true that millions of dollars have been expended already in the purchase of abandoned lands in the Appalachian Mountain Reserve, and, I believe, some on the Pacific coast. Instead of the law providing 5 per cent to be diverted for the use of the schools and roads, they have increased the amount 25 per cent. Have not the taxpayers of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and the Great Plains States that have contributed so much to the support of this Government, and who have furnished their proportionate part of these funds to rehabilitate these abandoned farms and cut-over forest lands along the Atlantic coast a right to the fruits of the funds that are invested in these abandoned lands?

There is another instance of want of proper consideration to which I wish to direct attention.

The genial chairman of the committee, whom we all like and whom we regard as efficient in his separate branch, has gone pretty far in agreeing to an amendment that belongs particularly to the Post Office Committee, amendment No. 101, which extends the franking privilege to all those agricultural colleges that have the benefit of the Lever bill as to all their correspondence, bulletins, and reports. Now, the Post Office Committee during my 10 years of service has been particularly guardful in trying to prevent the extension of the franking privilege. State superintendents of education and boards of education have been clamoring for the extension of the franking privilege. They have been willing to have the mail privileges extended so that they could have the advantage of the second-class rate, or 1-cent-a-pound rate; and the committee has declined to give them that privilege. And yet we have here this committee agreeing to this Senate amendment without any amendment, except one, and that makes it more liberal. You would think that these conferees on this amendment would have agreed to the restriction as placed in the Senate; but instead of limiting these franking privileges to only one official or employee of the agricultural colleges they grant it ad libitum to any person connected with them.

It may be all right for some committees to transgress the powers that naturally belong to other committees, but it has been my observation that it is better legislation to leave that which belongs exclusively to one committee for that committee to consider, rather than have conferees who have not given the subject any consideration agree to this character of legislation without an opportunity of the House to vote upon it. I know that the conferees, the genial gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LEE] are overzealous in looking after the rights and privileges of agricultural colleges; but I say that they have no right to foist upon this bill legislation that is beyond their prerogatives. While I recognize the futility at this late day in the session, when every effort is being made to pass these appropriation bills, of voting down this conference report, I still believe that if the chairman had brought in a partial report, leaving open to discussion and vote some of these amendments that carry such legislation that is beyond the power of the committee, this House would have had the opportunity then to vote down these amendments, and the gentleman could have gone back with a proposition to further insist on disagreement to the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back two minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like a little time.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 130, I think, was agreed to, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to prepare a plan for reorganizing, redirecting, and systematizing the work of the Department of Agriculture as the interests of economical and efficient administration may require, and then provides that the estimates for the next year shall be made in accordance with this new plan.

I would have no objection whatever to the Secretary of Agriculture or any other Secretary making recommendations to Congress for the reorganization, the redirecting, and systematizing of the work of his department. Of course, that part of it as to economical and efficient administration is just inserted for sound. That would be the ostensible purpose always, but whether it will be accomplished or not is another thing. Now, the Secretary next year is required to make his estimates in accordance with the plan of reorganization which has not met the approval of the Congress. Of course, that will require the committee to bring in a bill according to the new plan, or else discard the estimates. I think the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] next winter will greatly regret that we put this provision in the bill.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this language was agreed to by the conferees on the part of the House at the very earnest insistence of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. He wants to fix it so that Congress shall have nothing to do with it. Why should he not present his plan to Congress and let the Committee on Agriculture recommend to the House what should be done, instead of leaving it to the Secretary, who, of course, will have to be guided by his subordinates in the department, and every one of them will be seeking to increase his own pay.

Mr. LEVER. The committee on conference believes that the contrary will be the case. We believe that the reorganization of the Department of Agriculture will eliminate duplication and lost motion to such an extent that they ought to run this department on a great deal less money and with more efficiency than it is run now.

Mr. MANN. I think it is safe to say that the Agricultural appropriation bill next year will carry more money than this one, notwithstanding the reorganization. Congress is perfectly willing at any time to accept suggestions that will do away with duplications of work, but here is a proposition that absolutely leaves it to the Secretary to put the matter in such shape that confusion must exist, whichever way we go, because if we take the estimates we shall have points of order made constantly against items in the bill for the reason that the salaries are not provided by law.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that I realize that difficulty and have anticipated it.

Mr. MANN. You have anticipated it, but you have not provided against it.

Mr. LEVER. I have not provided against it, but I have not had a chance to.

Mr. MANN. It would be an easy matter for the Secretary of Agriculture to make his recommendation to the committee. There is not a department of the Government in Washington that would not like to have this privilege, and not one where it would not be abused, even though the head of the department were against the abuse, because the head of the department does not run the department. The men under him run it. Every one of them is human, like the rest of us, and they would like to get increases of compensation.

So much for that. I think it is a mistake to do that thing. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman what is the effect of the increase in the farm-management and farm-demonstration and cooperation-demonstration work upon the procedure which will be followed under the so-called Lever law?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Illinois will recall that the appropriation for the encouragement of the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice has been carried in one fund heretofore.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. LEVER. The Senate divided that, giving a certain amount, $250,000, for investigational work and $400,000 for demonstration work pure and simple in those States outside the cotton belt. The House conferees agreed with a slight reduction in the total. The effect under the Lever bill will be this, in my judgment: Under the provisions of the Lever bill the States will get only $10,000 each for the coming fiscal year. It will be necessary, in the first instance, for the States to accept the provisions of that bill. I think the funds provided for here and in the item following are going to be very valuable in preparing the States and in preparing the men for taking advantage of the funds which will accrue rapidly to the States under the Lever bill.

Mr. MANN. What I wanted to ascertain was whether increases in the amount of the items and the separation of the two items in the one case were made in contemplation of the putting into operation of the Lever bill, or whether that was entirely irrespective of the Lever bill?

Mr. LEVER. It was irrespective of that proposition. It did not come up. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 15 minutes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina rose.

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE].

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Five minutes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to interrogate the gentleman a little. I wanted to inquire if this language in amendment 130, on page 172—the one just referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]—in regard to the reorganization of the department was not in the original language of the provision reported by the Committee on Agriculture in the House bill?

Mr. LEVER. I think it is in almost the identical language, probably the identical language.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. The identical language against which the point of order was made, and which went out in the House of Representatives?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. If the gentleman will allow me to be personal a moment, I think at that time the gentleman agreed with me that these estimates ought to be made under the law as they are now made and not in the way indicated in this bill. I presume the gentleman has had a change of heart?

Mr. LEVER. Well, I can not say that I have had a change of heart as a matter of fact, but the gentleman has been on conference committees long enough to know that a man sometimes agrees to a proposition put in by the Senate when he has not had a change of heart on the proposition.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. It occurred to me that there might have been some suggestion followed in another body.

Mr. LEVER. No. As a matter of fact, the language was put in by the Senate without any suggestion from this side of the House.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. But a suggestion that came from the same source as that which came to the House committee, in all probability?

Mr. LEVER. I will not say that something of that kind did not happen.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. LEVER. I yield to my colleague, Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I wish first to congratulate the conferees on the expeditious and satisfactory manner in which they have settled the many questions involved in this great appropriation bill. When we take into consideration the character of this bill, the many subjects covered by it, and the number of people interested in it, it is but natural to expect a substantial increase in the appropriations by the Senate. The total amount carried by the bill when it passed the House was $18,988,232. As it passed the Senate it carried an appropriation of $20,890,012, but the conference report as agreed upon by the conferees has reduced this amount to $19 865,832. The additional appropriations which have been agreed upon in conference are not excessive, and careful consideration of them will convince almost anyone that there is justification for each and every increase. Of the total amount added by the Senate, $300,000 is for an item for farm cooperative demonstration and for the purpose of meeting the ravages of the boll weevil, the report providing that this amount can be spent only in connection with such cooperative funds as may be contributed by States, counties, municipalities, or local agencies with the State. This large increase was inserted because of the decision of the Senate to discontinue the policy which has heretofore prevailed of cooperating with the General Education Board. The funds used by this board are contributed by Mr. John D. Rockefeller. My understanding is that 600 of the employees engaged in this demonstration work throughout the country, though ostensibly in the service of the Government, have received their compensation from Mr. Rockefeller's board. They are Government officials whose names are on the Government pay roll, but they receive only a dollar a month, or some nominal amount, from the Government, and the balance of their compensation they receive from Mr. Rockefeller, so that they are under obligation to him for the salaries they receive. Whether or not Mr. Rockefeller's money is tainted, as it is alleged, certainly this Government is big and prosperous enough to engage in this most helpful work without entering into partnership with him.

When it is known that the farm demonstrator is in fact as well as in name the agent of the Government, paid by the people and not by Mr. Rockefeller or any other individual, he will receive at the hands of the farmer a more cordial reception, and his suggestions will be more readily accepted by the farmer. For this reason I approve of the conference report in this regard.

I wish to say that I do not sympathize with the attacks recently made against this board by a Member of the Senate. It is undoubtedly true that it has done much for the South not only in an educational way, but also in assisting in this demonstration work. But this report makes no criticism of the board or its work, nor does it propose to restrict farm demonstration work. It simply provides for the dissolution of the partnership heretofore existing between the department and Mr. Rockefeller. It does not mean that he can not continue independent efforts, and I sincerely trust that he will do so, but I think it preferable that it should not be done in partnership with the department.

It is but natural to expect these demonstrators to realize their obligation to the Standard Oil Co. for their salaries, and it is unwise to have any officials or employees of the Government under obligation to that or any other corporation. [Applause.]

Another Senate amendment agreed upon by the conferees, which I am satisfied will meet with the approval of both Houses, is the appropriation of $40,000 for the study of cooperation among the farmers of the United States in matters of rural credits and of other forms of cooperation in rural communities. The judicious expenditure of this amount by the Secretary of Agriculture is bound to result in furnishing to the farmers of the country much valuable information as to the benefits to be derived from cooperation in rural communities. In many sections of the country cooperative agricultural societies have been formed, and the result of these cooperative efforts on the part of the farmers should be of inestimable value to the agricultural interests. In my own district many agricultural clubs have been organized, and at least one, the Beech Island Agricultural Club, has existed for more than a generation. Once a month these clubs meet for the purpose of discussing live questions of interest to the members and as a result of the exchange of views at these meetings the members of the clubs have become recognized as most progressive farmers. Investigation by the department will enable the Secretary to acquaint all farmers with the result of the experiments in cooperation by these agricultural associations throughout the country. Another form of rural cooperation is that obtaining in drainage districts organized under State laws, and the department can investigate the success or failure of such projects, the crops grown upon lands thus reclaimed, and the value of the lands before and after reclamation, thus enabling other communities to intelligently judge whether it is wise to form such drainage districts. Such an investigation may also result in some plan whereby the National Government can cooperate with the States and with local organizations in draining swamp lands.

Again, many rural credit societies now exist in the country, and a study of their methods, the success or failure of the organizations will materially aid in the framing of a rural-credit law.

Another item agreed upon by the conferees which I think will meet with the hearty approval of both Houses, certainly of Members from cotton-growing States, is that of $10,000 for the purpose of preparing for sale to associations and groups of men at the primary markets in the cotton-growing States a set of cotton samples as standardized by the Government and a sample of the bleached and unbleached yarn made from the different grades, showing the tensile strength and bleaching quality of each. Recognizing that there should be one uniform standard for all commercial grades, the department, since 1910, has been doing what it could to cause the Government standards to be adopted. During the last year or two many of the larger markets have secured the set of samples prepared and sold by the department, and before very long they will be found at every market of any importance.

The adoption of the Government standards has of course been voluntary, but if legislation now pending is enacted into law, the Government standards will prevail upon all the exchanges and the farmer will no longer find identical names given in different markets to cotton of different quality. This item of $10,000 will enable the department to sell at less than actual cost a set of the samples. They are now placed in a case in the cover of which is a photograph of the samples as they leave the department, so that if by careless handling the sample of strict good middling, say, should accumulate trash, the interested person can by comparison with the photograph detect that the sample is not in the condition in which it left the department. There can be no doubt about the great benefit to be derived from furnishing these samples so that the producer can become educated in the grading of his own cotton. By experience the buyer becomes expert in grading, and the farmer who is not an expert at it has to accept the decision of the buyer. Unfortunately the buyer is not always the most patriotic and philantrophic of mankind. For instance, as a result of the investigations of the bureau of markets, it was discovered that 19,000 bales of the Oklahoma crop of last year, examined by experts of the department, were middling fair and strict good middling, but were paid for by the buyers at the ruling price for good middling. Even where the buyers admitted the cotton to be superior in grade to good middling, they declared they recognized no grade higher than good middling. What they doubtless meant was that in buying they recognized no higher grade, but in selling they did recognize it. The department's investigation showed 19,000 bales of strict good middling and middling fair, which were bought as good middling, and on this the New York differences entitled some one to a total of over $20,000 in premiums above the price of good middling. Under these circumstances there is no inducement to the farmer to yield to the demands upon him to produce the higher grades. What is true of Oklahoma is doubtless true of the other cotton-growing States, and in this connection it is interesting to note the statement of Mr. Marsh, formerly president of the New York Cotton Exchange, who, when before the Committee on Agriculture, declared that the farmers of Texas last year, on account of lack of information as to the value of their low grades of cotton had lost more than $40,000,000.

The question is how to furnish these samples to the farmers in such manner as to allow ready access to them and at the same time to preserve the reputation of the Government's samples. Manifestly it would never do to simply prepare these samples and furnish them to every market, placing them at the freight depots of the railroads or other public places in charge of no one, because by careless handling it would be impossible in a few days to distinguish the various grades, and the value of the samples of the Government would be lost. Until some better plan is devised, I think it wise to adopt the plan agreed upon by the conferees of furnishing them to primary markets only, where associations or groups of men ask for them, assuring the department of some preservation, and follow this up with some inspection at stated periods thereafter, in order to determine whether the samples have been preserved. My own view is that a wise solution of the question would be the merging of the position of cotton reporter and farm demonstrator. The cotton reporter now visits the gins to ascertain the number of bales ginned. He receives only $250 to $350 for his services, and consequently does not devote very much of his time to it. Likewise, the farm demonstrator receives little compensation. If the two positions were combined, the Government could then secure the services of a competent man, who could devote all of his time to the work. While the crop was being marketed he could secure the gin figures, and at the same time have control and supervision of the Government samples at the markets, and during the rest of the year he could carry on his farm demonstration. It would, of course, necessitate some readjustment of the work between the Census and Agricultural Departments, but the merging of the two jobs would, in my judgment, be in the interest of efficiency.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill to be the best ever reported by this committee. It not only provides assistance to the farmer in increasing his yield, but also provides for assisting him in marketing his crop once it is made. We are spending millions annually for agricultural experimental work and investigations. This is wise and proper. The farmer has not the time, equipment, or training for questionable experiments. So intent is he on making ends meet that he has not the time or money to spend in experiments, and the department has undertaken this work for him. As a result of these investigations there has been much progress, new methods have been introduced and yields increased, but until this year we provided no means of effectively communicating the result of the investigations to the man in the field. It is true that we endeavored to send it to him in bulletins, but this could not be as effective as the practical demonstration provided for in the bill we passed at this session known as the Lever extension bill, carrying a large appropriation to cooperate with the States in agricultural education. If we shall place in charge of this work men who have not only been educated at agricultural colleges but in addition have had some practical experience in farming, letting them demonstrate to the farmer the result of the experiments and investigations, the farmer will profit by the experience of others and increased yields and greater profits will result.

In this bill we also recognize that we must assist him in marketing his crop. I believe the establishment of the Bureau of Markets one of the most constructive pieces of legislation we have enacted affecting the agricultural interests. The small appropriation we made for this purpose last year has been spent largely in organizing the bureau, but it has yet been able to do some excellent work, such as that heretofore referred to by me, in the investigation of the marketing of the cotton crop in Oklahoma, and in my own State it has been carrying on an interesting investigation as to the marketing of our long-staple cotton. As in the case of middling fair and strict good middling cotton in Oklahoma, the producer has seldom received what he was entitled to for his long-staple cotton. The Bureau of Markets this week sends two of its agents abroad to investigate the market for this cotton. It will be interesting to learn the difference in price paid the farmer and that finally paid for this long-staple cotton. When we know what becomes of this difference we can endeavor to devise ways and means to remedy the condition.

According to the experts, 57 per cent of the cost of agricultural products is lost between the producer and the consumer. In other words, when the consumer pays $1, say, for a bushel of potatoes or any other product, the farmer gets but 43 cents of that dollar, the balance being eaten up by the middlemen. Certainly there can be no field of endeavor richer in opportunity than that now assigned to this bureau. It is also making an investigation with a view to improving the method of marketing vegetables and fruits. In my district, where we have a soil adapted to the production of all crops, our progressive farmers have engaged in the production of cantaloupes, asparagus, cucumbers, and all kinds of truck. They ship their product to the northern and eastern markets and under the present system wait and pray.

When they shipped, the market price may have been good; but when they hear from their shipment they may be informed that the bottom dropped out of the market; that the stuff was not properly crated or arrived in bad condition, the car not being iced, or some other information equally as disastrous to the hopes they builded upon their crop. Sometimes what they learn is true and sometimes it is not. Sometimes the carrier is at fault, and sometimes the bad condition of the cantaloupes, for instance, is due to the man at the icing station being paid to keep the car properly iced placing about half the ice needed, and charging the railroad for double the quantity furnished. Then again, and perhaps more often, it is due to the fraud of the commission merchant. Sometimes when the market is glutted the consumer does not benefit. The retailer will not reduce the price of the fruit, because he fears his customers will not purchase if the price fluctuates greatly, so he continues to charge high prices when he is purchasing from the jobbers at exceedingly low prices. But whether he gets high or low prices under such circumstances, one thing is certain, the producer is informed that the fruit did not bring enough to pay the freight. The bureau is now tracing many of these shipments. At my request they will trace some from the field in South Carolina to the consumer, and we can ascertain whether they do arrive in bad condition and the prices received by the jobbers and retailers as compared with those paid to the producer.

We can truthfully say to the country that this bill will aid the agricultural interests. Among its items is one for $353,000 for the Office of Public Roads to investigate road materials and furnish expert engineers to assist local authorities in road improvement. Too much emphasis can not be given to this good work. Again, we are appropriating $96,280 to assist local authorities in drainage work. Where drainage districts are formed, expert engineers must survey the district; and if the Government can furnish this expert aid, it saves several thousand dollars to the persons residing in the district. I remember having such a survey made at the request of persons interested in such a drainage district in Hampton County, of my district. Then, for the first time, we are making an appropriation for the investigation of production and marketing of cane sirup, an industry which should be developed and made profitable. For the control and prevention of diseases in cotton, potatoes, truck crops, and so forth, we appropriate $46,000.

We are told by those in charge of the Bureau of Animal Industry that the loss from animal disease annually amounts to $212,850,000. This stupendous loss accounts for the large appropriation made for this bureau for establishing quarantines, and so forth. Of the total appropriation of $2,320,026, the amount of $400,000 is to be spent in eradicating southern cattle tick and eradication of scabies in sheep and cattle. This work is in keeping with the work we have undertaken to eradicate hog cholera, for which purpose we have appropriated $500,000 this year and which will be used in cooperation with the States and enable local authorities to furnish serum to the farmers.

Of course there are some people who scoff at the work carried on by this great department of the Government, but this spirit is confined mostly to those people who believe that they already know everything that can possibly be known about agriculture and who generally delight to call themselves planters instead of farmers. The farmers, as a rule, appreciate the work of the department. Theorists and economists, noting the continued drift of population from the farm to the city, cry "back to the farm," but unless you can make farming profitable you can not hope to make it attractive. You will in vain picture the beauties of life on the farm if, as a matter of fact, the man on the farm finds he can not make a living. Make it profitable for him, and the farmer will himself make it attractive. He is not only intelligent, but he is now educated. The introduction of rural free delivery and the installation of telephone systems has brought him in touch with the world. He is sending his children to college and educating himself. In my own district during my three years here the number of rural routes has been increased from 89 to 114, and wherever there is a community having poor mail facilities you find the farmers seeking to have them improved, thus showing their desire to keep up with the doings of the world. The boys of the farm are learning and adopting improved methods.

The work carried on by the department assisting the organization of corn clubs has borne fruit, the boys who recently visited Washington—the winners of contests in the various States—boasting of yields running from 55 bushels in South Dakota per acre to 235 bushels per acre in Alabama. If we can more than double the yield of corn per acre, it is certain that by improved methods we can increase the yield of other crops. Jerry Moore, the champion corn grower of South Carolina, by his success became the most talked-of person in the State. His name was so popular that an old preacher in my country, reading of his accomplishments one Sunday morning, went into church, and when he began his sermon said, "Brethren, this morning I take my text from Jerry Moore; oh, I mean Jeremiah."

In conclusion let me call attention to the trend of population in this country. In 1870, 70.5 per cent of the population was classified as agriculturists. In 1910 only 53.7 per cent of the population was so classified. The fact is, this last figure is excessive, and must include many of these professional farmers who farm by proxy. Experts declare that only about 30 per cent of the people actually live on the farms; and the drift is still from the farm to the city. With the population still increasing and production decreasing, it is readily seen that this Congress can not do too much to help the farmers. In the expenditure of the money appropriated by this bill some small amount may be wasted; but that is true of every expenditure, certainly true of the expenditures for war purposes, and should not deter anyone from supporting liberal appropriations for agriculture. This appropration of $19,000,000 is in the interest of the man on the farm, upon whose success depends the success of all professions; and I trust the conference report will be promptly agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, if there are no further questions to be asked, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I notice in amendment 38, where the Senate proposed $250,000 for improved methods of farm management, the conferees reduced it to $240,000, taking off $10,000. Also in amendment 41, where the item was increased by the Senate to $678,240, the conferees took off $5,000. Was that on the basis of a compromise?

Mr. LEVER. No. I will say in reference to the first proposition that in that item we endeavored to give the amount, with a little increase, that is now being expended for investigational work, because the gentleman will remember that the two propositions of investigational and demonstration work have been separated.

The other matter to which the gentleman calls attention was a matter of the House conferees trying to shave as much on the Senate as possible.

Mr. MANN. Knowing the House conferees as I do, and knowing their ability, I would not call them very successful shavers if after strenuous effort they could only shave $5,000 off the sum of $678,240. I have a great deal more faith in the ability of my friend from South Carolina than that. That is a very flimsy excuse.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from South Carolina is not offering this as an excuse at all. The gentleman from Illinois will remember that when the bill was in the House the amount for this purpose was $378,000.

Mr. MANN. And the Senate added $300,000.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, the Senate added $300,000, the amount which was being contributed by the General Education Board, making a total of $678,000 for this work. The Senate insisted that there should be a dissolution of the partnership between the Federal Government and the General Education Board, and added $300,000 to take the place of the amount being contributed by that board, and added $50,000 for work in West Virginia, Kentucky, and Maryland, three States that have lately come under the farm-demonstration methods. The House cut that $50,000 by $5,000.

Mr. MANN. The Senate added $300,000 and the House cut it down to $295,000. I personally should have been in favor of the $300,000 without cutting off the help that we were getting from the outside. I think the gentleman and I agree upon that. I am not afraid to take the money that Mr. Rockefeller may have made, no matter how he made it, and use that money for the benefit of the public. [Applause.] I think this is the silliest proceeding that even the Senate has ever been guilty of.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman will agree, however, that there was a very strong sentiment on this proposition when the bill was under consideration in the House.

Mr. MANN. No; I do not agree that there was. I know there was some talk on the subject, and some gentlemen were very active in the expression of their opinions.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will yield if I have the time, but I do not want to lose my rights.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute left.

Mr. LEVER. I am sorry that I can not yield unless it is very important.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LEVER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

[Mr. CONNOLLY of Iowa addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I heartily approve of the item of $40,000 inserted in this conference report for the study and investigation of rural-credit societies, and I regret exceedingly that the President and the Democratic leader [Mr. UNDERWOOD] have expressed their purpose to defer consideration of any and all rural-credit measures until the next session of Congress, even though the very important question of antitrust legislation is the question to which those gentlemen would give precedence.

Important as it may be to protect the individual citizen against combinations of capital that will force from him an excessive price for what he buys and an inadequate price for what he sells, it does seem to me the question of feeding and clothing this Nation from the substance of our own soil is of still more vital importance; and the necessity for improved rural credits lies at the very base of this great economic question.

The population of the United States is increasing so rapidly by natural growth and by foreign influx that consumption, even now, in this comparatively virgin country, is far greater than production, and in 10 years food products have doubled in price to the consumer. If the agriculturist of the United States alone profited by this high cost of food products, the burden would be more willingly borne by the consumer; but when it is recalled that we are already bringing corn and meat in great quantities from South America and Canada it is time for us to pause and consider ways and means for building up agriculture at home.

A cause which may explain our inadequate supply of foodstuffs is the fact that the hundreds of thousands of immigrants who come annually to our shores are not agriculturists, except for a small per cent, and the American farmer who has been plowing for a top-heavy consuming class already must rise earlier, go later, and drive harder to feed and clothe the nonproducing immigrant. Hampered as he has been by lack of farm credit, he can not expand and intensify and diversify in such way as to keep pace with demand, and so food products have soared higher and higher.

But there is even a greater cause for the lack of balance between supply and demand, and that is the fact that farm tenancy is on the increase in the United States.

It makes no difference how industrious, how honest, or how intelligent a man may be, if he has nothing more than a tenant's interest in the soil he cultivates, feeling that he may sow where another may reap, he will never bring that soil up to a high state of productiveness.

It makes no difference how public-spirited a man may be, if he has only a tenant's interest in the community in which he lives he can not fulfill the highest duty of a citizen in the school, in the church, and in the State, because he never knows when the inexorable hand of necessity will drag him from his surroundings and set him down in a community of unsympathetic strangers.

We have heard it objected that legislation in the interest of agriculture is class legislation and smacks of paternalism; as if every vocation and every industry that make up the world of business was not rooted in agriculture. Just as fertilizer placed at the roots of a tree nourishes the tiniest leaf, just so stimulated agriculture carries strength and growth and nourishment to the smallest enterprise and to the humblest citizen. The United States has already recognized this principle in watering the dry lands of the West and in cleaning rivers and harbors to cheapen freight rates on farm products between exchanging consumers. Germany, France, Italy, Switzerland, and many other European countries recognized this principle—some of them more than a hundred years ago—when, either by legislative concessions to agriculturists, by Government loans, or, as in the case of France, by direct subsidy, they established land-loan banks with exceedingly low rates of interest. As a result, agriculture in the countries named is in its highest state and wealth is distributed in that healthy proportion between country and town that makes for the highest citizenship.

Taking Switzerland as an example, it will perhaps emphasize the contention we are trying to bring out to tell something of the wonderful development of that country, due entirely to the establishment of rural-credit banks.

Less than half a century ago 80 per cent of the lands of Switzerland were tilled by tenants. Except for the few landholders, who were themselves land poor, the people were poor, unprogressive, and apathetic. The public treasury was at low tide. Men of public spirit, realizing that there was disease in the public policy, set about to ascertain the cause. It was not long until the tenant system was fixed on as the root of the country's evils, and the Government set about to right those evils. A system of land banks was established, through which the Government loaned small sums to tenants, at a low rate of interest, with which to buy homes. Improved conditions were apparent from the beginning, and to-day, thanks to Switzerland's land-loan system, 90 per cent of the agriculturists of that country own their homes, the banks of the country are prosperous, and, considering the rugged nature of the soil, it is one of the most productive agricultural countries in Europe. When a commission was sent by the United States to examine rural-credit systems in Europe and to observe results, members of the commission were amazed to find that European farmers were supporting families on 1 and 2 acres of ground and that 20 acres constituted a very large farm. They were informed that the high per cent of production was due to intensive farming, that intensive farming was due to ownership, and that ownership was due in large measure to land-loan banks, organized in whole or in part by Government aid. They unqualifiedly and unanimously recommended that some such system be worked out for the United States.

The commission recommended a bill, which is a part of their report, and which, though entirely right in purpose, is, in my judgment, subject to serious objections. The bill contains 51 sections and is too cumbersome. It undertakes to outline in detail such provisions and restrictions as should be worked out by the Secretary of the Treasury. It proposes an intricate system of land-loan banks, to be created, with hundreds of provisions and limitations, to be guarded by special officers created under the provisions of the bill. But the most vital defect in the bill proposed by the commission is the plan of basing rural credits on arbitrary associations of farmers, afterwards to be organized under some visionary form of charter or on the plighted faith of such farmers' organizations as the grange, the alliance, or the union, all of which have done good work in improving rural conditions, but none of which is suited to the peculiar purpose of forming a compact, unchanging basis of credit.

If a bill of such length and details, with such undigested provisions for the original basis of credit, is such a bill as the President and the Democratic leader [Mr. UNDERWOOD] have in contemplation, I am not surprised that they hesitate to consider it at this session. But I am sure that a simple bill, such as I have introduced, which does not undertake to outline departmental work and which is clear-cut and free of surplusage, can be considered and passed by this House without perceptible loss of time. I am equally as sure that no measure has been before this House in 20 years that would be more far-reaching in its beneficial effects for the tenant and the small landowner, and eventually for the Nation, than this bill if enacted into law.

The bill that I have introduced, H. R. 16028, uses the national banks as now organized, creating a land-loan department in those banks as simple as their present savings departments. The original basis of credit is in the land of the individual, and this is passed on under my bill, as under existing national-bank law, by the president of the bank. All we want to do is, by a sane and simple law, to remove the inhibition against national banks accepting land mortgages as security and to provide the means by which the farmer's collateral will be given an equal chance and by which he may be enabled to secure money at a low rate of interest that will enable him to grow. That my bill fully meets the requirements, I propose to show further on in the course of my remarks.

No fair-minded man will deny that up to this time the whole machinery of our money and credit system has been directed toward the aid of the city and not the country. Legislation has gone along in this channel for so long that even the farmer has come to think he is dependent on the city for his credit. He has been educated in the school of adversity to put the cart before the horse.

Why should the farmers of the United States, with realty values worth $40,000,000,000 and raising annual products amounting to over $10,000,000,000 have to beg for credit at exorbitant rates either of the merchant or the local banker, when that merchant or local banker will take the farmers' collateral and with it borrow in New York at 5 per cent?

The sooner all industries realize their first dependence on the farm, that all primal wealth has its origin there, the sooner will real wealth in larger degree come to city and country. Mr. Bryan never uttered a truer saying than that we may destroy our cities and let grass grow in our streets, but if we maintain a high standard of agriculture the cities will be rebuilt larger and more prosperous than ever.

But, say some, the farmer is already paying interest to the amount of $500,000,000 annually, an amount larger than the annual returns from our wheat crop, and he can not or should not take on additional burdens. We answer that the railroads of this country are valued at $15,000,000,000 and they are mortgaged up to $11,000,000,000. Farm lands, as stated, are valued at $40,000,000,000 and they are mortgaged for $6,000,000,000. If railroads are not overmortgaged, then surely farm lands have a safe margin for additional loans.

I do not underestimate the destructive effects of mortgages under present conditions, by which the farmer pays from 8 to 10 per cent; but I contend that not in the mortgage but in the rate of interest lies the evil. The farmer who pays 8 and 10 per cent for money will never have means for expansion, for intensifying his methods and increasing his yields. My theory, then, is a larger mortgage debt and a smaller interest account.

Under existing conditions it is but fair to say that banks can not accommodate farmers at a low rate of interest. They are part of a system that has been built up in the interest of the city men with Government sanction. Let us have the Government mend the flaws in the foundation, agriculture, and the whole financial superstructure will be healthier and stronger.

And why may not the Government do this thing? The recent order of the Secretary of the Treasury suspending the rule whereby national banks were prohibited from lending money on real estate was a tacit admission that the farmers' basis of credit has been unjustly legislated against, and that the needs of agriculture, the needs of the whole people dependent on agriculture, will justify not only a righting of the wrong but enlarged privileges for this class of credit. Debt at reasonable rates means healthy expansion; debt at excessive rates of interest means torpor if not ruin.

But what of the tenant class who constitute fully nine-tenths of the farmers of this country? They have no lands to mortgage even at the high rate of interest the landlord must pay. Their lot is hard indeed. They pay from 10 to 40 per cent for the money or provision furnished them by the merchant or landlord, and to this good day the door of hope has been closed against them to such an extent as to make it next to impossible for any of them to live under their own vine and fig tree.

There is no calculating the increased production that this country is capable of if, by virtue of an act of Congress, a large per cent of present tenants may become landowners. When a man knows that he and his children will surely profit by the improvements he puts upon his land, he has some incentive to bring that land to its highest state of productiveness. Give a man an incentive, something to work to with reasonable hope, and he will lift himself to the higher plane. The man who owns his land is no better by nature than thousands who do not own their lands, but ownership gives him better opportunities, opens up for him a broader field, and makes of him a more stable citizen. It has been well said "that he who owns his soil is in partnership with the Almighty."

So fertile has been our virgin soil and so varied our natural resources that we have given little thought to shortage of production. We want to hold our monopoly of raw cotton, and yet year by year the supply is falling further behind the demand. As previously stated, our grain and corn supply is not keeping pace with our rapidly increasing population, while the falling away of our meat supply is actually alarming. The necessity for intensive farming, for building up personally owned homes, such as produce corn and meat and eggs and vegetables, is apparent; but the means to meet that demand are woefully wanting.

My bill provides a system that will give the small farmer a low rate of interest through national banks, and yet give the banks the usual margin of profit.

Granting, as I believe the majority of my hearers will, that there is urgent necessity for some such measure, I propose to show that this bill is practicable and will fully meet the demand.

The bill provides that national banks may establish land-loan departments. This is made a separate department of the banking system, that it may not conflict with existing currency laws, and for the further reason that it would be folly and unnecessary expense to the Government to establish a new system of banks known as land-loan banks when existing national banks can do the work designed, will undertake it only too gladly, and can do it better. The president of the bank passes on the character and sufficiency of collateral offered.

In order that loans may not be multiplied for the purpose of getting commissons regardless of the sufficiency of collateral offered, national banks are required to buy 10 per cent of each serial bond issue made through their agency.

If it becomes necessary to sell under mortgage any or all the lands hypothecated in any series, the bank must guarantee that the land sold shall bring the amount due on the mortgage at time of sale, which requirement alone would make the bank official cautious as to the desirability and sufficiency of his collateral.

Sums loaned under this system will be refunded in easy payments, with interest at 5 per cent per annum, running over a period of 10 years, when the whole amount, with interest, will have been paid.

One-tenth of the principal loaned will annually be paid into a sinking fund, and here again the bank guarantees the stability of that sinking fund by giving bond to cover responsibility for that particular fund.

And why should not the Government become responsible for final payment of all bonds issued under this bill? Millions of dollars are annually appropriated to carry on agricultural experiments in this country, and it has given us pleasure to vote for all of these appropriations; but how much more effective would be these experiments if they were carried to ten landowning farmers where they are now carried to one.

In guaranteeing final payment of the bonds issued under the provisions of my bill the Government assumes absolutely no risk. The bonds are issued on mortgages of real estate for not more than two-thirds its value as passed on by the bank president. The bank, the Government's own creature, is located in the same vicinity as the borrower, and the character of the land hypothecated or sought to be hypothecated is known to the bank president, and there is no possible way under this bill that the bank officials could accept inadequate collateral or fleece the Government except by themselves suffering first.

The bill provides that the Government and not the banks shall issue the bonds, because in this way they may be floated at par, bearing the lowest possible rate of interest. The borrower is too far removed from the money centers to get a loan even at a high rate of interest, and so he puts his security behind the Government and asks its mediation. On more than one occasion the United States Government has borrowed money purely on the faith of its credit, but here it is secured, dollar for dollar, and has a margin of one-third more than the face of any bond.

While we admit that mortgages of real estate do not constitute the most desirable bankable paper, bonds issued by the Government, based on these mortgages, are as acceptable and as convertible as gold notes.

There is abundance of 3 per cent money in the United States, but capital is proverbially shy. Agriculture is languishing for lack of developing capital, but the isolated farmer can not reach the real money centers. This bill makes the Government the medium through which the borrower and the lender can meet on terms of fullest confidence for mutual advantage and for even greater advantage to the Government itself.

It will be noted that under the terms of the bill the greatest amount that can be loaned to any one person is $2,500. The purpose of this provision is that the benefits of the bill may be extended to the greatest possible number, and especially to the small farmer and tenant, who needs it worst.

Now, let us consider some of the practical workings of the bill. Take, for instance, the small farmer who owns, say, 100 acres of land, valued at, say, $20 per acre—and I may add that this bill is intended to reach the less densely populated rural sections, where land values have not already soared beyond the reach of the man of moderate means or no means at all. Say he owes a thousand dollars on his land. It is difficult to get an individual to carry a mortgage for so long on that land, and rarely will he carry it for less than 8 per cent interest. When he has paid his interest, taxes, and living expenses he has little or nothing to put on his debt and nothing to put on improvements. The consequence is many farmers fail to meet their payments at high rates of interest and some lose their lands entirely. When under this bill the man gets a low rate of interest, stipulated annual payments, and long time guaranteed, he can carry his debt and improve his property every year. Again, take the tenant who always pays his rent and his store account or his bank note—and there are hundreds of thousands of them who do so, but barely break even one year with another—he has absolutely no chance under our present system of credit. Suppose under this bill he proposes to buy 100 acres of land from the landowner, who knows his good qualities, at, say, $20 per acre. The 100 acres will contain a three-horse farm, leaving 25 acres for pasture. If he is a southern farmer, the regular cotton rent he has been paying the landlord was 6 bales of cotton, or, say, 3,000 pounds. This at, say, 13¼ cents, which is less than to-day's market, is worth $397.50.

Now, the landlord can not wait 10 years for his money, nor is he able to take only 5 per cent interest. So under the provisions of this bill he sells 100 acres of land to his tenant, waiving the first mortgage. The tenant then gives his first mortgage to a national bank as part of a serial loan, and he turns over the cash received on this mortgage, together with a second mortgage, to the original landowner. The landowner can easily wait for the balance of his money, even at a low rate of interest, and the tenant can meet his annual payments with less than he has heretofore been paying for rent.

Let us see if this is not a fact. The annual payment of principal due the bank will be $150. The first year's interest will be $75, making a total of $225, and leaving a margin out of what has been his annual rent paid of $172.50 to be applied to the second mortgage held by the former landlord. The accruing interest grows smaller and smaller each year until the last, when it will be $7.50, making the final payment $157.50.

It is thought by some that the average 100 acres of land will not furnish more than a 2-horse farm, which we will grant for sake of argument. Then, deducting one-third from the usual rent for a 3-horse farm, which in dollars, as above figured, would amount to $397.50, we have for a 2-horse farm $265, enough to meet the payment of principal and interest and leaving a balance of $40 to be applied to the second mortgage. Let us keep in mind the fact that the landlord has heretofore gotten all this, which is only a fair return on his investment; and what the tenant is able to clear above his rent and necessary expenses—and a few clear something—only fits him better for improving and building up his farm.

Now, while I have used conditions in the cotton belt because I have personal knowledge of conditions there, crop values there are perhaps little, if any, better than in other agricultural sections, and the per cent of arable land to the hundred acres will not average as high as in the West and Northwest.

Mr. Speaker, I plead that an opportunity may be given the tenant farmer. While I have used conditions in the cotton belt for illustration, not one of you who comes from an agricultural or semiagricultural State but has honest, industrious citizens of your own flesh and blood, in a sense, who are forced all their lives to pay rent to some landowner because they can not get a start in the world. It is not their fault; it is not the fault of the landowner, who has been their best friend, but is the fault of a financial system that has discredited the farmer's brawn and brain and despised his land as a basis of credit.

Give these men an opportunity under the eye of your own agents—the national banks—and I guarantee that you will see a revolution wrought in the conservation, improvement, and productiveness of farm lands that the wildest dreamer could never have conceived of.

Give these men a chance, and you will have better schools, better churches, better Government.

Give these men a chance, and the high cost of living problem vanishes, for the man who lives on his own land will produce his own meat and corn and some to spare, whereas the tenant must stick to the more readily salable crop to meet his lien or bank note. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have finished, and if there is any Member of this House who does not believe this bill will meet the growing demand, the crying necessity for some such measure, I will be only too glad for him to point out its defects. If the bill can be amended to advantage, I will gladly accept such amendments. While I believe every possible objection to the bill can be reasonably answered, I will not stickle as to form if you will join with me on the general proposition to give our farmers an equal chance with all other vocations, since all others are directly or indirectly dependent on them.

My sincere wish is that you will join me in obtaining early and favorable consideration of the bill and that it may soon become law. We owe it to the man at home, who has been laboring year in and year out with little or no hope, and to delay action or to defer it to the next session is to fall short of our duty to a very large per cent of our constituents. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, without objection, I will include as part of my remarks the bill I introduced on the 25th of April last.

A bill (H. R. 16028) to establish a system through which national banks may make loans upon agricultural lands in aid of agriculture.

Be it enacted, etc., That any national bank doing business in the United States be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to establish a land-loan department, under such provisions and restrictions as are hereinafter set forth.

SEC. 2. That loans shall not be made from this department of said national bank except on farm lands; and in no case shall said loans exceed two-thirds the actual value of the land to be hypothecated as collateral for said loans, nor shall said loans extend for a longer period than 10 years.

SEC. 3. That when a national bank has applications for loans in a sum aggregating $10,000, it shall examine the records in the county office in which deeds are recorded in the county in which said applications for loans are made, and ascertain whether or not the lands on which loans are asked are unencumbered.

SEC. 4. That if the office of the register of deeds, or such other office in which deeds are recorded, shall show the lands sought to be hypothecated as collateral for a loan are already mortgaged, no loan shall be considered on said encumbered land until the encumbrance has been removed and the record satisfied.

SEC. 5. That a list of the lands to be free from encumbrance, as shown by the county records, shall be advertised once a week for three consecutive weeks in a newspaper published in the county in which said loans are sought, and in case no person notifies said bank of a prior unrecorded mortgage or a judgment against any of the parties making application for loans, which said mortgage or judgment would adversely affect the mortgages held by said bank, said publication shall be deemed sufficient public notice, and the mortgages held by said bank shall be deemed and adjudged to be first mortgages by the State and Federal courts of the United States.

SEC. 6. That when any national bank located in any State of the United States shall have applications for loans on farm lands aggregating $10,000, on a basis of two-thirds the value of the lands sought to be hypothecated, and shall have taken first mortgages on said lands as hereinbefore provided, said mortgages shall be placed in the hands of the Treasurer of the United States, and 10-year bonds shall be issued thereon by the United States Government, to bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; final payment of said bonds to be guaranteed, at their face value, by the United States Government.

SEC. 7. That the proceeds from the sale of said bonds at face value shall be placed in the hands of the bank depositing said mortgages of real estate with the Treasurer of the United States, and shall be loaned by said bank to the individuals whose lands have been mortgaged as a basis for said loans at a rate not to exceed 5 per cent per annum, and for a period of not more than 10 years.

SEC. 8. That any national bank which may establish the farm-land loan department herein provided for may make application for serial loans in amounts of $10,000 each: Provided, That said bank shall subscribe for or purchase 10 per cent of the bonds of each issue applied for.

SEC. 9. That any national bank making loans as herein provided for shall annually collect the interest due on any loan, and $100 of the principal for every $1,000 loaned, and shall collect in the same ratio on smaller loans. Out of the annual payments of principal and interest collected the national bank making the collections shall pay the annual 3 per cent interest due on the United States Government bonds issued to said bank, and reserve the payments of principal as a sinking fund for the ultimate retirement of said bonds when matured: Provided, That the funds in said sinking fund may be reloaned by said bank on first mortgages of farm lands at a rate not to exceed 7 per cent: And provided further, That said bank give bond in periods of two years, in an amount commensurate with the amount in said sinking fund.

SEC. 10. That in no case shall loans under this bill exceed $2,500 or extend beyond the time fixed for the expiration of the serial loan from which the funds loaned to individuals is derived.

SEC. 11. That in the event any person who has made application for a loan through any national bank as a part of a series herein provided for shall default in more than two annual payments of principal and interest as provided for in this bill, then the whole amount of said loan, with interest to date, shall become due, and the bank holding the mortgage on said lands shall foreclose the same, guaranteeing the face value of said mortgage, with all interest due, if necessary, by said bank bidding on said lands publicly sold up to the amount of the then value of said mortgage and the cost of foreclosure proceedings. The proceeds from the sale of said lands, less costs incurred in foreclosure, shall be placed in the sinking fund herein provided for, and may be reloaned by said bank in the same manner and under the same restrictions as other funds in said sinking fund.

SEC. 12. That in the event any person who has made application for a loan through any national bank, as a part of a series herein provided for, shall desire to sell his or her land before the termination of the loan, such person shall be permitted to do so upon payment into the sinking fund of the bank through which such loan is made of the balance of principal and interest due on his mortgage. Said sum so paid in may be loaned by said bank in the same manner and under the same restrictions as other funds of said sinking fund.

SEC. 13. That such profits as may be derived from interest charges herein provided for, in excess of the amount necessary to pay off the bonds of any series, shall be retained by the national bank through which the loans are made as compensation for the duties and responsibilities herein imposed on national banks.

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the United States Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary to put into effect the provisions of this bill.

[Mr. ABERCROMBIE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. JACOWAY addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Speaker, next to the people of this country, its greatest natural resource is its soil. As is natural and necessary during the pioneer stage of development, the control of our soil has been inefficient and wasteful. But we have now advanced to that period in the Nation's growth when maximum efficiency in the utilization of our resources is occupying more or less prominently a position in the mind of every thinking man.

For the efficient use of our lands the experience of the whole world proves that we must employ the three means of tillage, rotation or diversification of crops and fertilizers. Tillage and rotation of crops are dependent almost entirely upon man's personal activities, physical and mental, but fertilizers demand a supply of raw materials. Obviously that nation which contains within its own boundaries the raw materials necessary to the preparation of fertilizers is immeasurably better situated than the nation which is dependent upon foreign supplies. And quite as obviously that nation which knows its own resources is trebly armed in the inevitable struggle for national prestige.

With adequate supplies of appropriate carriers of phosphates, nitrogen, and potassium this country would not only be independent of all foreign nations for its supply of fertilizer materials, but in this particular matter would be unique among the nations of the earth. That it is now in the position to realize this distinction is the purport of these remarks.

Federal agencies, provided for and supported by Congress, have demonstrated that there is enough phosphate rock in this country to meet the world's demands at the present rate of consumption for more than 30 centuries.

We could easily provide for all the nitrogen used in agriculture in this country, without recourse to the Chilean saltpeter, if we were to conserve the waste from the old-fashioned "beehive" coke ovens by increasing the number of modern by-product ovens.

For potassium, it is well known that the whole world has long been dependent upon Germany for its supply of potassium salts. A few years since somewhat strenuous differences developed between large American importers of potassium salts and the "Kali Syndikat," an organization which, under governmental supervision and control, markets the output of the German mines. So serious became the contentions as to lead to diplomatic exchanges between the Governments of Germany and the United States.

It was thus brought to the attention of our Agricultural Committee, and Hon. A. F. LEVER, who, as chairman of this committee, has shown himself the right man in the right place, was then, as now, alive to the real things of interest to the farmer. Upon his suggestion an appropriation was made and the Bureau of Soils of the Department of Agriculture was charged to find within the boundaries of the United States an adequate source for the Nation's need. This was promptly and efficiently executed. Various possible sources of potassium salts were investigated, of which several perhaps have been economic. So strikingly preeminent is one of these, however, that I am justified in passing over the others at this time, without particularizing further.

Along the Pacific coast there is a luxurious growth of marine weed, containing many species. Among these, because of the size of the individual plants and the large beds, are some three or four species locally known as "giant kelps." For years one of my constituents, Mr. David M. Balch, of Coronado, had studied certain of these giant kelps and had pointed out their great possible value. As is often the case in the history of great discoveries, Mr. Balch's work failed to attract the attention either from the popular world or the scientific world to which it was properly entitled, and it is therefore an added pleasure to record here the Nation's indebtedness to this scientific pioneer, who has reached advanced years without either material or adequate scientific recognition. It happened, however, that Mr. Balch's work was known to the scientist of the Bureau of Soils charged with the immediate supervision of the potash search, and quietly but in connection with the search in other directions the kelps were investigated.

During the summer of 1911 two preliminary surveys were made of the kelp beds on the California coast, as well as one on the Puget Sound. Another of my constituents, Prof. W. C. Crandall, a brilliant young scientist, now a prominent member of the staff of the Scripps Biological Institute of the University of California, at La Jolla, was placed in charge of one of these surveys; and so important were the results he achieved that in the following summer—1912—he was commissioned to prepare working maps of all the beds from Cape Flattery south. It is but proper to add that much assistance was rendered by many individuals, especially noteworthy being the public spirit displayed by Col. Charles Rader, of San Diego, in placing at the disposal of the governmental investigation his yacht, the Paxinosa, and by Prof. W. E. Ritter, director of the Scripps Biological Institute, who put at command the resources of that excellent institution.

Mapping of the kelp beds and studies of methods of utilization were continued during the summer of 1913. I am authoritatively informed that working maps have now been prepared for all of the commercially available kelp beds from the Cedros Islands, off the Mexican coast, to the Shumagin Island, off the Alaskan Peninsula, excepting a relatively short portion of the Alaskan coast. It appears that the area of these beds aggregates nearly 400 square miles, capable of producing annually nearly 60,000,000 tons of kelp, equivalent to about 2,000,000 tons of potassium chloride. At the present time the total imports of potash salts of all kinds are approximately a million tons, equivalent to about 400,000 tons of potassium chloride. In other words, the giant kelps of the Pacific coast can perennially yield an annual output of potassium chloride about six times the equivalent of all potassium salts now imported. It further appears that of this amazing total nearly 60 per cent would be produced on the southern California coast, so that this great national asset has a particular importance to San Diego and my constituency over and above that which it has for every place in the United States where intensive methods of farming and efficient management of the soil is practiced.

At current prices for potash salts of grades corresponding to the kelp when nearly dried this crop in the neighborhood of San Diego would have a selling price of millions for the potash content alone, and the actual selling values would rival the value of our citrus crop. It is obvious that this supply of potassium salts could not at present be marketed entirely in the United States, but the West Indies, Hawaii, and Japan are all consumers of potash salts, and all can be as conveniently and economically supplied from San Diego as from Hamburg. It appears altogether probable that pure potassium salts can be prepared from the Pacific kelps more readily and more cheaply than from any other source. But the dried kelp itself, containing an average of something more than 16 per cent potash, has been examined by a large number of fertilizer manufacturers who have, without a dissenting voice, pronounced it a most valuable and desirable raw material and given very definite assurances of an eager market for it.

Several embryo companies for the production of kelp have sprung into existence, but they are sadly in need of technical direction, and it is a most commendable work for this Congress to extend the usefulness of the Bureau of Soils by giving it the necessary authority and support to demonstrate the practicability of putting on the market kelp potash salts at figures decidedly less than the current prices determined for our farmers by a foreign government agency.

As before stated, the work of investigation and mapping is practically completed, but the very valuable results of these investigations, the working maps for the use of those who may find lucrative employment in the harvesting of the kelp, the reports of the experts and scientists who have been laboring to make possible this important industry, these are of little value until published. It appears that by very careful handling it will be possible to publish a limited edition of this material for $7,000.

This matter had been brought to my attention before I left San Diego by various persons interested, among them Prof. Crandall. After coming to Washington I took the matter up in the Bureau of Soils and through the kindness of Mr. Frank Cameron, soil chemist, was able to arrive at the facts in detail. Upon this information I introduced a bill on December 16 of last year asking for $7,000 with which to complete this work by printing and publishing the maps and reports already prepared relating to the location, extent, and other features of kelp beds on the Pacific coast. Senator Poindexter also became interested in the matter with such good effect that it became part of the agricultural bill, and in a few days will become a law, when we shall be able to send this information to the people on the Pacific coast who are ready and anxious to develop this wonderful resource.

Mr. BALTZ. Mr. Speaker, Congress appropriates millions for national defense and offense by land and sea. Millions of dollars go out for the improvement of rivers and harbors. Additional millions are freely expended for public buildings and betterments. All these lend to our sense of security, give us the satisfaction of believing we have given assistance and sustenance to our internal commerce, and add to our bump of self-esteem by way of magnificent homes for our public institutions. To my mind, however, they are of far less importance than the millions this country appropriates for that great industry—agriculture. That industry is the sole prop of the Nation.

We could exist and prosper without our Army and Navy. We could distribute the mail, dispense justice, and house our judges, our attorneys, and our police officers in less pretentious domiciles. We could lessen our financial assistance—in some degree, at least—to the water highways and still not realize it as a country for years to come. All this we could do were it necessary; but, thank the Lord, it is not. We are big enough, wealthy enough, patriotic enough to furnish the best Army, the best Navy, the best postal service, the best navigable lakes and streams in the world, and we do not propose to fall behind in any procession.

But we can not and, in recent years, have not slighted the agricultural industry. The extent of our assistance along that line has been gradually, but surely, increasing, and the necessity for this aid has now come to be generally recognized and approved. From theory and printed directions by experts we have arrived at the point of general instruction—almost individual instruction in many instances—until to-day there is hardly an important crop which has not been benefited by governmental advice and governmental appropriation. Soils have been analyzed and their owners instructed as to their improvement. Their usefulness and fertility have been extended. Lessons have been given in irrigation, in planting, in rotation of crops, until the old-fashioned farmer is amazed and sometimes distracted with what he terms "new-fangled ideas"; yet sooner or later he acknowledges their usefulness and value. Promptness, intelligence, care, industry, watchfulness, and cleanliness have been made the watchwords of the farmer, and he has grown from the one-horse chaise to the six-cylinder automobile for pleasure or business.

The agricultural environment has been improved. The Government has looked into the home of the farmer. He has been advised and instructed to good purpose. States, counties, and municipalities have entered with zeal upon systems of road building, all urged and advocated by the Government, which are of greater value to the farmer than to any other class. Now we are proposing, and I hope with success, that the Nation crown its works by deeds, make good its advice by results, and further this movement by liberal financial aid.

No other labor will so well tend to lessen the high cost of living. The production of the farms must increase in ratio as our population increases. Competition in farm produce of every kind must be keen and sharp. Bumper crops must be raised on small acreages, and the average farmer must not only be taught how to produce these crops, but to know that he is getting all that he can get from every acre, from every animal, fairly and without undue exhaustion of his resources.

People must be taught to respect and admire the profession of the farmer, for it is a profession when rightly conducted, and it has of late fallen into disrespect. Along these lines the Government is helping to attain this end. That help must be enlarged both as to sphere and quantity.

I, for one, am glad to see the appropriations for the Agricultural Department grow. That department is doing good work. It is the most helpful and useful agency for prosperity that we sustain. It has discarded theory for practicability and has shown by results secured that farming can be made not only a profession of high repute, but that the student and the practical farmer can earn for himself not alone a competence, but an independence of spirit attained by none other.

This great Nation of ours has learned much of late in this direction. It can learn more, and it will. The subject itself is not new, but modern methods and a modern Government together will place agriculture upon a plane so high that the ambitious young of this country will aspire to it as the most satisfactory and profitable profession in the world. Then will both the high cost of living and the cost of high living be solved.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a brief submitted by the Homesteaders' Association of Western Washington, touching on the northern unsurveyed land grants and the difficulties a homesteader usually has in locating on the same land afterwards claimed by the railroad company.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago I received a brief submitted by the Homesteaders' Association of Western Washington. I submitted this document to the Interior Department.

Some days ago, at my request, the department returned it to me, and I now wish to print it in the RECORD.

I consider it worth while, since it presents some of the difficulties encountered by homesteaders.

It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that many annoying features presented in this brief are made possible by the fact that railroad lands, to a large extent, are still unsurveyed.

From the homesteaders' viewpoint, the local land offices, as well as decisions of the department in previous cases, are responsible for many unnecessary embarrassments to the settler.

The scrip feature suggested in the brief will, in all probability, be subjected to close scrutiny should either of the bills referred to be considered.

BRIEF SUBMITTED BY HOMESTEADERS' ASSOCIATION OF WESTERN WASHINGTON.

Contending that Congress has the legal authority to extend to settlers in good faith who settled on lands within the primary limit of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railway Co., with the intention of making their claims their homesteads, relief, so that said settlers may be allowed to proceed to patent their claims and exercise ownership over the same.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

There are now pending before Congress two bills, one (H. R. 2146) introduced in the House of Representatives by Hon. W. E. HUMPHREY, of Washington, the other (S. 3087) introduced in the Senate by Hon. MILES POINDEXTER, of Washington.

These bills were introduced for their passage by Congress in order that relief be granted to settlers on lands determined on survey to be within the limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.

The first-mentioned bill will, if passed, be an extension of the act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat., 597, 620), extending the provisions of said act partially. The act of July 1, 1898, provided that where a bona fide settler in good faith, under color of title, claim of right, under any law of the United States, or any ruling of the Interior Department, settled on any land within the granted or indemnity limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. prior to January 1, 1898, with the intention of making the same his homestead, and where the purchaser, settler, or claimant refuses to transfer his entry, that in such case, after survey, he may proceed to patent; in this event the railroad company be given scrip for the area of land taken, or the settler might transfer his claim to land of equal area, in which event the railroad company would retain the land, but this only applied to settlers prior to January 1, 1898. As to settlers after January 1, 1898, on survey being filed and their homestead entries being filed and their bona fides being established the Secretary of the Interior would request the railroad company to relinquish the land to the settler. If the railroad company acceded to the request, the settler could proceed to patent, and in that event the railroad company would be given scrip, the relinquishment, however, as to settlers subsequent to January 1, 1898, being optional with the railroad company.

The scrip, issued under this act was limited to use "within any State or Territory into which such railroad grant extends." The extension of said act of January 1, 1898, by the Humphrey bill, if passed, will be only partial, for all settlers contemplated by said bill will be classed as subsequent to January 1, 1898, and the bill is otherwise amended so that the railroad company still has the optional right whether or not to relinquish to settlers, but in the event it refuses to relinquish the settlers will be allowed scrip, and the scrip to be allowed under the Humphrey bill and all the scrip that has heretofore been issued under the act of January 1, 1898, may be used within the State or Territory where the base land was relinquished or within the District of Alaska or the Philippine Islands, for said act provided (H. R. 2146) "that said act shall be and is hereby amended and extended so that all lieu selections made under said act may be of either odd or even sections of surveyed or unsurveyed lands of equal area of those relinquished, not mineral and not otherwise appropriated, within the State or Territory where the base land was relinquished or within the District of Alaska or the Philippine Islands as the selector may elect." So that it is very clear and apparent that this bill (H. R. 2146) is merely an attempt on the part of the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to secure aid from the United States Government in another campaign of extensive land grabbing. It is an undisputed fact, that as the law now stands, the railroad company has no market whatever for the thousands of acres of scrip it now holds in its vaults, and that the Humphrey bill if passed would enable the railroad company to use the marketless scrip it now holds with which to loot Alaska and Philippine lands. At its best the lieu land system is susceptible of great fraud, at least so Mr. HUMPHREY says, for he stated in a letter dated September 8, 1913, to Central Labor Council of Seattle, as follows:

"I have not the slightest doubt but what the Northern Pacific Railroad has received several hundred thousand acres of land from the Government in the State of Washington, for practically nothing. This was accomplished largely through what is known as the lieu land system. If it was within my power I would take every acre of this land away from the Northern Pacific Railroad and open it up to bona fide settlers, for it was practically secured by fraud from the Government."

Of course, the Humphrey bill, to the extent that the settler will under it get scrip, is a relief to the settler. But it is a gift to the railroad company more than a relief to anybody.

The Poindexter bill, if passed, would place bona fide settlers on unsurveyed railroad land which, after survey, shall have been determined to be an odd-numbered section of the Northern Pacific grant, in the same position as the bona fide settler who settled on such land prior to January 1, 1898; that is, said settler would have the optional feature whether or not to retain his claim or accept scrip. If the settler retained his claim the railroad would be given scrip. The scrip issued under this particular bill could be used within the State or Territory where the base land was located, or in Alaska or the Philippines.

The sole question between the advocates of the respective bills is to what extent can Congress extend relief to settlers without violating the constitutional rights of the railroad.

A brief résumé of some of the legislation affecting the Northern Pacific grant will not be out of place at this time.

The original granting act was the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 365), which act served the dual purpose of incorporating the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., and at the same time granting it "every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of 20 alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad line, through territories, and 10 alternate section of land per mile on each side of said railroad through States, beginning at a point on Lake Superior, in the State of Minnesota or Wisconsin, extending westerly by the most eligible railroad route to some point on Puget Sound. The grant in additional to the above also granted a right of way 200 feet wide through public lands. The charter provided among other things that the land should be surveyed and patents issue as the line progressed, and that the road shall be fully completed and equipped by July 4, 1876.

Subsequently Congress created the first and second indemnity limits, but as the settlers in question all settled within the primary limits, no further reference will be made to said indemnity limits.

Subsequent to the original granting act Congress passed a number of acts affecting the railroad and its grant. Among said acts are:

Act of May 7, 1866 (14 Stat., 355), wherein the railroad was granted an extension of two years, both for the beginning and completion of the road.

Act of April 10, 1869 (16 Stat., 57), which act granted the railroad a right of way from Puget Sound to Portland, Oreg., but no additional land.

Act of May 31, 1870 (16 Stat., 378), which authorized the railroad company to mortgage its road, lands, and corporate franchise, created the indemnity limits and provided "that all lands hereby granted to said company which shall not be sold or disposed of, or remain subject to the mortgage by this act authorized, after the expiration of five years after the completion of the entire road, shall be subject to settlement and preemption like other lands at a price to be paid to said company, not exceeding $2.50 per acre." Section 2 of said act provided, "And be it further resolved, That Congress may at any time alter or amend this joint resolution having due regards to the rights of said company and any other parties."

The act of July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 305), appropriated $95,080 for the survey of the Northern Pacific lands: "And provided further, That before any lands granted to said company by the United States shall be conveyed to any party thereto, under any of the acts incorporating, or relating to said company, there shall be first paid into the Treasury of the United States the costs of surveying the same by the said company or the party in interest." This act to an extent acted as an amendment of the original granting act, in that in the original act was the proviso that the President shall order survey after the first 40 miles are completed, and survey as the line progresses and patents issue.

This act makes it possible for the Northern Pacific, which claims to be the absolute owner of odd-numbered sections within the primary grant, to evade local taxation in the various States into which its land grant extends, on the theory that the technical title to the land in question is still vested in the United States, and that said land is therefore exempt from taxation. At the same time the railroad by paying into the Treasury of the United States the cost of survey is entitled to patent as it claims.

The act of September 29, 1890 (26 Stat., 496), provides "That there is hereby forfeited to the United States and the United States hereby resumes title thereto of all lands granted to any State, or any corporation, to aid in the construction of any railroad opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad not now completed and in operation."

Act July 1, 1898 (30 Stat., 597, 620).

Prior to January 1, 1898, the then Secretary of the Interior erroneously ruled as to the eastern terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., which ruling, if it had been correct, threw a vast number of homesteads into the primary limits of the grant. Subsequent to the ruling that part of the grant which had been declared erroneously not to be in the grant was taken up by homestead claimants, resulting in land that the Northern Pacific clearly was not entitled to and on which homesteaders prior to the ruling had settled upon, being declared by the Interior Department to be the property of the Northern Pacific, and also land that the Northern Pacific was entitled to being settled upon by homestead claimants and their patents allowed by the Interior Department.

Clearly this state of affairs could not long continue. In addition to the confusion of claimants at the eastern terminus, many claimants all along the line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound had settled on unsurveyed land in good faith with homestead intentions. This resulted in the passage of the act of July 1, 1898. This act provides that where, prior to January 1, 1898, "the whole or any part of an odd-numbered section" of Northern Pacific land has been purchased from the United States, or settled upon, or claimed in good faith, or claimed in good faith by any qualified settler under color of title or claim of right under any law of the United States or any ruling of the Interior Department, and where the settler refuses to relinquish, that the Northern Pacific will be required to relinquish and accept lieu land, or such settlers, if they so desire, may transfer their claims to other lands. It must be remembered that this part of the act applies to settlers who settled prior to January 1, 1898. None of the settlers whose relief is contemplated by either the Humphrey or Poindexter bill come within this provision.

But as to settlers subsequent to January 1, 1898, the act provides as follows: "And provided further, That whenever any settler shall in good faith make settlement in pursuance of existing law upon any odd-numbered section of unsurveyed public lands within the said railroad grant to which the right of said railroad grantee or its successor in interest has attached, then upon proof thereof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior and a due relinquishment of the prior railroad right, other lands may be selected in lieu thereof by said railroad grantee or its successor in interest, as hereinbefore provided, and patents shall issue therefor."

The act of March 2, 1899 (30 Stat., 993), created the Mount Rainier National Park, and paragraph 3 thereof gave the Northern Pacific the right to select lieu land in place of the thousands of acres of scenery within the odd-numbered sections.

The act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 950), extends the act of July 1, 1898, so as to adjust differences in the indemnity limits, where lands patented were embraced in a pending indemnity selection.

The act of May 17, 1906 (34 Stat., 197), extends the act of July 1, 1898, and March 2, 1901, to include bona fide settlers subsequent to January 1, 1898, and prior to May 31, 1905. Under this act all lieu selections were to be confined within the State where private holdings were located. This act was conditioned upon the acceptance of the Northern Pacific.

Acts other than those quoted affecting the Northern Pacific grant were enacted by Congress, but only in the act of May 17, 1906, was the taking effect of the act conditioned on its acceptance by the Northern Pacific. In all other instances Congress acted without conditions as to acceptance of acts by the Northern Pacific.

It is the contention of this association that Congress has always had the power and has always assumed the power to alter, add to, amend, and repeal the provisions of the act of July 2, 1864, as per section 20 of said act, and the legislation subsequent to the charter bears out this contention.

How these settlers who settled on land subsequent to January 1, 1898, came to go on said land.

These men were all hardy pioneers and, hearing of unoccupied, unsurveyed land within the Seattle land-office district (and elsewhere), all went to see the land and while there met settlers in the vicinity who had been inquiring of the local land-office officials, and some of whom had letters from the then Secretary of the Interior, and on the advice of such letters and such local land-office officials and land attorneys located on said claims, intending to make their homesteads. Many of these men were married and took their families; in numbers of instances settlers have lost by death members of their families and buried the dead on their homesteads, as is typical of pioneers. These men were all assured by land-office officials, land attorneys, and by letters from the Land Commissioner that they were within their rights, and that on filing of survey they would be allowed to make their election under the act of July 1, 1898, and they were assured that settlers in good faith locating on unsurveyed land within the primary limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific would have prior right over the railroad company, and that on survey they would be permitted to make their entry and proof, and that the railroad company would be requested to relinquish the lands so settled upon.

These men thereupon went on their claims, improved the same, built the usual houses and outbuildings, and, in a number of instances, built several miles of trails, one settler even contributing $250 toward a community bridge over a turbulent stream, in addition to providing labor thereon. As the law then stood and now stands, these settlers must stay on their claims, living thereon as their homesteads, improve and cultivate the same, intending to make the same their homesteads, until the survey is filed, and then, and not until then, could their homestead entry be filed. In some instances this happened a short time after filing, but in the majority of instances from 8 to 10 years or even longer elapsed before the survey was filed, and many settlers even now have not filed, because the survey of their claims has not been filed. On the filing of their homestead entry contests were promptly entered by the railroad company, and on such contests the settlers have invariably lost out, the precedent of Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. Violette (36 L. D., 162) being cited to them. The Violette case being a decision of the General Land Office that as to settlers located on land subsequent to January 1, 1898, it was optional with the railroad claimant whether or not to relinquish the land. To give an idea of how practically all of these settlers were misled, affidavits of a few of them will be set out.

STATE OF WASHINGTON, County of King, ss:

I, G. A. Schultheiss, being duly sworn, on oath depose and say that I am a citizen of the United States of lawful age and my post-office address is Baring, Wash., and qualified to make homestead entry. I did on the 22d day of May, 1908, make homestead entry on unsurveyed land, which since survey has been described as the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter and lots 7, 8, 9 of section 1, township 26 north, range 10 east, Willamette meridian; that before making settlement on said land, about the latter part of March, 1908, I called to see Joseph Gregory, a land attorney of Seattle, Wash., and I was handed a decision by said Gregory and was informed by him that the decision was the latest decision of the highest court, and that this decision held that when a settler made settlement on unsurveyed land within the limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., and that when the land was surveyed and found to be railroad land, that it was mandatory for the railroad company to accept scrip in lieu of land settled upon, and at that time said Gregory went with me to the land office and showed the aforementioned decision to Frank Twitchell, receiver of the United States land office at Seattle, Wash., and at that time said Gregory and Twitchell had some discussion whether the decision applied to the land I was contemplating making settlement upon, and after looking at said decision said Twitchell informed me that there was no such thing as unsurveyed railroad land and that it all belonged to the Government until patented and that anyone settling thereon prior to survey would have a prior right over the railroad company. I was given the circular of the General Land Office approved February 14, 1899, containing regulations under the act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stats., 597, 620), and I thereafter read said circular most carefully, paying particular attention to the interpretation placed upon said act in said circular by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I particularly noted paragraph "B," and I believed that the interpretation placed upon said act in said circular to be the law, and I relied on this circular and believed I had a right to make settlement on said land and that I would eventually obtain entry of said land when open for entry, and after I settled on the land I was in the land office several times and talked with Henry Smith, register of the land office at Seattle, and I was informed by him that the land on which I had settled was within the grant of the Northern Pacific Railway Co., and said Smith informed me that there had never been a case to his knowledge where the railroad company had refused to relinquish said land in favor of a settler when requested to do so by the Government, and I believed in and relied on the circular of February 14, 1899, and the advice given to me by Joseph Gregory, the attorney, and the information received from the register and receiver of the land office at Seattle in making settlement upon and continuing my residence and improvement of the land above described.

Since the date of the settlement I have made said land my home and have lived upon the land continuously and have constructed improvements thereon of the value of about $1,400; that my improvements consist of a house 18 by 24 feet, woodshed 18 by 20 feet, root house 8 by 10 feet, 36 apple trees, berry bushes of all kinds, and I built about 1 mile of trail and have one acre cleared.

After the land was surveyed and open for entry I made homestead application to enter said land, and my entry was rejected by the register and receiver of the land office at Seattle, and I perfected my appeal, and the Department of the Interior has made demand on the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. to relinquish said land in my favor, which said company has declined to do, and now my entry is held for rejection, and I have lost all my time, toil, and money in attempting to acquire this land and now find myself practically destitute because of the erroneous advice, misinformation, and misinterpretation of the law, received as set forth by me herein.

Gustav A. Schaeffer, being first duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: I settled on the northwest quarter of section 23, township 27 north, range 9 east, Willamette meridian, the same being in Seattle district; said settlement being made on April 18, 1904, and being made with view to occupation as a homstead in good faith. Said land was at the time of settlement unsurveyed; that the survey thereof was filed in the land office on or about April 18, 1912; that I filed my homestead application on April 18, 1912, in the local land office at Seattle, Wash.; that I am married and have lived and resided on said land continuously from April 18, 1904, to the present time and have made said place my home, my improvements being about $1,800 in value; that I have cleared 1 acre of land and have the same under cultivation, have a three-room house 14 by 24, with addition, 12 by 14, large woodshed, root house, 24 fruit trees set out, and about 100 fruit trees in nursery on said land, have built trail and spent about $395 in contributing to settler's bridge, built to enable settlers to cross Skykomish River, and, in addition thereto, contributed labor thereon; that I was induced to go on said land by reason of a letter from the honorable Secretary of the Interior dated March 31, 1904, and official circular of the General Land Office approved February 14, 1899, being led to believe by local land office officials and said official circular that if I settled on said land prior to survey with the view of making a homestead entry and otherwise complied with the homestead laws, my right would be superior to the right of the Northern Pacific Railway Co., and that said railroad company would be requested to relinquish said land, the direct inference in said circular and the assurances of local land office officials being that said request was mandatory on the railway company, and that the relinquishment by it of my claim would necessarily follow; that my homestead entry was filed as soon as the same could be lawfully filed, and I received no notice from my said application until on or about ——— I received a notice from my attorney, Joseph Gregory, of Seattle, Wash., inclosing a copy of letter from General Land Office that the Northern Pacific Railway Co. had refused to relinquish, and that my claim was held for rejection, and that I was not advised by my said attorney as to my rights; that I did not know that said letter was a rejection of my claim, and that my said attorney did nothing beyond mail the same to me; that by reason of the failure of my said attorney to advise me of my rights my time of appeal has inadvertently gone by, and I am now without relief except as Congress may in its wisdom deem fit to grant me. Further affiant saith not.

Affidavit.

STATE OF WASHINGTON, County of Spokane, ss:

I, Arthur T. O'Neil, being first duly sworn, on oath depose and say that I am now and at all time herein mentioned was a citizen of the United States of America, over the age of 21 years, and qualified to make homestead entry on Government land; that my home and post-office address is Baring, Wash.; that on or about September 7, 1909, I made homestead settlement of unsurveyed Government land located in the county of King, State of Washington, which land has since been surveyed and described as the south one-half of the south one-half of section 3, township 26 north, range 10 east, Willamette meridian.

That prior to making said homestead settlement, and on or about August, 1909, with one David J. Johns (homestead settler on adjoining land) I consulted with one Joseph Gregory, a land attorney of Seattle, Wash., and was advised by said attorney that a settler, making homestead settlement on unsurveyed land which a survey later locates as an odd-numbered section of land within the limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railway Co., would be protected, and that it was mandatory for said railway company to accept scrip in lieu of land so settled upon; that said attorney at that time supported his opinion by a decision represented to be the latest decision by the highest court. That both prior to and after said settlement I consulted the register and receiver of the United States land office at Seattle, Wash., and was informed by said register and receiver that all land prior to survey was Government land, and a party making bona fide settlement prior to survey would have prior right over the railway company, in the event that survey located said settled land on an odd-numbered section within the grant to the railway company. I was further given a circular from the General Land Office, supporting the advices and opinions so given me.

That I believed the information and advice as given me by said attorney, the register and receiver of the land office, and as contained in the said circular of the General Land Office, and in reliance thereon, and in good faith, I made homestead settlement of said land. That I have made improvements thereon of the value of about $700; said improvements consist of house, 14 by 16 feet; shed, 12 by 14 feet; garden patch; cleared 1 acre of land and about 3 miles of trail. That I have made said land my home since the date of settlement, and lived thereon continuously until the latter part of January, 1913, with the exception of short intervals, when it was necessary for me to seek and obtain employment in the mill and stores at Baring, Wash., a station on the Great Northern Railway. Located about one-half mile on air line from the nearest corner of said land and about 4 miles by road and trail from the buildings situate thereon. That about the latter part of January, 1913, after the rejection of my said homestead entry, and after appeal taken to the Department of the Interior, upon the advice of my attorney of record, Edwin H. Flick, Seattle, Wash., I came to Spokane, under the necessity of earning a livelihood, and am temporarily employed in Spokane pending the outcome of said appeal and litigation.

That after said land was surveyed and opened for entry, I made homestead application to enter said land, and my said entry was rejected by the register and receiver of the United States land office at Seattle, Wash., from which rejection I have appealed to the Department of the Interior, demands has been made by said Interior Department upon the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to relinquish said land in my favor, which the said railway company has refused to do. If my said entry is finally rejected and refused, I will have lost all my time, toil, and money in a bona fide attempt to acquire this land under the homestead laws and acting upon the reliance of the information and advice given me, as aforesaid.

355–357 Lumber Exchange, Seattle, Wash.

SIR: Answering your letter of March 16, 1907, respecting settlement of your brother on NW. ¼, Sec. 17, T. 26 N., R. 11 E., Washington, I advise you that said tract is unsurveyed land within the primary limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad grant upon definite location of December 8, 1884, at which date its right vested; that the temporary withdrawal of the land, March 18, 1905, for forest reserve did not affect the company's right; and that the land was released from said reservation July 6, 1905.

Therefore, if your brother located on the land since the definite location of the road and prior to the survey in the field of the land in question, he may, when the plat of the survey becomes filed in the local land office, submit his homestead application, with election under act of July 1, 1898, to retain the land (forms of which will be furnished by the district officers on request), upon which, if found correct, the railroad company will be requested to relinquish its rights to the land.

Very respectfully,

R. A. BALLINGER, Commissioner.

The letter referred to in the affidavit of G. A. Schaeffer is set out below.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 31, 1904.

G. A. SCHAEFFER, Esq.,
Index, Wash.

SIR: In reply to your letter of March 15, 1904, asking if it is safe to settle on Sec. 23, T. 27 N., R. 9 E., Washington, I advise you that said section appears to be an unsurveyed section within the primary limits of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad (now Railway) Co., and that the right of the company attached thereto on definite location of the road, September 4, 1884, but provision is made by act of July 1, 1898, respecting settlements on such lands subsequent to January 1, 1898.

I inclose a copy of circular issued under said act, and invite your attention to the parts marked on pages 4 and 6 thereof.

The office regrets that it can not at present send you a copy of circular relating to public lands, as you request, as the supply is exhausted, but will forward same so soon as a new edition is received.

Very respectfully,

J. MACEY, Acting Assistant Commissioner.

Now, none of these settlers were lawyers or versed in the law, and were all of that class of men who are not versed in the intricacies of the law or in the subtle meanings it places on words and phrases, and when they read in an official circular of the General Land Office that the act of July 1, 1898, makes special provision for settlers who located on land after January 1, 1898, and that their claims, as stated in paragraph 6 of said circular, are placed on the same footing as prior settlers, except that they did not have the right to relinquish and select other lands in lieu of the land settled upon. And they read further that they must continue their settlement of said land until survey is filed in the local land office, and that after survey, and not until then, they must file their homestead entry; and, as stated in paragraph 23 of said official circular, that on the transmission to the railroad company of lists of land to be relinquished that the company will be required to relinquish.

All of the foregoing is set out in such detail to show the bona fides of these settlers. They went on the land in good faith, and intended to make the same their home, and did make the same their home.

Now the equities are with the settlers. The railroad company at any time since September, 1884, by paying the cost of survey, could have secured patents to their lands. But, no; because land in private ownership is a subject of taxation, and is subject also to adverse possession, the railroad company, by the failure to insist on the issuance of patents to it, has taken advantage of the technical title to the land vested in the United States Government to allow this state of affairs to continue. For instance, the railroad company claims that it is the real owner of odd-numbered sections within the grant, but that it is not the technical owner for the reason that the legal title is in the Government, and that said lands can not be taxed, because you can not tax the Government; and no one can acquire adverse title, because the Government is not subject to the statute of limitations.

It is a matter of elementary law, and unnecessary to cite authorities, that as to the Government the statute of limitations does not run; but if said Government legislates along that line, then it would be subject to adverse titles, the same as individuals. There can be no question that the Government can pass a statute of limitation as to privately owned property, nor can there be any question as to the authority of the Government to pass a statute of limitations making land, the legal title of which is vested in the Government, but the beneficial interest, vested in private parties, subject to adverse claims.

Now, here is the state of affairs: In vast stretches of territory along the line of the Northern Pacific every odd-numbered section within the grant is or was the property of the Northern Pacific, as claimed by it. Vast numbers of sections remain undisposed of by it. In the State of Washington every alternate section of a strip of land 80 miles wide, running in a general easterly and westerly direction, was Northern Pacific land. The even-numbered sections, except such as have been declared in the forest reserves, have been taken up by homesteaders; the odd-numbered sections, unsurveyed and unoccupied, were gradually taken up by settlers intending to make the same their homesteads. It is a matter of common knowledge that the Northern Pacific had knowledge of all this, and can tell to within a few days just when each of its claims was settled on, for the reason that it has constantly had its inspectors and cruisers going through its land all the time. Now the railroad company claims the beneficial interest in this land, yet it would be the first to also claim that as the title is still in the Government, limitations will not run against it. Schaeffer has been on his land 10 years, Schultheiss 6 years, O'Neil 7 years, and many others whose claims are not yet surveyed have been on still longer. The railroad company knew they were on these claims, knew they were claiming them as their homesteads, and in all cases allowed their claims to go unchallenged until they filed their homestead entries; and as to the claims still unsurveyed, the railroad company makes no effort of any kind to get the settlers off.

These settlers are American citizens; they have a right to homestead claims under the laws; they located in good faith on unsurveyed, unoccupied public land of the United States; they were advised by land attorneys, land-office officials, land commissioners of the United States, and the official circular issued by the General Land Office itself that they were entitled to their entries, provided they otherwise maintained their residence and performed the necessary acts in improving, etc. As to their good faith there can be no dispute. Neither can there be any successful contradiction that they were misinformed by the Government itself. On the other hand, the railroad company knowingly allows them to locate on the land, build homes thereon, build trails, clear the land, plant fruit trees, and do other things usually done by farmers in working their places.

The Northern Pacific claims that the grant to it was a grant in præsenti. It has been held that the grant was a grant in præsenti with condition subsequent. The Government has always assumed the authority to legislate in reference to the grant without the consent of the railroad. And clearly the Government has the right to legislate similar to the act of July 1, 1898.

But, aside from all that, if it can be successfully urged that the Poindexter bill is objectionable as to form, as a proposition of law the Government has the strict right to pass such act as will give the settlers their claims, said act being in the nature of a statute of limitations running against the railroad company.

The settlers realize that as the law now stands and as the General Land Office according to its precedents now rules, they are apparently without relief excepting such relief as Congress extends to them by appropriate legislation.

Everything in the power of Congress should be done for these settlers; justice and equity demands it; and the high respect with which the Government at Washington is held by these homesteaders should not be lowered by failure to do everything that it is right in the premises to do for these homesteaders.

Respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. MANN. I notice that in Senate amendment No. 7 it provides that all Senate resolutions passed prior to July 1, 1914, authorizing the payment for clerical and messenger services from the contingent fund of the Senate are hereby repealed.

Does the gentleman think that Congress can repeal a resolution of the Senate, or that the House has anything to do with a resolution of the Senate, or that the Senate might have inserted an amendment repealing a House resolution which the House had passed relating to its contingent fund?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The House has nothing to do with repealing a simple resolution of the Senate; but occasionally the Senate has spasms of virtue; and if it had passed a simple resolution in its own body repealing all former resolutions, that fact would not have been known to the world, and so they asked the concurrence of the House.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should not call this a resolution that came from senatorial virtue. This comes in connection with the proposition to put on the annual pay roll a large number of employees who are not now on the annual pay roll. Then it proposes for Congress to repeal a simple Senate resolution. We pass resolutions to adjourn the House for three days. We may next have the Senate putting an item in an appropriation bill repealing it. What jurisdiction have we over a simple Senate resolution? It is true it is something like the man in jail when his lawyer said they could not put him in, but he was in. Here is a case where the Senate has inserted the item in the bill.

I would like to ask the gentleman about Senate amendment No. 49, which proposes to increase the salary of the clerk to the Secretary of the Treasury from $2,500 to $3,000 a year. Of course the gentleman knows that if we increase this clerk's salary every department of the Government will ask for the same increase next year. Is it to be the policy of the committee to increase the salary of these private secretaries to $3,000 a year? Most of them are merely stenographers.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The committee realizes the danger that the gentleman suggests—that other secretaries will ask for a corresponding increase—but the information before the committee was that this man was a particularly valuable man, well worth the salary we have provided for him, and that no smaller salary would keep him.

Mr. MANN. At one time the Secretary of the Treasury desired to see me about some matter and I called at the office, the last time I was in there. I do not know whether it was this man, but I suppose it was. It was then about half past 9 in the morning. He told me that if I would sit down he thought possibly the Secretary would be able to see me by 1 o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman think he rendered the gentleman from Illinois good service in saving him three hours and a half waiting?

Mr. MANN. He told me that the Secretary was busily engaged with a number of gentlemen working out some very difficult problem, and that if I could wait three hours I might meet the Secretary. I kicked in the door and went in; there was nobody in there with the Secretary. He was very glad to see me. Now, such a man may be a competent stenographer and deserve an increase of salary from $2,500 to $3,000. I bear him no ill will on that account, for he never interfered with me. But I would like to ask is all private secretaries are to receive $3,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This is the only one whose salary we have increased.

Mr. MANN. This is the only one whose salary the Senate has increased this time, but they will all have their salaries increased hereafter.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. MANN. Each of the distinguished Members of this House has an allowance of $1,500 for a secretary or clerk, and there is not a Member of the House who ought not to have a better private secretary than the Secretary of the Treasury requires, because all that man has to do is to sit there and try to turn off people who come in, and that is practically all he does do. He was not even successful at that in my case.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina, with reference to amendment No. 6, is it the established policy of the House to permit the Senate to increase its clerical force without reference to the necessity or the number or the salary or anything about it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the comity that has always existed between the two Houses is that each House is the judge of its own necessities. We complain bitterly of the expenses of the Senate, but in the end we always yield.

Mr. GARNER. Can the gentleman tell me in what proportion the clerical force of the Senate and the House has been increased within the last 10 years?

Mr. MANN. Make it the last year.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. My recollection is that this particular paragraph in 1905 carried $167,000, and for the year 1915 the bill provides $418,000.

Mr. GARNER. How much is the increase this year?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The increase is from $369,500 for the current year to $418,000 and something for the coming year. That, however, is only in appearance, because this force is already on the pay roll of the Senate, being paid out of the contingent fund. We are simply transferring them to the legislative bill.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, the increase of clerical force in the Senate within the past 10 years has been in excess of 100 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Very much in excess of 100 per cent.

Mr. GARNER. And there is to be no stop to this? There is no way, under the comity of which the gentleman speaks as existing between the two Houses, by which the House can put a stop to this outrageous extravagance in that particular branch of Congress?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman has the remedy at his disposal just as much as the committee has.

Mr. GARNER. And that remedy would be only to reject this amendment? Will the gentleman from South Carolina join with those who believe we ought to put a stop to it, who believe that we are as much the guardians of the Treasury as the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol, and who believe that it is our duty, even if we are Members of the same Congress, to see to it that they do not spend the people's money extravagantly in their own behalf? Will the gentleman join with us in rejecting that amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina is willing always to engage in any contest that promises reasonable results, but the gentleman from South Carolina does not believe that anything can be accomplished by the contest which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from South Carolina should agree, and this House should agree, to insist upon its judgment as to the amount appropriated for the clerical assistance of the Senate, and we should agree to all of the other amendments in this legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, as they have been agreed to in conference, and disagree to this particular amendment, even to the extent of letting this bill fail. To do so would attract the attention of the country, and I believe since the Senators are to be elected by a direct vote of the people, such a course would teach some of them the lesson that they better take care of the people's funds rather than spend it recklessly on their own behalf.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I hope the speech of the gentleman from Texas will be generally read throughout the country. I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARNER. I do not know what the gentleman means by agreeing to the conference report. I presume he means to agree to those amendments that have been agreed to by the conferees?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, all of the amendments that have been agreed to are in the conference report. All of the amendments that are still in disagreement are not involved in my motion. After the conference report is adopted we will take up these amendments for consideration.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the gentleman's attention to amendment No. 101, in order to have an opportunity, at least, of moving to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That opportunity will be granted.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I understood the gentleman from South Carolina correctly, but is his motion that we take up and agree to all of the amendments that have been agreed to by the committee on conference?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the motion.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to call attention to amendment No. 38, being an increase in salary from $3,000 to $3,500 for the Chief Examiner in the Civil Service Commission. Has that item been agreed to?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It has.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the duties of that examiner.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, when we make up the legislative appropriation bill there is always many earnest efforts made to get salaries increased. No showing has ever been made before our committee stronger than the showing made in favor of the increase in this man's salary. He was appointed to this particular place when the civil-service law was passed. He has been there since its incipiency. He is an encyclopedia as to all of the business of the Civil Service Commission, and he has never had an increase in 30 years.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; and I contend he does not need it now. I would like to ask the gentleman one other question. Who examines these examiners in order to see whether they are qualified for the positions which they hold?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. They are in the classified service, and are men who, on account of peculiar merit and ability and proficiency, are selected for that place.

Mr. CULLOP. I will agree with the gentleman that some of them have very peculiar merit, but I want to show how peculiar it is. An instance of this kind of merit has been called to my attention where two of these examiners or inspectors, one detailed from the city of Washington and the other from Topeka, Kans., went out to a little village in Indiana and made an investigation and reported the result of their examination to the Civil Service Commission, and every man that they examined, according to their report as furnishing evidence against the person whose merits they were to look into, filed affidavits the exact reverse of what these inspectors had reported to the commission, and made the statements in their affidavits showing they had not made the statements attributed to them. Others stated they had given the facts to these inspectors and each of these examiners had refused to report them and thereby made a false report, according to the sworn affidavits of the men whom they examined. Now, Mr. Speaker, it will surely not be insisted that men who make this kind of a report ought to have their salaries increased or ought in any administration to hold a public office or a position under that administration.

Here was a case whereby to accomplish their partisan purposes, these inspectors reported as facts just the reverse of what the persons examined detailed to them. Can there be any justification for such conduct? Should such men be permitted to hold responsible places under any administration, much less under one the policies of which they are not in sympathy with, but are hostile to? Are such men calculated to purify the public service? Can anyone imagine the perpetration of a more dastardly act than when the character of a person is under investigation, and the evidence of his neighbors and friends is being taken; that the men appointed to take and report the same to the tribunal which is to pass on the same shall distort the same, suppress the facts, and report the reverse of what the parties stated, such conduct merits the severest condemnation, and the officials should be promptly dismissed from the service. Good character should not be assassinated in this manner. It will bring reproach upon any administration that permits it. To be an applicant for office laudable, and every man should have the benefit of the testimony of his neighbors and friends, and when investigated the facts should be reported, not distorted nor suppressed, statements of witnesses should be given as made, not reported as saying the reverse of what they in truth and in fact stated. If men on this order are to be employed in this important service, what will be the result? The public service will degenerate and corruption will predominate. No wonder this branch of the service has long since become regarded as a great partisan machine, operated for partisan purposes, and to accomplish partisan designs. For years it has been so regarded by the great majority of the people of this country who have carefully observed its operations. Shall it be continued in this manner or shall these men be discharged and men put in their places who will administer the law fairly, honestly, and justly? This is the question now before the people, and we feel assured the President will, when he investigates this matter, as he has been called upon to do, renovate the whole service and place it in the hands of men who will discharge their duties faithfully and properly.

But, Mr. Speaker, if this was the only case of the kind occurring in this branch of the service, there might be some excuse offered for this outrageous conduct in the case to which I have alluded, but it is not an isolated case.

Other Members have told me of other cases in which examiners were sent out to make investigation and afterwards, on account of the false reports they filed, the men who were examined filed their affidavits contradicting and repudiating the statements they had been reported as making. Cases in which the inspectors had reported falsely the statements of witnesses, distorted the facts, and suppressed the truth. Now, this is the condition of this service, and this examiner whose salary has been increased is, as I understand it, at the head of this department of that branch of the service. Should it not be reduced because of his want of capacity or integrity? He either knows of this practice or he is inefficient. Now, is this increase made because of his incapacity or is it made because of meritorious service? It seems to me that because of this deplorable condition it needs renovating, and a general house cleaning should be made in this department, and at once, before scandal overtakes it. The truth is that the service is so rotten in this department and so offensive, that when the man in the moon rides over it at night he is compelled to hold his nose with both hands. [Laughter.] That is the condition of the Civil Service Department of the Government and as it has been for many years. Now, affidavits, more than 25 in number, have been filed, where the men, one by one, who were examined deny they ever made any such statements as attributed to them, and others say emphatically they stated facts which were deliberately suppressed by the inspectors.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yielded to the gentleman for a question. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. CULLOP. Well, I want enough to show to the gentleman why this increase ought not to be made, and I think I can convince him in a very short time, not only that it should not be made, but that new blood and better men should be placed in charge of the work in that department, men who will do right and not wrong. A change is required.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to have three minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. CULLOP. I thank the gentleman from South Carolina. If he has not investigated this department as chairman of the committee making these appropriations I think I can furnish him some light by which he can easily determine whether salaries ought to be increased or decreased in this department of the public service. Now, all I contend is that salaries ought to be increased for meritorious and valuable services not for services of this kind, not for perfidy, but for good conduct; and yet those two examiners, I am informed by the commission, are the best in the service. God pity the others, for nobody else will, if they are the best. [Laughter.] The seal of condemnation should be placed on them forever. In the case to which I have alluded, and which I have examined, they were dealing with high-minded upright people, and they resented this base misrepresentation of what they had said about their neighbor and friend; they resented the conduct of men in official place refusing to report their statements as made by them. They did not approve any such partisan efforts to secure partisan ends. No fair-minded man could do so. They believe that when they gave a certain state of facts in behalf of a candidate the same should not be suppressed but should be reported as given. They believe in a square deal, and they believe officials such as these who will resort to such indefensible methods should be promptly discharged from the service and honest, upright ones put in their places who will administer the law fairly and squarely, and give justice to every man.

Will any gentleman contend for a single moment that this kind of service will enhance the confidence of the people in the civil-service propaganda? Does this not invite derision?

The civil service law was enacted for a valuable purpose in this country, but it never was enacted to be abused as it has been abused for the last 15 years and is now being abused by the present administration of it. Under the present force as now organized it needs badly reorganization and its partisan machine dumped in the scrap pile as old junk, and the sooner the better, and I venture the assertion that when President Wilson investigates this department there will be a house cleaning, and such men as these who have been perpetrating such outrages on the public, abusing their official authority, will be promptly retired from the public service. Everyone knows that he will not tolerate such conduct in his administration. He believes in the right thing being done, a square deal given everyone, and he will not tolerate such misconduct or official abuse. He is too high-minded to tolerate or suffer it. Mr. Speaker, the expenditure or waste of the people's money by this Civil Service Commission can not be justified or defended, and while on this matter I desire to call the attention to its waste of money. The matter over which this controversy arose is in reference to a little post office, in a village of about 500 population, and the salary amounts to about $750 per year. The postmaster resigned last fall; two or three inspectors had already been there; a civil-service examination was had; several were examined; complaint was made about one of the parties examined to the commission; the party made a good grade, and then it was the duty of the commission to certify him in his order and let the Post Office Department settle the question of the complaint; but the commission assumed that duty, which belonged under the law to the Post Office Department. One inspector out of the office of the commission here in Washington and one with headquarters in Topeka, Kans., were detailed to investigate this affair. They did so at the expense of the people and made their report, which I have alluded to, and which every man examined repudiated as soon as he learned of its untrue character. Think of the absurdity of such a procedure. Nearly every patron of the office filed a petition resenting the slander contained in the report of the inspectors.

The people examined by them filed their affidavits repudiating it, and then two of the commissioners journeyed 800 miles out West to this little village to investigate their investigators at the expense of the Government, and came back worried over their arduous journey and severe ordeal in this stupendous matter; and the people in the little village are still without a new postmaster. Goodness only knows how long it will take under this procedure or how much it will cost the Government to get these people in this little town a postmaster. This clearly demonstrates the waste, the folly, the useless extravagance in this department. It needs less money and a better administration. Four-fifths of the patrons of that office have by petition stated who they want for postmaster, the examination shows he is qualified, the affidavits of people who have known him all his life show him to be a moral, upright, respected citizen, well qualified for the place, and the Civil Service Commission, 800 miles distant, say they know better than those people who ought to be the postmaster in that village. Think of it; consider the ridiculousness of the position. Shame upon it. Banish the thought forever. Such a deadly blow at local self-government, such a centralization of power in a Republic like ours is destructive of the intent and purposes of the good and patriotic men who founded this great Government. Shall such wastes of public money, expended in the denial of the people's choice for their local offices, especially when that choice is for a competent, upright, honest, and moral man, as is the case in this instance, as the proof of those who know him best shows beyond a reasonable doubt, be tolerated and condoned? I hope not. Shall salaries of men who assist in perpetrating such wrongs, such official misconduct, be increased? I hope not. Better refuse to appropriate to pay them at all.

It is not the fault of the law that brings about the unjustifiable conduct in this instance, but it is the fault of the men in this department of the service charged with the administration of the law. They are to blame, and they should be made to suffer for its maladministration. It is reprehensible. The men responsible for this are not in sympathy with President Wilson, his administration, or his policies, and they are operating their machine to accomplish their partisan purposes and to make people dissatisfied with the administration. They have no other purpose in view and are actuated by no other motive. Such conduct as has been displayed in this case makes the law unpopular, and arouses the indignation of the people against it, and well it should. The case demands the investigation of the President and merited punishment promptly administered by the discharge of these two inspectors from the service and all who have aided and abetted them in their nefarious business. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] has no relevancy to the matter under consideration. This paragraph deals with a man who is stationed in Washington who is at the head of all the examinations conducted by the Civil Service Commission. The gentleman from Indiana is undertaking to narrate to the House an instance in which two persons in the service of the Government, presumably in Indiana, made some report that was not satisfactory. Whatever may have been the dereliction of the local examiners, it has nothing to do with the salary of this man——

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. CULLOP. They are not local examiners; one of them is sent out of the office, one is chief of division here, and the other was brought from the office at Topeka, Kans.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We are talking about a chief examiner and not about somebody else.

Mr. CULLOP. But they are directly under this chief examiner, who has charge and control of them.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman has his remedy; he can appeal to the Civil Service Commission, and if anybody is guilty of the kind of conduct of which the gentleman has spoken, that person will lose his place. If the gentleman can prove his facts, I am sure he will get his remedy. Mr. Speaker, let us adopt the conference report.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. I notice the conferees declined to accept Senate amendments 170 and 174, which amendments provided for some 16 additional clerks in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I offered an amendment carrying this increase when the bill was before the House, and was in hopes the conferees could see their way clear to accept that amendment of the Senate. Certainly very strong arguments were made in favor of this increase.

Did the committee make any provision whatever for clerks in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; the committee has done just exactly what the General Land Office wanted done. The Senate amendments were intended to take care of 12 people who are now in the service of the General Land Office and have been paid out of the lump-sum appropriation. The purpose of the Land Office in asking for this amendment was to transfer that force to the statutory roll. We have provided elsewhere in the bill that that particular force, consisting of 12 men, and 4 additional men shall continue to be paid out of the lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose the gentleman has reference to amendment 191, on page 119, which has been agreed to, and which allows the use of $25,000 of the continuing appropriation for the survey of lands within railroad land grants and other like appropriations for the pay of clerks in Washington. There was some discussion here the other day with regard to the land-grant fund. There were some of us who believed that the continuing appropriation had become so depleted and was likely to be so much further depleted that it would be insufficient, as it has been in the past, for the speedy surveys of land-grant lands. Now, do I understand the General Land Office, or the officials or those in charge, prefer to have this fund, which they claim to be so anxious to use for the survey of land-grant lands, depleted in the sum of $25,000 for the payment of clerks here in Washington, rather than to have those clerks provided for in another way and put on the statutory roll? Is that the situation?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We had three gentlemen of the Land Office before the conferees, and I think I am safe in saying that what we have done is satisfactory to those gentlemen, if they were able to make themselves understood.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman that rather bears out the suggestion I made the other day, when some of the gentlemen were agonizing to carry out the views of the Land Office in this matter, that what the Land Office was desirous of preserving the indefinite appropriation for was not altogether to enable the Land Office to make surveys which we want to have made, but also to make provision to pay some clerks here in Washington. Certain western gentlemen were very insistent that the Committee on Appropriations should not make $735,000 available for these surveys within railroad-land grant limits. They wanted, rather, to preserve this insufficient, indefinite appropriation which, it was said, the Land Office is to make large use of to survey extensive tracts this year for the first time. The next thing we hear is that officials of the Land Office are before the conferees lobbying in favor of taking over a third of that sum to pay clerical services here in Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Not lobbying; because we sent for them.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, giving testimony. The effect of it was to impress the committee with the fact that they preferred to deplete the survey fund for the payment of clerks here in Washington rather than to have these clerks put on the statutory roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not care to put them in the attitude, either, of saying that they preferred to do it. But they explained to the committee that they wanted to put these people on the statutory roll, or that these amendments were intended for that purpose, and they intended to keep four other men in the Land Office out of this lump sum, and we put all of them in the lump sum.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman says they preferred this arrangement——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I said this was satisfactory, if we understood it.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood the gentleman to say that that was just what they wanted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is, to put these people to work.

Mr. MONDELL. This situation presents a very different picture from the picture presented here in an agonizing way the other day, when we were trying to give the Land Office all the money they wanted for surveys in land-grant limits. Then it was said they needed all this money in order that they might make surveys. Now it seems that at the very same time they were lobbying before the conferees over at the Senate end to deplete the fund to pay clerks.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I said that they did not lobby. We would not have that. We sent for them.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well. I will say testifying, if the gentleman prefers.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman give the names of the three gentlemen who appeared before the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not remember the names, but they were men who were evidently capable of speaking for the Land Office.

Mr. FALCONER. Has the gentleman had the matter of the survey of railroad land grants up in any part of his committee work?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The committee has had nothing to do with land grants and has not discussed the subject.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, for many months there has been carried on a correspondence with the Department of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office on this question of surveying unsurveyed railway land grants in the western part of the United States, and there is no question that is of more interest to the people of the Western States, or several of the Western States, than this. There are something like 700,000 acres, as suggested here the other day, in the State of Washington of unsurveyed railway land grants paying no taxes. It seems very extraordinary, Mr. Speaker, that anyone from the Land Department should go before this committee and ask to use any portion of this fund of $100,000 for any purpose other than for surveying these lands. I ask the gentleman if this $25,000 is to be expended for the purpose of providing for the work of the railroad indemnity land-grant surveys?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know what they are going to do with it. It pays 16 men. What they are going to do, I do not know.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, if I may have a minute——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, the railroads have deposited with the Government $128,000 for the purpose of this survey, putting up dollar for dollar with the Government. The duty of this Congress is to at least leave the continuing appropriation of $100,000 intact. It is impossible to use the $128,000 unless the Government puts up an equal sum. And if we deliberately take $25,000 from the $100,000, instead of depositing $128,000, as the railroads have done, the Congress is not doing its duty. The general feeling in the West is, and it may be correct, that the Government is responsible for holding up these surveys, possibly at the suggestion of interested parties. If the continuing appropriation be dissipated in other ways, the odium is upon the Congress of making the Government a holding concern for the railroad companies, so that they can avoid taxation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FALCONER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that, in the first place, the $100,000 that he speaks of has been depleted permanently, so that as a matter of fact it is only $81,000, and that with this further depletion it will be $55,000?

Mr. FALCONER. The gentleman from Wyoming stated that as a fact the other day.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman give me two minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more, Mr. Speaker; but I am going to move the previous question pretty soon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, the Northern Pacific Railroad has published in the newspapers in the West, where this is a live question, a statement to the effect that the Department of the Interior and the Congress are responsible for this delay.

The railroads have put it up to the Congress. Private individuals and companies have been paying taxes, but the railroads, so far as these unsurveyed lands are concerned, have been paying nothing in taxes for 40 years past, and it means, and has meant hitherto, vast sums of money in the pockets of these railroad companies that of right should be in the Public Treasury, in the different States, and in the counties in the States. The State of Idaho and the State of Washington, and, indeed, all the States west of the Missouri River suffer from this condition, and I say that if these representatives of the commissioner's office came before the gentlemen and urged the conferees on this bill to take $25,000 of this money, they did it knowing that they were defeating the purpose of the continuing appropriation, thus depriving the taxpayers of more than $25,000 a year in taxes, and it results in the benefit to the railroad companies and to no one else. The Department of the Interior in the past has done this very thing, and the country is aware of that fact, and we should see that the present Department of the Interior and the General Land Office be advised as to this matter. The men who did that in the past were not good public officers, and the continuance of that program now will arouse the public to action.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman from Washington willfully or in some other way misstated the facts.

Mr. FALCONER. I would like to have the gentleman state the facts, then.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I never said that the people from the Land Office urged us to do anything of the kind. I stated that the people from the Land Office came before the conferees to explain to us these amendments. They explained that 12 people who were carried to the statutory roll by the Senate amendment were now being paid out of a lump sum, and out of the other lump sum which we have left they were going to carry 4 other men, making 16 in all.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And the conferees—and there was a gentleman on the conference committee who has had far more experience in land matters than the gentleman from Washington——

Mr. FALCONER. I doubt it——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The conferees decided that instead of bringing these clerks who are now paid out of a lump sum on to the statutory roll, so as to make them permanent employees, we would keep them another year under the lump sum.

Mr. FALCONER. Will the gentleman yield, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is what happened.

Mr. FALCONER. I would like to ask the gentleman who is responsible for this amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know.

Mr. FALCONER. It is the gentleman's business to know.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is not anything of the kind. I am not a Member of the Senate. The gentleman from Washington had the same opportunity to read the RECORD that I had; and, being so greatly interested in public lands, he ought to watch the RECORD on that subject.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understand that this amendment came from the Senate, and the House conferees agreed to it. Is that right? You are now wanting the House to agree to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Senate provided that 12 people be carried on the statutory roll. They are now being paid out of the lump sum. The Senate also provided for the lump sum to be used, and the gentlemen from the General Land Office explained to us that 4 men were to be paid out of the lump sum, so that the conferees agreed that the entire 16 men should be paid out of the lump sum, but that their compensation should not exceed $25,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. So that it gets back to this proposition, after all, that the representatives of the General Land Office did want this amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The representatives of the General Land Office did want the committee to provide for 16 men. That is what they wanted.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask the gentleman to yield to me three minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman three minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to undertake to fix the responsibility for this amendment, nor to impugn the motives of anybody that favors it. I simply want to make a few remarks on the general policy that has been pursued by the Department of the Interior in regard to the survey of these public lands.

I do not hesitate to say that the action of the two gentlemen who occupied the position of Secretary of the Interior prior to the time that the office was occupied by the distinguished gentleman who now holds it knowingly or unknowingly worked all those years for the benefit of the railroads and against the people in the West. The two Secretaries of the Interior, Mr. Fisher and Mr. Garfield, are the ones I mean.

Mr. GARNER. How did Brother Ballinger get along during that time?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Ballinger showed more regard for the people of the West than either of the distinguished gentlemen I have mentioned. It has not been found where he was hand in glove with the railroads.

Mr. GARNER. Did he survey any more of these lands during the time he was in the office than the two Secretaries you mention?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. He probably would have done so if he had had an opportunity. The question that I want to call to the attention of the House is this, that the responsibility primarily rests with the Secretary of the Interior. For years we have tried to have these lands belonging to the railroads surveyed, so that they could be placed upon the tax rolls in the States, and the railroads have put up their part—and I am not sure but that they have acted in good faith—of the cost of the surveys, but under all the circumstances we have never been able to secure the money from the Federal Treasury with which to survey these lands. Now, the question is, why?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman and his party have been in power for 16 years. They have held the purse strings and controlled the appropriations. Why did not your party make the appropriations and have these lands surveyed?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Why do you open your mouth and condemn me when I have been condemning my own party for what has been done? [Laughter.] It is impossible to please the gentleman from Texas even when we abuse the Republicans. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. What I wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to was this, that if we have not appropriated enough money during the last 10 or 12 years the blame is with Congress as much as it is with the Secretary of the Interior; and if we are failing now to make the appropriation that the gentleman is contending for, the blame is here and not down at the other end.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HUMPRHEY of Washington. In a moment. What I am trying to do is to get the Democratic Party right on one proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The other day the House did attempt to remedy this situation. The Committee on Appropriations brought in a proposition which would have remedied it. The department flooded this House with appealing letters, bluffing letters, and scared certain gentlemen——

Mr. GARNER. Were those letters written by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MONDELL. By the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the result was that a point of order was made.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask two minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more, although this thing has been repeated very often.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, well, the gentleman should not get impatient. This is a hot day, and there are not very many of us here, and the way to make progress is to keep good-natured. The gentleman may not know that, but I give him that little suggestion. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I was trying to impress the House with the fact that we ought at some time to survey these public lands. It is to the advantage of the Government; it is to the advantage of everybody else. I am not condemning the railroads, because apparently they have shown good faith. But there is one thing absolutely sure, that for years the Secretaries of the Interior have failed to do their duty. They have given one excuse after another, and now we find this amendment coming here, indorsed by the Land Department, attempting to take a portion of this meager fund for the benefit of some clerks.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, there are many things about this item that I do not understand and do not pretend to, but the action of the House and what was said here a day or two ago when the sundry civil bill was under consideration is fresh in the memory of gentlemen here. I sympathize with the gentleman from Washington and the gentlemen from the West in their desire to have these surveys made, but I call attention to the fact that there are 28 line parties now out surveying in the West, and doing the work the gentleman wishes to have done. I know that is true, because I put into the RECORD the letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office day before yesterday which emphatically said so. Now, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER] will recall that two or three days ago, when the sundry civil bill was under consideration here, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] was trying to knock out the entire $100,000 continuing appropriation items, and they brought in a provision here in the bill to that effect. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER] and others of us were able to strike that out on a point of order, so that the $100,000 continuing appropriation would be used for the benefit of this service.

I know the demand in the West to get this land surveyed and disposed of is terrific. People out in the West are paying 5, 6, and 7 per cent taxes, because most of the land is public land, withdrawn land, or Indian land, and the weight of the burden is almost more than they can bear, and they want to get these lands put on the tax roll. The two gentlemen from Washington come in here and bemean and behound Secretary Lane and Commissioner Clay Tallman, both of whom are western men and both of whose hearts go out to every ache and pain you western gentlemen have. If there was ever a Secretary of the Interior who devoted 100 per cent of his attention to the West, it is Secretary Lane, and I am surprised that gentlemen from the West, who have so many interests at stake, should come in here with bludgeon in hand and try to assail and strike down the very best friends they have. They ought not to do it, and it is in bad taste to do it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MURDOCK. There is $100,000 available for these surveys annually? Is that correct?

Mr. FERRIS. It is a partnership fund. The railroads must put up their part and the Government puts up its part, and they survey alternate sections. It is a continuing appropriation of $100,000 a year.

Mr. MURDOCK. How do they divert any part of that fund for the office here?

Mr. FERRIS. Because Congress does not appropriate enough to do what is actually necessary. Part of this work is in the office. It is not all field parties or field work. They know what they need and how they need to use the money.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why does not Congress do it, and let these lands be surveyed? It is an injustice to the people of the West not to have the land surveyed.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true; and day before yesterday I was knocked around a good deal because I offered an amendment to increase surveys that I know ought to be increased.

Mr. MURDOCK. I voted for that.

Mr. FERRIS. The House very generously adopted that amendment. I do not wish to say anything in justification of my own action, but I had investigated this subject until I knew it was necessary, and the House sustained my proposition. The demands on the Committee on Appropriations are terrific for that appropriation, but we ought not to walk to San Francisco to save 50 cents and appropriate $50,000,000 because some scheme comes along that has little or no merit.

Mr. FALCONER. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that at no time have I condemned Secretary Lane. I have complimented him on the floor of this House many times. I do not think Secretary Lane knows anything about this. Last Saturday I talked with him for a few minutes, and I know he is in favor of the survey of unsurveyed railroad lands.

Mr. FERRIS. Of course, and they have 28 line parties out doing that work. This is a tempest about nothing. You people out West better help the department, who are trying to help you.

Mr. FALCONER. I have confidence in Secretary Lane; but I want to say that the men who went from the General Land Office and asked the conference committee for $25,000 out of this fund knew what they were doing, and they were not serving the country.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about who authorized it. I do not know whether anybody authorized it. The chairman of the committee says that they asked certain members of the General Land Office to appear, and they came before the committee and gave the information, which I have no doubt they did. Gentlemen ought not to get up and make a broadside assault upon men who are trying to keep the department going, especially when you gentlemen have had so much at their hands. You people out Northwest have just got a $35,000,000 railroad, the bulk of which is to be spent in the gentleman's own State, and I say that the two gentlemen from Washington are assaulting unjustly the hand that has in the past and will in the future help them solve their problems.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 11 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is the situation: For many years we carried in the sundry civil bill an appropriation running from $400,000 to $700,000 for the survey of public lands. In 1895 we provided a continuing appropriation of $100,000 for the survey of the Government's portion of the lands within the railroad land grant limits. So long as that $100,000 remained a continuing appropriation no part of the larger appropriation could be used for the survey of lands within land-grant limits. Several years ago the $100,000 appropriation was permanently depleted, so that it is now practically $81,000. Out of that $81,000 for the past few years the department has used, as a matter of fact, only $35,000 per annum for surveys, with the result that the lands within the land-grant limit have been surveyed at a rate which would require 24 years to survey and get them on the tax rolls.

Desirous of making available for this work the entire appropriation for surveys, the Committee on Appropriations followed the recommendations of the Secretary of the Interior and proposed the repeal of this indefinite appropriation. When they recommended the repeal of the statute they did not ask for an additional dollar for surveys. We did as they suggested, reported a provision repealing it, and added $35,000 to the amount of the appropriation. We proposed amendments under which the entire $735,000 would have been available for land-grant work. Later, after the bill was printed, the commissioner concluded he did not want the continuing appropriation repealed. A point of order was made against the repeal, and was, as I think, improperly sustained.

Now, what has happened? Then certain gentlemen were agonizing, because they said we were taking their survey funds away from them, when, as a matter of fact, we were making available eight or nine times as much as had been used in any year in the past.

Now it develops that at the very time gentlemen here were overturning the reform the committee contemplated Land Office officials were before the conferees asking to have $25,000 of the small sum available for land-grant work diverted for clerk hire, leaving only $55,000, at the most, available for this work for the coming fiscal year, when we had proposed to make as much of the $735,000 available as they desired or cared to use.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am considerably surprised at the gentlemen on the other side, particularly the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield? I am not especially criticizing the conferees for what they did; I am discussing the attitude of the Land Office in regard to this appropriation. I realize these clerks must be provided for; they would have been provided for in just this way if our repeal program had gone through.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Wyoming, as I remember, a few days ago advocated on the floor of the House that this entire fund be repealed and covered back into the Treasury. Now I understand the gentleman to make some criticism of the committee because they propose to permit $25,000 of the fund to be used for the payment of clerks necessary to do the clerical work in the General Land Office pertaining to these surveys.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. There were two propositions before the conferees. One was to pay the clerks out of the general fund and the other was to pay them out of the railroad land grant fund, already too small; and the gentleman tells us that the gentlemen from the General Land Office rather preferred to have the land-grant fund depleted.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is mistaken. I have made no statement concerning the matter. The gentleman from South Carolina has stated several times that he did not make such a statement and he did not wish to be understood as making any such intimation. The gentleman has criticized the conferees for giving authority to reduce the fund by $25,000 to pay clerical help in the General Land Office in connection with this particular survey service. And yet, only a few days ago, if the gentleman had had his will, the entire fund would have been repealed and covered into the Treasury, and none of it could have been used for surveys.

Mr. MONDELL. We would have made available $735,000 for surveys. The Senate would have probably increased it.

You could have done just what you did do in this case. They could have paid their clerks out of that fund. Otherwise, the balance of the fund would have been repealed. What the committee has done could and should have been done if the repeal had gone through.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the fact remains that if the gentleman's proposition had gone through and had been agreed to, it would have removed this particular fund entirely from the control of the Secretary of the Interior, so that he could not use it for the purpose of making these surveys.

Mr. MONDELL. That is not so, for this bill will become a law before the sundry civil bill. If there were any question about that, the gentleman could have taken the other horn of the dilemma and given them the 16 clerks that they asked for, which is the same thing.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rose to call the attention of the House to exactly what was done by the conferees. They were confronted with several amendments put on this bill by the Senate. Some of those amendments undertook, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has said, to transfer 12 clerks paid from this lump sum to the permanent roll. In addition to that, the Senate had another amendment, No. 191, in which it proposed to continue this particular fund and permit the Commissioner of the Land Office to use it for any additional clerical work that he might want done down there in the department. When the conferees were confronted with that proposition they learned from the gentleman to whom the gentleman from South Carolina referred——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. We developed the fact that it would require about $24,000 to pay these necessary clerks, and rather than agree to all of the amendments, allowing the transfer of all these clerks to the permanent roll and at the same time permitting the fund to be used for the employment of additional clerks not anticipated by Congress, the conferees agreed to cut out the amendments of the Senate placing these clerks on the permanent roll, and to limit the amount of money that might be paid out of this particular fund for clerk hire. The conferees had every confidence in the Secretary of the Interior and also in the Land Commissioner, but we thought it would be a loose sort of way to legislate, if we failed to restrict the use of this fund to the actual number of clerks which were shown to be necessary in order to do the office work which is incident to the surveying in which the gentleman seems to be so much interested. That is all there is to it. Nothing is done in this bill that has not been done heretofore, and neither the gentleman from Washington nor the gentleman from Wyoming seem to me to be consistent, inasmuch as they did not attack the previous provisions relating to this fund.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask now that the Clerk report Senate amendment No. 1, which is still in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2 of the bill, strike out lines 4 to 10, as follows: "For actual traveling expenses incurred by Senators, including actual traveling expenses of immediate and dependent members of their families, incurred in going to and returning once from each session of Congress by the nearest route usually traveled, the same to be paid on certificates duly approved as in the manner heretofore prescribed for the payment of mileage, $25,500"; and insert, "For mileage of Senators, $51,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Cox moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 1, page 2, with the following amendment:

"For mileage of Senators, $25,500, and hereafter Senators shall be paid mileage at the rate of 10 cents per mile each way while traveling from their homes to Washington City and return by the ordinary and usual routes of travel, once at each session of Congress."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendment No. 1 and amendment No. 30 may be considered together.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object. I think we ought to vote on this where we are not interested.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The SPEAKER. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to make the point of order or to reserve it?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman intends to make the point of order later on I think it would be better to have it set ed now.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether I will make it or not.

Mr. COX. I can not see any use in devoting considerable time to argument of the matter if the point of order is to be made later on.

Mr. MANN. I suppose there will not be much time taken on the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, there are a great many amendments that must be discussed more or less, and I think if the gentleman desires to make the point of order that he should do it now, and discussion may be unnecessary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no method of compelling the gentleman to make the point of order unless he wishes to do so. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The regular order is that the gentleman from Indiana has five minutes.

Mr. COX. I would like to know whether the gentleman from Illinois intends to make his point of order. I have not any disposition to take up the time of the House on this amendment.

Mr. MANN. I would like to hear the gentleman. This is the first time I have heard this proposition presented to the House.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up very much time of the House. I know it is impatient, that it has been here all day, that it is very hot, and all Members are tired; but while the House amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, so far as I was concerned at the time, did not meet with my approval, still I recognize it is not what Members want but it is what they can get in legislation; and I believe that the time has come when this mileage ought to be reduced. I think my position is well known to every Member of this House, and has been for several years. I have introduced several bills to put mileage on an actual expense basis. I think there is where it ought to go. Some propose to give 5 cents a mile, because I recognize a large number of Members of this House, who are just as honest and high-priced as I am, feel that it ought to be on a flat basis at so much per mile; hence I introduced a bill at 5 cents a mile.

There was some criticism upon the amendment introduced and offered by the Committee on Appropriations because it carried a phrase in it that many Members are likely to abuse. I do not believe it would. The phrase that was objected to was the phrase which enabled Members of the House to pay traveling expenses of the dependent members of their families. Now, the criticism was mostly directed to the point that somebody is going to abuse it. You could not, for the sake of your life, with a spyglass find a man here who would abuse it. I believe the membership of this House is upon a higher plane, and I do not believe that any Member of this House or the next House would pad the travel roll by bringing persons here at Government expense who were not really dependent members of his family. So in order to meet that, to the end, therefore, that every Member might know exactly what his salary is, I have offered this amendment.

It no longer can be contended that the mileage is a part of our salary. That question is set at rest. That question was disposed of by the Court of Claims some few days ago in a case squarely in point, in which the court specifically declared that the mileage is not part of our compensation, but that it is designed solely for the purpose of reimbursing money which we pay out of our pockets for traveling expenses. Now, it is said by a great many Members that we do not get as much mileage as we travel out each year. Perchance that is true; but I do not believe, gentlemen, that our constituency feel they ought to be charged to pay our way to return to our districts from time to time while Congress is in session, when ninety times out of one hundred Members go back to look after their individual affairs. Mr. Speaker, the roll call to-day developed the fact that there were 251 Members here. Where is the rest of the membership of this House? I do not know, but I am not going to criticize it. I suppose a large majority of the absentees are back home seeking renomination. I have not any question about that at all nor am I going to criticize them for it, but will any man contend for a moment when a man leaves Congress while it is in session to return to his district for the sole purpose of having himself renominated that his constituency ought to pay that bill? It is unfair to the constituency, gentlemen.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question; I have only five minutes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman proposed to cut this appropriation from 20 to 10 cents a mile?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I understand that the gentleman's position is we ought to get the actual cost of paying our way to and from Congress?

Mr. COX. That is my opinion.

Mr. GARNER. Does not the gentleman know it does not cost 10 cents a mile to come here and return? Is it not just a question of degree, of how much you take?

Mr. COX. No; it is not. After consulting various Members of this House on the Republican side and the Democratic side of this Chamber, it struck me that 10 cents was a fair proposition; and if any Member of this House will propose an amendment reducing this to the actual expenses, that amendment would have no more ardent supporter upon the floor of this House than myself. But I want to be reasonable in these things.

Mr. MANN. Is not that the original amendment?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman, then, simply move to disagree?

Mr. COX. It was to obviate, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, the objection which I have heard time and time again, and which he has heard time and time again, that it was subject to abuse. I said a moment ago I did not believe any Member of this House would abuse it. But in talking with Members on this question it was condemned right and left; I never found a man yet who said he would abuse it. And in order that we may know exactly what our mileage is, I offered this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I think that every Member of the House knows what he wants to do in regard to this subject; and, not having been asked for any time, I move the previous question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DONOVAN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I withdraw the request for the previous question, and yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] for five minutes.

Mr. DONOVAN. Can he withdraw it without asking unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. He can, for a fact.

Mr. DONOVAN. Has the Speaker decided that?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker has decided the gentleman from South Carolina has a right to withdraw his request without unanimous consent. It is an absolutely inherent right in the House and not in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DONOVAN. But, Mr. Speaker, you had declared the motion carried.

The SPEAKER. And the Speaker declared the withdrawal, too.

Mr. DONOVAN. What are you going to do with this vote?

The SPEAKER. I am going to recognize the gentleman from Washington for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, if this amendment is correct, then the old mileage is right. If the old mileage is wrong and is a graft, then this 10 cents a mile is a graft. And if the old mileage only was sufficient to bring Members and their families here, then we ought not to vote in this amendment. I have said upon the floor of this House before, and I repeat it, that I do not believe there is any Member here who wants to keep any other Member from bringing his family to Washington, and I do not believe, as I said before, that any man who wants to come here without his family is fit to be a Member of this House.

But I did not get the five minutes for the purpose of specially discussing the mileage. I wanted to refer to the point that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] has mentioned in regard to Members being absent. I do not think any man ought to receive more than one mileage for each session. I think it is the duty of every man to stay here during the time that Congress is in session, but if any man wants to go home now during this heated term, and stay away from here, I do not believe he ought to be criticized. If enough of us would go away until we could not transact any business, I think we would confer one of the greatest of favors upon the country. I am not going to criticize any man who is away, but I do want to call attention to one particular fact. We are being kept here by the dictate and direction of the White House, and I look on that side and I discover that the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is away. Why is he not here attending to business? He is one of the special favorites of the White House. Where is he? And then I look across there and I see that the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is away. His own interests become greater than those of the country. He is another special White House favorite. Why is he not here attending to business? And then I look across there and I see that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] is absent. Why, he so seldom comes upon the floor of the House that the new Members are not familiar with his magnificent appearance. He is another White House favorite. These pets of the teacher are not here attending to business. Why?

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No. I look around over the room and I see the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is here attending to his business; that the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is here attending to his business. The distinguished Speaker of the House stays here. But these little leaders by Executive order from the White House, where are they? Out preaching that we must stay in session all summer in order that the country may be saved. What has become of these leaders by White House dictation? They are out preaching the doctrine of repudiation. They are out telling the people of this country what a grand thing it is, under the British flag, at the dictation of the transcontinental railroads, under the direction of the White House, to repudiate their platform, and telling that the rest of us must stay here this summer and attend to business while they are out looking after their own interests.

I hope that the information will be taken to the White House, showing where these special favorites of the Executive are and what they are doing, and showing how the men whose judgment the President does not value and whose opinion he will not take are staying here and looking after legislation and attending to business while his favorites are neglecting the interests of the country and putting in their time trying to be reelected. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The SPEAKER. As soon as the gentleman can get the floor he can offer an amendment. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is recognized.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the speech of my distinguished friend from the State of Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], I wish to read from this afternoon's paper a portion of a letter from certain gentlemen of the House of Representatives, addressed to the President of the United States. This letter reads as follows:

> Mr. PRESIDENT: We, the undersigned, Democratic Members of the House of Representatives from Missouri, beg to say that we have remained at our posts discharging our duties and will continue to do so as long as it is necessary to assist in carrying out your program.
>
> All but four of our delegation have opposition in the primaries which will be held on August 4, but, regardless of the result of those primaries, it is our intention to remain here and to do all we can to aid you in bringing about a successful conclusion of the program which you have outlined.
>
> We desire, in a modest way, to not only assure you of our confidence, but to express to you our loyalty in the struggle you are making to carry out our remaining platform pledges to the people.

[Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What is one of your platform pledges worth? [Renewed laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. SIMS. The letter is signed by JAMES T. LLOYD, W. W. RUCKER, CHARLES F. BOOHER, C. C. DICKINSON, C. W. HAMLIN, CHAMP CLARK, WILLIAM L. IGOE, J. W. ALEXANDER, W. L. HENSLEY, JOE J. RUSSELL, M. J. GILL, and THOMAS L. RUBEY.

Here is the reply the President of the United States made to this letter:

MY DEAR FRIENDS: The paper you were kind enough to send me through Judge RUCKER, Judge ALEXANDER, and Mr. RUSSELL has not only given me deep gratification, but it has elicited my warm and genuine admiration. It is in keeping with the spirit you have shown in public affairs. Nothing has been more gratifying to me during the arduous session of the present Congress than the generous and disinterested support you have given me. The paper which you sent is of the sort that makes a man carrying the responsibilities of public life very proud and very grateful, and is in line with your whole conduct during the months that have passed.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

So that the President seems to differ slightly from the gentleman from Washington. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague [Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina] to offer an amendment, and then I shall ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] will send his amendment to the desk and the Clerk will report it.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER. Can the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] yield the floor to a Member for the purpose of offering an amendment without yielding the floor entirely?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is rather inclined to think that he can. The Chair has not the time to hunt it up now.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would he not be entitled to recognition immediately thereafter?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, without looking into the precedents, of course I recognize that under general parliamentary law yielding the floor for the purpose of offering an amendment or making a motion yields the floor entirely, but I do not think that is the prevailing practice under the rules of the House or the precedents of the House. I think that a gentleman has the right to yield the floor for a particular purpose.

Mr. MANN. It is undoubtedly true that he loses the floor; but in a condition of this kind, where there has been no adverse report, it has been the practice of the Speaker to recognize again the gentleman who is in charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair will do. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina moves to amend by striking out the figures "$25,000" and inserting the figures "$12,500," and by striking out the words "10 cents" and inserting the words "5 cents."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, when this matter was before the House heretofore the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE] opposed the regular provision and claimed that the appropriation of 20 cents per mile as mileage was "a species of petty graft." I have listened patiently to the discussion of this subject, and, with the possible exception of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], every man who has advocated a reduction in the mileage has advocated it upon the theory that the present allowance provided by law represented "a species of petty graft."

I want to say that if it is "petty graft" for Members of the House and Senate to receive the compensation that the law provides that they shall receive in the way of mileage, I am sorry to have the verdict of this House put upon the thousands of men who in years gone by have occupied seats in the House and Senate as "petty grafters." They were honorable men, and their reputation is beyond reproach. And now, after a decision of the Court of Claims has been handed down that the mileage of Members is not compensation, here comes for the first time after that decision is announced a proposition not to stop the "graft," but simply to cut it in two.

That is all that this proposition means. If it was "petty graft" to take 20 cents a mile, it is "petty graft" to take 10 cents a mile, and it is "petty graft" to take 5 cents a mile.

The amendment proposed by the House may have in it something that is objectionable. I think perhaps we did go too far in providing for the mileage of the dependent members of the families. But if we are to conclude that this mileage allowance is unjust, let us act on the square. If we are dealing with graft and really want to cut it out, there is a simple way to reach it, and that is to amend the House provision by striking out the part that includes "actual traveling expenses of the dependent members of their families" and leaving the provision to read: "For actual traveling expenses incurred by Senators in going to and returning once from each session of Congress by the nearest route usually traveled, the same to be paid on certificates duly approved as in the manner heretofore prescribed for the payment of mileage."

If it is graft to give 20 cents a mile, which I do not believe, why do you give 10 cents per mile, when railroad companies are only allowed, in most cases, to charge 2 cents a mile? This provision would give to a Member who resides a thousand miles distant from Washington $40 for traveling expenses plus what he had to pay for sleeping-car privileges, presumably about $8 more; but the provision of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], instead of giving to a man $48 mileage for a session of Congress would give him, if he lives a thousand miles away, $200 for mileage. Who can claim that the present lawful provision of 20 cents per mile is graft and justify before the people of this country any proposition giving 10 cents per mile? I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. I believe this provision should be taken back to conference and the conferees should insist on the House provision, with an amendment eliminating the mileage paid to the dependents and immediate members of a Member's family.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wyoming rise?

Mr. MONDELL. I rise to make a preferential motion. I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, the gentleman has not the floor, and in the second place, I do not think that amendment would be in order. There is already pending an amendment and an amendment thereto.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman makes the motion as a matter of right. He does not have to have the floor, and at this stage of the proceedings a motion to concur takes precedence of a motion to concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] moves to recede from the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment numbered 1, and to concur in the same.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, I have taken but little interest in the mileage question, thinking I could stand what the rest of the House could stand in the way of mileage. When the mileage question was up I voted to retain the old pay of 20 cents a mile, not that the proposed change was going to reduce my mileage, because I have my wife and six dependent children. That makes eight of us, and in paying the way of my family and myself from my home to Washington I would every session collect from Uncle Sam $400 more than I get under the present law. Consequently it was a matter of complete indifference to me, and I could stand the criticism, knowing that in my own particular case there would be a saving to the Government instead of a loss. But if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is sustained, I would lose as much as the Government lost in my case under the original amendment of the House to the old law. In other words, I would be out of pocket the sum of $400 under the mileage proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], because I would bring all the dependent members of my family back and forth.

As I said before, it is a matter of complete indifference to me. I can stand it as low as the rest of you can, but I think there is a whole lot of cheap politics being played on the mileage question. [Applause.] I think the sooner this House gets down to a business basis, realizing that it can not be the same to every man, that you must do the best you can, and give more attention to public matters instead of to petty politics and policies the better it will be for the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], to strike out "5" and insert "3" cents a mile.

I submit that we ought not to charge more than the actual traveling expenses. Railroad fares and Pullman berths would not be over 3 cents a mile, and we ought to put it down to actual expenses, and let it apply to the Member of Congress alone. This Government is not under any liability to pay the traveling expenses of a Member's wife and children and those dependent upon him. There can not be any consistent vote here except for the actual expenses of the Congressman from his home to Washington. If it is wrong to allow 20 cents a mile, it is wrong to allow 10 cents a mile. I think both are wrong. I put it on the flat basis that it ought not to take more than 3 cents a mile to pay the way of a Member of Congress from his home here. I voted every time this question came up in the Committee of the Whole to cut out this mileage altogether.

There can be nothing dishonorable in taking all the mileage that the law allows a Member, but I feel it is the duty of this House to reduce it to 3 cents a mile. If my amendment is voted down, I shall vote for the Byrnes amendment, which calls for 5 cents a mile. The amendment of 10 cents a mile, offered by the gentleman from Indiana, is too much and ought to be killed.

I have never believed in the present mileage system. It evidently cost about that much to travel in stagecoaches when the system was first adopted, but now every sensible man in the United States knows it does not cost 20 cents a mile to travel by railroad trains to the Nation's Capital. This Congress owes it to the American people to show some signs of economy in the administration of affairs, and why not cut out this extra amount allowed in our own mileage? I have been ardent and consistent in my efforts to hold down the expense touching every department of this Government. I am not a "stingy man," but I am a business man and try to operate according to business principles. This great Government should have its affairs handled in a businesslike manner; but on all sides we see useless expense, and you can not see any visible signs of those in power endeavoring to stop it. If we can not stop these departments from wasting money, we can cut down their appropriations. I know we have the power to cut out by our own votes this surplus mileage, and now is the time to do it. Just because it has been the custom for Members of Congress to draw 20 cents a mile is no sign it is right. I would not stand for it in my private business, and I will not stand for it as a representative of the people.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] five minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, we have heard it stated that mileage was graft. If it is a graft at all, it would be not only wrong to vote for it but wrong to accept it. If I thought that way, I would not accept it. Seventy-one years ago the law gave a fixed sum as a salary, plus mileage, in view of the distance that different men must travel. It could not be made equal any other way, owing to different distances Members must travel. It has always been regarded as a part of the salary of a Member. If it is a graft, we find when we call the roll that all the noble statesmen and patriots have been guilty of accepting it. In that roll we can class such men as Webster, Clay, and Calhoun, who in 1850 drew this mileage. We find in that class the immortals Garfield, McKinley, and Lincoln. Why, I almost forgot that William J. Bryan during the four years he was in Congress also drew this graft.

Now, I want to say that it is strange that after 71 years it is just discovered that this is graft. Other men may have their opinion, but to me it seems nothing more than bunk and petty politics, and I decline to engage in it. [Applause.] Expenses of living have gone up, and now you want to lower mileage.

I believe, like the gentleman from Washington, that when a man comes to this Congress he ought, if at all possible, to bring his family, especially when he has young children to educate; and I believe that to make it equal, mileage should be a fixed sum for every Member. The man who will not bring his family here when he can has not a worthy regard for his home or himself, and he ought not to represent the American people on this floor. The man who would leave his family at home while he is here is adrift, and his wife does not know where and what places he visits when the night falls; but when a man brings his family, his wife can then keep up with his curves. We know she will know why he is out o' nights.

When the salary is taken away or made too low to support me and my family as well, and that here in Washington City, I will quit the job. I repeat, that if you want to economize, then vote to lower the salary, rather than charge this as graft—when nearly all the great statesmen and patriots of the country for 71 years have drawn it. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to believe that much of this talk about the reduction of mileage and the amendments that are offered to make the reduction is nothing but cheap demagogism. These amendments will encourage graft. An honest poor man from the West will not be able to come to Congress if some of these amendments prevail. The proposed changes are in the interest of the grafters and the idle rich. The man who comes from the Pacific coast must bring his family to Washington. It is 19 months since I left San Francisco. I have been here all that time attending to my duties as a Member of Congress. I have had my family here, but during the summer months they return to California. It takes four days and four nights of constant travel to reach the Capital from the Pacific coast, and a man must travel in comfort when he takes that long trip. It is even so with the Member's family. Comfort costs money. The people of the United States do not want a Member of Congress nor the members of his family to travel in uncomfortable surroundings. They want their public servants to secure comfortable and proper accommodations when they go to Washington to perform their public duties. They do not begrudge the money that is paid for the purpose of enabling Members of Congress to go comfortably to the place where their duties call them. In traveling across the continent it is frequently necessary to break the journey when you have your family with you. That adds to the cost of travel. With a 10-cents-a-mile allowance, as proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, I could not take my family from California here and back again. It is not sufficient. The 5 cents a mile proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina is altogether inadequate. It would mean a positive reduction in the salary of western Members who bring their families with them to Washington. As a matter of fact, the Members from the far West are handicapped in many ways.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] speaks of the men who are not here attending to their duties. Many of them come from this vicinity. They are lawyers, and they go home during the session to try cases. They are business men, and they go home during the session to attend to their business. We of the western coast can not do that; we can not attend to anything else but our congressional work. We must have our families with us if we want to live in comfort and attend here as Members of Congress. Of course men without families could get along with a less amount, but the man with a family should not be penalized on that account. But there is no provision of law that compels a Member to draw his mileage. And yet I have not heard of any of those who talk about mileage as being a petty graft ever having failed to draw their allowances. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that the amendments will be voted down, and that the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to recede and concur will prevail.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I shall cheerfully support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] to reduce the amount allowed for mileage from 20 to 10 cents per mile. This question arises at each session of Congress, only to arise again at the next session. There must be some fundamental reason for its coming up at each session. In my judgment the agitation will continue until it is settled right, as all matters should be.

The reason I support the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is because experience has taught me again and again that it is impossible to get it reduced below that amount.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] and the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] go out of their way to read a moral lecture to the membership of this House, and say that a man who does not bring his family here is unworthy to be a Member of this body. They intimate that that is the only way he can be kept in the path of moral rectitude. That is none of their concern. I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that a man who must be kept in the shadow of his family to keep his life circumspect and who otherwise would wander from the path of rectitude is unworthy to be a Member of this body. If that is all that restrains him from walking in the path of vice and evil, he will go there regardless of his surroundings.

The gentleman from Washington takes advantage of this, as of every other occasion, to criticize the President of the United States, and speaks of us being kept here by White House domination, but the shafts of the gentleman from Washington fall harmlessly at the feet of the President. The President of the United States has not used any arbitrary means on this Congress. True, he has constantly reminded Congress of its duty and pledges made to the people, and has with courage and patriotism pointed out the lines he would have us to follow, but he has made no arbitrary demands and has wielded no big stick. In spite of all the criticism, deeds done, results accomplished, and things performed fully justify his action.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I had rather pay my own way to Washington and receive not one cent of mileage than to be constantly accused of taking money out of the Public Treasury to which I am not entitled. I do not say that it is graft; in fact, it is not, as long as sanctioned by law, but it is wrong and should therefore be reduced. Twenty cents per mile was based on the old stagecoach mode of traveling, and there is no justification for it under the modern methods.

I do not charge those who favor the present rate with being grafters, neither have they the right to accuse those of us who desire to reduce the rate with being demagogues, but I do believe it is an evil that has existed far too long and that we should now avail ourselves of the present opportunity of fixing the amount where it will be just both to the Government and ourselves, and thereby put an end to the agitation. I think this amendment is as near to that point as we can possibly come at present. This agitation will cease when we get down to the basic principles of honesty and justice and not before.

COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE PURCHASE OF AMERICAN TOBACCO BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

The SPEAKER. Some time ago the House passed a resolution providing for the appointment by the Speaker of a commission to investigate purchase of American tobacco by foreign Governments. The resolution came from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Chair appointed Messrs. FLOOD of Virginia and STEDMAN, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. McKinley's term has lapsed, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. COOPER, the ranking Republican member on that committee, in place of Mr. McKinley.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, all legislation is a matter of compromise. The membership of this House can not get together on 5 cents, 10 cents, or 20 cents a mile, unanimously, but I believe the consensus is that 10 cents would be adequate; that we can get that proposition through both Houses of Congress. I move the previous question on the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming, that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 1 and concur in the same.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MURDOCK) there were—ayes 47, noes 55.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment again reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] is too remote under the rules to be entertained.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by changing the figures from $12,500 to $12,750.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Byrnes amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina moves to amend by striking out the figures "$25,000" and inserting the figures "$12,750," and by striking out the words "10 cents" and inserting the words "5 cents."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina) there were—ayes 37, noes 55.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 93, answered "present" 2, not voting 205, as follows:

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. A division!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a division.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. If this motion is defeated, will it then be in order to further insist, and that puts the House provision in conference again?

The SPEAKER. Why, the motion to further insist would be in order; but whether it would go to conference again, the Chair does not know. Those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] as amended by various amendments will stand until they are counted.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 96.

Mr. MANN, Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, and Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina, the gentleman from Illinois, and the gentleman from Kansas all demand the yeas and nays. Those in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Fifty-nine gentlemen have risen, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. To vote "aye" is to vote for 5 cents a mile, is it not?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FOWLER. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, as a parliamentary proposition is it proper for anyone to interfere with the roll call or with the proceedings until after the roll has been finally settled?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The roll call had not started, but the Chair had ordered it started. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MANN. I object to those.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects to those. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks on the Agricultural bill.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 26, 1914.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art the author of every good and perfect gift. We bless Thee for the mercies that come to us unasked, mercies which are expressing day by day Thy love and Thy care for all Thy creatures. We thank Thee for the breadth and length and depth and height of Thy love, that embraces all men, that calls all men to Thyself.

This day we ask that Thy favor may rest upon us, that we may be ready with divine wisdom for every problem that confronts us, that we may be ready with divine strength for every conflict, and that with grace divine we may address ourselves to the tasks of the day. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONSTRUCTION OF TWO REVENUE CUTTERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury requesting an appropriation of $165,000 for the construction of two revenue cutters as authorized by the act approved June 24, 1914, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, immediately after the taking up of the unfinished business, I will address the Senate on the constitutionality of section 5 of that bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes.

THOMAS HARRISON.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask permission to make a brief statement and to present a petition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Washington will proceed.

Mr. JONES. I ask the attention of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs who may be here to this particular matter. In the last Congress I introduced a bill retiring Thomas Harrison, a clerk in the Naval Observatory, and for other purposes. The bill proposed to pay him the sum of $100 per month during the remainder of his natural life. That bill was favorably reported and it passed the Senate. In this Congress I introduced another bill (S. 681) of the same character and it was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, but it has not yet been reported.

I know that there is much opposition to the establishment of a civil pension list, and there is much to be said on both sides of the proposition. I know that objection is made to this bill on the ground that it establishes a precedent for a civil pension list, but it is a common saying that there are exceptions to all rules, and that exceptions prove the rule or the necessity for the rule. I think this is a case where Congress could well make an exception against the general rule if the rule is to be followed not to have a civil pension list. I think, however, it does furnish one of the strongest possible arguments for a provision of some kind upon the part of the Government for the retirement of those employees who have been long in the Government service, either by a Government contribution to a retirement fund or a provision under which there shall be a compulsory contribution to a retirement fund on the part of employees.

I have here a memorandum prepared by this employee of the Government which, it seems to me, should appeal to Congress. Its simplicity and pathos are at least very appealing to me, and I think will appeal to every Member of the Senate. I wish to read this memorandum. It is in the nature of a petition, and is very short.

S. 681—RETIRING THOMAS HARRISON, A CLERK IN THE NAVAL OBSERVATORY.

The civil employee named in this bill was born in Washington City on January 10, 1828. When he was a very small child his parents moved to what was then—80 years ago—spoken of as the "far West," the banks of the Ohio, where the lad grew to be a sturdy boy of 10. It was a hard life out there; not too hard, though, for it gave him a good start and helped him through harder times later on. In 1838 the family returned to their former home in Washington.

As to his lineage, his mother was a Magruder of Maryland, a descendant of the Macgregors of Scotland—a rugged ancestry, if we believe Sir Walter Scott. She was a granddaughter of Samuel Wade Magruder, who served in the Revolutionary War as a major in the Maryland Militia, having been appointed as such on the 21st of June, 1777, as shown by his commission, which has been preserved by his descendants for 137 years. (See Archives of Maryland, Annapolis, vol. 16, p. 296.)

His father was a native of Virginia, was a captain in the Regular Army in the War of 1812, and served as such until the reduction of the Army in 1815. (Records of War Department.) After that war the father of this petitioner was engaged in other pursuits until 1848, when, in the midst of his usefulness, he died, leaving a family of eight persons, whose chief support fell to the happy lot of this son, who soon afterwards obtained a small clerkship in the Naval Observatory, where he has served under every superintendent of the institution from the renowned Maury down to the present accomplished director, and where he is now employed in charge of the financial accounts of the establishment.

It might be stated here that a short time ago this petitioner—

I desire to suggest that this is something very unusual—

It might be stated here that a short time ago this petitioner, with the view of lessening his duties and his responsibility, applied to the Navy Department for demotion—

He himself applied for a demotion, realizing the influences of advancing age—from senior clerk to the next class below. The department made this answer, in part:

* * * * * * * *

"As you have been in the employ of the Government now over 62 years, and during all that time your record has been excellent, I have long hesitated to take any action which would reduce your salary; but in view of the statement made by you personally to me yesterday, in addition to your letter, * * * I agree that it would probably be to your best interest to make the change.

"I desire at this time to express my sincere appreciation of the admirable spirit you have displayed in this matter, and to wish you success and continued good health in your new position.

"Very truly, yours,

"BEEKMAN WINTHROP,
"Acting Secretary of the Navy."

The incidental mention of the petitioner's ancestors is only a passing tribute to their memory. He is not building upon their merits; a mere clerk, he is venturing to stand on his own record of two-thirds of a century of work for the Government. That this work has been efficiently performed is not for him to say, but it is so declared by the Navy Department and by the testimony of distinguished officers under whom he has served. Nor is it for him to say whether that work is meritorious; that is for the judgment of Congress.

The Army and Navy Register of October 4, 1913, records the names of several old horses that are pensioned by the Government:

"First. 'Putnam,' Artillery horse, now commonly called 'Pekin'; entered the Army in 1898; served through Spanish War; then in Philippines; in China during Boxer rebellion in battles of Pei Tsang, Yang Tsun, and others; now enjoying a pension at Fort William McKinley, the biggest Army post in the Philippines.

"Second. 'Foxhall,' Artillery horse; served 24 years; is 36 years old; enjoys a pension at Fort Sam Houston, Tex.

"Third. 'Jolo,' Cavalry horse; on pension at Fort Leavenworth."

We are told that the Athenians of old released from further toil their beasts of burden after their long-continued labor, and maintained them at the public cost. That was before the Christian era in a heathen republic. While this great Christian Republic of America equals its heathen examplar in the cases cited, what has it done, what is it doing, for its aged burden bearers, human beings? What for those in the civil service who have labored with pick or with pen for 40, 50, or 60 years? Did not the Government, it may be asked—like the man in the parable—agree with its workers for a penny a day, and has it not paid that penny promptly? Yes; surely. What more, then, shall be done with them when overcome by infirmities of age? Shall such ones toil on till the pen or the pick drops from their enfeebled hands and they be then discharged outright?

In the unique case before us should not the petitioner who has served the State for over 65 years be granted for his few remaining days the relief which this bill, if made into a law, will give him?

This man is now 86 or 87 years of age. He has been in the employ of the Government for 65 or 66 years. As he says, it may be asked, has he not been paid promptly what the Government stipulated, and why should he ask more. That is true, as he says, and yet he has reached a point now at 86 or 87 years of age where if he should lose his position he would be unable to do anything. There are those dependent upon him now whom he has supported for many years, and for this reason he has been unable to save anything substantially out of the salary which has been paid him.

It does seem to me that this case furnishes one of the strongest arguments in favor of our doing something to provide for the old age of such men if we are to maintain the civil service; and we are going to maintain it; and it also seems to me that this is such an exceptional case that it would warrant the committee in reporting favorably and Congress in acting favorably. To wait for general legislation will not aid this faithful employee. He can not live many years longer. Should not the Government provide as well for him as for its faithful horses? We should take up this question of retirement seriously and earnestly. Those employees who first went in under civil service are getting old. They can not be heartlessly turned out, unable to do anything. The Government is losing by reason of their incapacity. If provision is made for a fund so these employees can be insured against poverty and the Government can get more efficient work then both the employee and Government will be benefited. Let us care for this very exceptional case and then take up earnestly the general proposition.

I hope the Committee on Naval Affairs will consider the bill that has been introduced for this gentleman and soon report it favorably and give the Senate an opportunity to act upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorandum will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PADUCAH, KY., June 24, 1914.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
Member of the Senate, United States of America,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Impelled by a duty that I feel incumbent upon me by reason of my official position as State secretary of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, Kentucky Divison, and as a citizen of the United States, I feel it my duty to bring to your attention the fact that farmers at large, and especially the members of the Farmers' Union of Kentucky, look with alarm upon the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the tobacco pooling laws of Kentucky, which we regard as sweeping in its scope and carries with it protection to the corporate interests of the country and bars the farmers of equal rights with all other interests, who are allowed to pool their money for their mutual interest and protection. I therefore, in the name of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America and members of the Kentucky Division, most earnestly appeal to you to vote for and use your influence in the passage of the Sherman antitrust bill, recently passed the House, exempting the farmers and labor unions from the restraining sections of the Sherman law. I do this in the name of the people and because it has caused widespread comment among our people everywhere.

Trusting that you will stand by us—the farmers—in this important matter and give to us an equal opportunity with all other classes,

I am, sincerely,

R. L. BARNETT.

Mr. JAMES. I present a letter from J. W. Throckmorton, chairman of the legislative committee of the Order of Railway Conductors for Kentucky, with reference to the so-called Clayton bill. I ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

Please use your influence in behalf of labor organizations.

Thanking you in advance, I remain,

Yours, truly,

J. W. THROCKMORTON,
Chairman Legislative Committee of the Order of Railway Conductors for Kentucky.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE TELEPOST.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The resolution (S. Res. 405) was read and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators, including the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, be appointed by the President of the Senate to investigate and report upon the merits of the telepost, now in operation between St. Louis and Chicago, as to word-carrying capacity, accuracy, economy, secrecy, and general efficiency; as to its use in connection with the Post Office Department, and as to any obstacles in the way of its extension either in connection with the Government or otherwise.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In connection therewith I desire to have printed in the RECORD a letter containing a request that I introduce the resolution, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 26, 1914.

Hon. GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In connection with the resolution we have asked you to introduce, I wish to say that while a thorough investigation of the telepost is suggested, and will be welcomed, so as to determine its efficiency and special fitness for use in connection with the Post Office Department, this is the least important work for the committee, as these points have been settled by long-continued successful commercial operation.

The chief duty of the proposed committee will be to pave the way for the introduction of a new post-office service that has met with unqualified approval wherever and whenever presented.

This is a wired letter and wired card service by which 50 words for 25 cents delivered in a sealed envelope and 10 words for 10 cents delivered on a postal card will be available for the public between any two points connected by telepost wires.

The messages will be handled at each end by the post office in the usual way, but transmitted by the telepost by wire at its rate of 1,000 words per minute between the two post offices. If special delivery is desired, the proper stamp will secure it.

This will mean that between the business districts of any two commercial centers where there are frequent mail deliveries a wired letter or card may be exchanged several times during business hours. While the card will be strictly limited to 10 words, the wired letter may be as long as desired, each additional 10 words or less involving an additional 5 cents.

The Telepost is ready to inaugurate these services between Chicago and St. Louis, and upon the completion of the western section of the Telepost trunk line between New York and Chicago, the poles for one-half of which are already set, offices will promptly be opened in Toledo and Detroit. Other extensions will follow as rapidly as lines are built or leased.

The chief work of the committee, therefore, will be to find out whether there are any obstacles in the way of the opening up of this wired-letter and card service, and if any are found, to remove them by framing and securing the enactment of an enabling act or such other legislation as may be necessary.

On behalf of the business and social interests of the country which now, due to the cost and other handicapping features, use the telegraph less than the people of many nations admittedly not as progressive as we are, I ask your support and the support of the Senate in as prompt a consideration of this subject as other important matters now pending will permit.

Yours, respectfully, H. LEE SELLERS.

RURAL CREDIT IN EUROPE.

Mr. WEEKS. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 404) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 20,000 additional copies of part 1 of Senate Document No. 261, Agricultural Cooperation and Rural Credit in Europe, be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

Mr. SHAFROTH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 406), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ a clerk at a salary of $2,220 per annum an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,440 per annum, and a messenger at $1,200 per annum, the same to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. SHAFROTH subsequently said: I make a report on behalf of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate on the resolution providing for the clerical force of the junior Senator from the State of Kentucky, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the resolution. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that it can be in effect only until the 30th day of this month.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I have conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the resolution provides that it can exist as against the contingent fund until otherwise provided for by law. It will be thus provided for either in a deficiency bill or some other bill that will be passed. I will state that it provides for the usual clerical service—one clerk at $2,220, another one at $1,440, and another one at $1,200.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the resolution. All I was saying was that, as I remember, the legislative appropriation bill carries a provision repealing all of the resolutions for clerk hire payable out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It did; and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] said it was impossible to get this provision in the legislative bill, which is now in conference.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true, Mr. President. There is not any doubt about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DANISH AGRICULTURE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have received a copy of an address delivered by Hon. Rudolf Schou, counselor of state, Copenhagen, Denmark, on the subject of Danish agriculture, including a statement as to cultivation in Denmark, and Danish seed and seed growing. I ask that the matter may be referred to the Committee on Printing, with a view to its publication.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

THE PEOPLE'S BANKS IN NORTH AMERICA.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a copy of an article by H. HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 17041. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REGULATION OF STOCK EXCHANGES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to take from the calendar and rerefer to the Committee on Banking and Currency a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3895) to prevent the use of the mails and of the telegraph and telephone in furtherance of fraudulent and harmful transactions on stock exchanges.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, yesterday I stated briefly the facts in relation to this resolution, but I will now restate them for the benefit of those Senators who were not then present.

This bill has been the subject of extended hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is a bill which proposes to give to the Post Office Department the regulation of the stock exchanges of the country. After the hearings no meetings were held for the discussion of the bill; no votes were ever taken upon any of the amendments which have been favorably reported. The meeting of the committee held yesterday was attended by five Senators who were present at the time the resolution was adopted for the report of the bill. Three of those Senators voted for the report and two voted against the report. The committee numbers 12. Seven members of the committee are requesting that the bill be taken from the calendar and rereferred. At no time has a majority of the committee been in favor of the bill, and at no time has a quorum been present when the bill was voted upon. Under those circumstances it seems to me it should, as a matter of courtesy to absent Senators, be referred back to the committee.

When the bill was considered yesterday by the committee, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] were absent during all of the time. Most of those Senators were engaged upon other committees. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] was present a part of the time, but left before the vote was taken, authorizing the chairman of the committee to count him as present and as voting for the bill. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] was not present during any of the time, but, as I understand, and as he probably will state for himself, he had authorized the chairman of the committee to count him as present for a quorum. Under the rules of the Senate, as I understand them, it has been the invariable ruling, and it is the ruling in the House of Representatives, that a constructive quorum can only be counted by unanimous consent. At the meeting yesterday the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] objected to an attempt to report the bill in the absence of a quorum.

Under those circumstances, it seems to me that the document filed is not a report. Had I been present in the Senate at the time it was presented, I should have challenged it just as similar former efforts have been challenged in this body and in the House of Representatives, and invariably rejected when not reported from a meeting of a committee at which a quorum was present.

The motion, therefore, is simply to refer this bill back to the committee, where it belongs, until a quorum present considers it and a majority of a quorum decides to report it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I agree substantially with what has been said, except that the Senator from Nebraska put me in the attitude of being opposed to the bill. I am friendly to the bill, so far as the bill itself is concerned, and had there been a full hearing in the committee, so that I felt that each member had a fair opportunity to be heard there, and that any report that might be made was an expression of the views of the majority of the members present constituting a quorum, I would not have objected to the making of this particular report; but it is a fact that the proceedings which led to the making of this report yesterday morning resulted from the action of, I think, three members actually present voting for the report and two members voting against the making of the report, which makes it the direct expression of only five members of that committee. Of those who were absent, one, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], I understood, had been there, but he was not there during any time that I was present, and another, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], had been there part of the time, but had gone away, saying that he could be counted in favor of the bill.

When we consider the importance of this bill and the very great interest in it, I, myself, feel as though that was hardly the kind of action that should be back of a report on such a measure, although I am in favor of the general provisions of the bill. I believe that legislation of the kind proposed is in the right direction, and I do not know of any more effective way of dealing with the question than through the Post Office Department; but I was not satisfied yesterday morning, and I am not now, that the making of the report at that time and in that way was fair and equitable to other members of the committee.

Mr. HOLLIS obtained the floor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will not ask the Senator to yield, but I will take the floor in my own right later.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I am a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, but I think that the vote on the pending question goes very much deeper than the bill involved or any question of procedure at any meeting of the Banking and Currency Committee. I think it goes to the root of the way we are doing business in the committees of the Senate, and I for one shall take the vote on this question as a rule of guidance in future committee work.

This stock-exchange bill does not, as I understand, place the regulation of stock exchanges under the Post Office Department. It provides that stock exchanges shall do certain things by way of incorporation and comply with certain rules for the conduct of their affairs. If they fail to comply with those rules, then they shall be denied the use of the mails. That is a very short and perhaps an adequate description of the bill.

The bill was introduced as the outcome of the Pujo report a year or so ago. Our committee has held hearings for several weeks, and I have been present at more than one committee meeting when the bill has been discussed. About three weeks ago, according to my recollection, there were seven members of the committee present, and five of them voted to report this bill favorably. That has been challenged.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. HOLLIS. I decline to yield; I will state this right.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wish the Senator would state all the facts in discussing that matter.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am going to state them. That is my recollection, and I do not put my recollection against the recollection of any other Senator on the committee. I purposely advised that action be taken, so as to avoid questions of veracity. As I remember, there were seven Members present, five of whom voted to report the bill favorably. The bill had been amended by the chairman and had been printed, and those who were interested and who took the pains to find out, knew what the amendments were that were proposed by the chairman at the meeting to which I refer, where I remember that a majority of a quorum present and voting voted to report the bill favorably.

There was afterwards an entirely harmonious discussion between those who favored the bill and those who opposed it, and it was then unanimously agreed—and I am positive that there were six of the committee present at that discussion, although the seventh may have withdrawn—it was then agreed that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] should prepare the majority report, submit it to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and that the Senator from Massachusetts should have a reasonable time in which to prepare and submit a minority report. A week or 10 days later the Senator from Oklahoma handed to me and to the other members of the committee, as I am informed, a slip print of his report. Then it was brought to my attention by some of those who opposed this bill that there was not a quorum present and voting at the prior meeting. I took the attitude then and advised that if that were questioned, the matter should be left to a future vote of the committee. That course was taken. The friends of the bill did not press for that report in accordance with what we understood to be a vote, and they did not do so for the purpose of avoiding questions of veracity between Senators on the committee.

Since then the committee has met twice. At the first meeting there was not a quorum present, and we engaged in an informal discussion. The second meeting was called regularly for yesterday at 10 o'clock. At 15 minutes past 11 o'clock only five members of the committee were present, but the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] had sent word that he desired to be counted to make a quorum. I had an appointment at the White House, which I thought I ought to keep, and at 20 minutes past 11 o'clock I announced that I must leave the committee, but that I desired to be counted for the purpose of making a quorum, and said that I wanted to be counted in favor of a report of the stock-exchange bill. As I was leaving the room the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] came in. I returned with him and announced that that made a quorum and reiterated my request that I be counted to constitute a quorum and as voting in favor of the stock-exchange bill.

I am informed that later the bill was voted on, and that a majority of those present, three out of the five, voted to have the bill favorably reported. Those, I believe, are the facts. I was not present, and so I can not state what objections were made, but the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] has stated them with entire correctness, no doubt.

Since I have been in the Senate and have served upon committees it has been the very common practice to count absent members, at their request, to constitute a quorum, and also for members of the committee to leave their votes with the chairman on matters which they anticipate will be voted upon.

I do not think it makes a great difference what action the Senate takes at this time so far as the stock-exchange bill is concerned. I doubt if it could be taken from the calendar and acted upon at this session.

It has been suggested that the motion of the Senator from Nebraska is not in order; that a point of order could be raised against it, and that the motion could not be considered, the bill having once gone to the calendar, unless it is brought from the calendar under the rules of the Senate, and then, and not until then, would a motion to recommit be in order. I do not, however, desire to raise that point of order. I wish the Senate to vote on this question, so that we may have a rule of conduct. I do not want to waste my time in committees where there are only five or six present and undertake to do business, and then, if the result of the committee meeting is offensive, or not in accord with the feelings of some absent member, have it brought up in this way and recommitted.

I simply want to call that fact sharply to the attention of the Senate and to ask them to vote—I shall ask for the yeas and nays when the motion comes up for a vote—so that we may know whether we have been doing business in accordance with the best judgment of the Senate, or whether hereafter we must have at least a majority of the committee present in order to take any valid action.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HOLLIS. With pleasure.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that at the last meeting, to which the Senator refers, and which the Senator was about leaving when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] appeared, that constituted a quorum?

Mr. HOLLIS. No; when the Senator from Kansas and I were both present there were only six. It needed the presence and authority of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to make a quorum of seven members.

Mr. BORAH. And the Senator had authorized that he be counted for a quorum?

Mr. HOLLIS. He had so notified the chairman, as I am informed.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and have been referred to personally in this discussion. I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire that this is an important matter, which should be decided quite apart from the relation it may have to this bill, though it is important in this case also.

The meeting to which reference has been made, two or three weeks ago, was a meeting at which this bill was read and discussed. No amendments, however—and there are amendments pending—were considered at that time or at any other time, and no question was taken on reporting this bill. The question that was put by the chairman of the committee was whether the members present were in favor of reporting legislation at this session of Congress. There were seven members present. Five members voted in favor of reporting legislation and two against it; but the question of reporting this bill was not put to the committee at that time, or at any other time.

It is true that there was discussion afterwards about making majority and minority reports, and it is true that I did say to the chairman, "Whenever a majority report is made, if it is made, I expect to have time to make a minority report, because I am opposed to the bill." That, however, is as far as it went.

There have been other meetings of the committee. There are two matters of importance before the committee to-day, one of them this bill, and the other the question of reporting the nominations for the Reserve Board. Yesterday morning, when I found the call for this meeting on my desk, I directed my office to call up the Committee on Banking and Currency to find out what was going to be considered, and I was informed that the so-called stock-exchange bill, the bill which we are now discussing, was not to be taken up by the committee. I was confirmed in that by a newspaper man, who told me that the clerk of the committee himself had said that the stock-exchange bill would not be taken up.

Now, I knew that the subcommittees appointed to consider the different members of the Reserve Board directorship had not reported. The subcommittee of which I am a member has not even been called together yet by the chairman; and having before me copies of all the letters and other matters which have been sent to the committee or to the chairman, and having other important business to transact, it did not seem worth while for me to go to the committee room to engage in a desultory conversation about the merits of members of the board until we were ready to act on them definitely, and for that reason I did not go. I did not suppose the stock-exchange bill was coming up, and thought my information was sufficient to warrant my coming to that conclusion.

I can not believe that the Senate or any Member of the Senate wishes to report legislation and have it go on the calendar to which at least half of the members of the committee are opposed. I supposed that a majority were opposed; but we do not know yet what the legislation is to be, because we have not considered the amendments which have been proposed. It is not anticipated, as the Senator from New Hampshire has said, that this legislation can be taken up at this session of Congress. There will be no hardship in sending it back to the committee where it belongs. It is a correct principle to follow.

If 3 or 4 or 5 members of a committee out of 12 can meet and report out legislation by including as present men who are not present, it would, in my judgment, introduce all kinds of improper possibilities in connection with the reporting of bills. I do not think it is wise for the Senate to take the position that that can be done. A constructive quorum, in my judgment, should not be tolerated. Senators should attend their committee meetings, and encouragement to stay away should not be held out to them by assuming that they will be counted if they are not present.

It seems to me, for every reason, that this bill should go back to the committee and be considered there, including the amendments which are pending, and then have it determined whether a majority of the committee wish to have a meeting for the purpose of considering this bill; then if a meeting is called let it be decided whether a majority of the whole committee is really in favor of reporting this legislation favorably.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it seems to me, in view of the discussion and intimations on the part of members of the committee, that it would be highly proper that the chairman of the committee should be notified of this discussion and the proposed action of the Senate, in order that he might be present during the discussion and make such suggestions as he thinks it proper to make under the circumstances.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, there would be great difficulty in notifying the chairman, as I understand he is sailing for Europe to-day, to be gone 30 days or more. [Laughter.]

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am a member of this committee. I was notified of the intended meeting of the committee, but was not able to be there, because, first, I had a brief engagement at the White House; and, secondly, a very important meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee. Some hearings were being held by that committee which I felt were most important, and therefore I attended the Foreign Relations Committee. I gave the chairman of the committee authority to count me present for a quorum.

I understand that I was not voted at that meeting on this subject; and it is perhaps not necessary for me to go further into details, except that I might state briefly my position with respect to this bill.

I think legislation along the line contemplated is highly important and proper. I think if I had been present I probably should have voted to report out this bill, at the same time reserving to myself the privilege of offering some further amendments, if upon a fuller discussion of the bill they might, in my judgment, be necessary.

I think that is all I care to state about it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not rise to express any opinion on the merits of the so-called stock-exchange bill.

The very matter now immediately before the Senate—that is, as to the right to count absent Members present, or to poll their votes for or against a measure—was before a committee of which I am a member—the Indian Affairs Committee—a short time ago. That committee, after discussion, adopted this rule of practice: That an absent member might, at his request, be counted present to make a quorum, and there being a quorum present by counting his vote, a measure brought before the committee could be reported favorably or adversely, according to the majority vote cast, even though there would not be absolutely present a majority of the committee. The vote of an absent member, however, could not be counted for or against the measure unless he had specifically requested and directed that his vote should be cast on the particular question of reporting one way or the other, and could not be counted then except by unanimous consent of the committee.

I understand the rule of practice to be that when there is a committee of 12, as in this case, and 6 are actually present and 1 counted present by his own request to make a quorum, the committee may take action and report out a bill on a majority vote of those actually present if no objection is raised at the time; but if an objection is raised, then a vote can not be cast in the name of an absent member, even though he requests that it may be cast in a particular way. I believe that is the rule that has generally obtained in committees within the range of my experience, and I believe it is a sound rule.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri how unanimous consent could be given when there was not a quorum of the committee present.

Mr. STONE. The unanimous consent is given—that is what I mean—by those present, if no objection is made by anyone present to casting the vote of the absent member in accordance with his direction; but if an objection is made, then it is in effect the same as raising a point of no quorum.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, as my name has been mentioned in connection with this matter, I desire to say that the rule stated by the Senator from Missouri is the rule that prevails in the other committees of which I am a member. I know that in the Committee on Claims, if there are six members present and there is no objection, the six members can report a bill, although they are not a majority of the committee; but the objection of one, under the rule which the committee adopted, prevents the bill being reported.

As to the controversy in regard to this bill, I think I remember quite accurately the circumstances. The vote that was originally taken at the first meeting of the committee was on the question whether or not a majority of the committee was in favor of legislation upon this subject and reporting a bill at this session. That was before the bill had been read or any amendments suggested. Five of us voted in favor of legislation and in favor of reporting a bill, and I was one of the five. Two voted against it. I never dreamed of voting to report out the present bill, however. Not a single amendment was considered by the committee. Indeed, I do not believe the amendments were read to the committee, although they may have been read; and I was very much surprised when I learned, a week or two afterwards, that a report had been made, because it certainly never was justified or authorized.

As to the meeting yesterday, I do not believe it was fair to the members of the committee, who had a right to be heard. Four members of the committee who were very much interested in the bill were engaged on other important committee work. Two of them are members of the Committee on the Judiciary and were engaged at that time on the antitrust bills. Two others were members of the Committee on Foreign Relations and were present at the meeting of that committee, which was at the same hour, and the other Senators were engaged as has been described here.

For that reason I objected to reporting the bill, because I did not think it was regular, in order, or authorized under the rules of the committee or the Senate, and I did not think it was fair to absent members. At the time the action was taken there were five present, as has been indicated by the statements made by the other two members.

While I am in favor of legislation, I have some doubts about some of the provisions of this bill, and I should like to have it further considered by the committee. I think it ought to be further considered in the interest of legislation, and I think it ought to be referred back, because not to do it would set a most dangerous precedent, which might lead to anything. Why, the chairman of a committee could report a bill with any kind of an amendment he wished at any meeting he wished under such circumstances as control here if he could get the consent of absent members to do it, and we might as well abolish the committees.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, as a member of the committee, and present at both the meeting that took place before, when the bill was first considered and assumed to have been authorized to be reported, and the meeting of yesterday, when that previous action was affirmed, I should like to make a brief statement on this subject.

From the statement just made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] it can be readily seen by the Senate that a mistake might readily have been made and a misunderstanding have arisen as to whether the action of the first meeting on the subject was to report a bill or to report the bill. The understanding of the majority of the committee was that it was to report the bill; but to avoid all possibility of mistake and to give every member of the committee who was in opposition an opportunity to be present and express his attitude and opinion a second meeting was held on the subject and full opportunity given yesterday.

The objection made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] and by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] yesterday to the procedure was not by reason of there being a constructive quorum present, not by reason of the counting of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], who assented by phone to being counted for a committee quorum, though physically absent, and of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS], who departed from the meeting. That was not the basis of their objection. There was unanimous consent to the session of the committee, so far as the presence of those Senators was concerned; but the objection that was made was that the three main opponents of the bill were absent—that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] was absent, that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was absent, and that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] was absent.

All of those three gentlemen had been given full notice of this particular meeting of the committee. Of course, that objection was not tenable, especially in view of the fact that the meeting itself was called for the purpose of affording full opportunity to reconsider the previous order to report or for them to give such supplemental expression as it might seem proper to them to make.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course, the Senator does not mean to imply that the notice of the meeting contained any suggestion as to its purpose. The Senator will recall that some Senators had telephoned the committee and received information that it was for the purpose of considering the nominations of the members of the Reserve Board, which was the real matter pending before the committee.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. As was stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, the question of the nomination of the members of the Reserve Board being before the subcommittee and not having been reported upon, the only matter pending before the committee as a whole being this bill, the natural inference was that this bill was the subject matter for consideration. But be that as it may——

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland if he does think it was a fair basis for me to act on to ask the clerk of the committee what was going to be considered, and when I had been given the assurance that the stock-exchange bill was not to be taken up, did I not have good reason to conclude that nothing else except the nomination of the members of the Reserve Board was to be considered?

Mr. LEE of Maryland. Mr. President, I would not like to pass on what action took place between the Senator and the clerk of the committee or the power of the clerk to do away with the right of the committee to do business by word of mouth or through the telephone. I think that proposition answers itself without further response from me.

But let us consider the substance of this proposition. The substance of the motion of the Senator from Nebraska is that this bill has been prematurely reported to the Senate, and that it shall go back to the committee for further consideration and additional development of facts. Here is a volume of testimony, of briefs, and of exhibits that has been accumulated in this matter in the last three months by this committee, a volume of nearly 1,000 pages, and throughout those pages it will be seen that the Senator from Nebraska has been a vigorous and consistent opponent of this measure.

It must be recognized that the question before the Senate at this moment is not that anyone shall be deprived of a right, because the minority have a perfect right to file a minority report; they have a perfect right to offer amendments on the floor of the Senate; but the real question before the Senate at this moment is, Shall a backset be given to a bill which proposes to regulate stock exchanges in a reasonable manner, preserving the market places as such, and the opportunity to sell securities, which should be preserved, but which proposes to strike down, if it can be stricken down, the most extensive, objectionable, and unfair system of gambling that exists in any portion of the civilized world?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is not my desire to enter into any discussion at this time as to the merits or demerits of this bill. I do not consider that the motion or question before us rests at all upon the grounds stated by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE], but it does rest upon the ground which has been in a way presented by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]. The question now is whether we are going to accept a report from a committee, the validity of which report the committee itself, or members thereof, here on the floor question.

It seems to me that in the line of good order, in the line of fairness, in the line of following the rules and practices of the Senate, there ought to be unanimous consent to send the bill back to the committee. The committee has the power to report it again if a majority so desires.

I regard it as peculiarly unfortunate that we should accept a committee report here that is questioned so seriously as this is by members of that committee. No one yet has been able to state that it was entirely regular or that a majority of the members of the committee were present and voting.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] stated the case very fairly, that when in committee there may be one short of a quorum and they are all agreed and the views of another are known, he may leave his vote, but even in such a case other members, or at least a member, should later add their or his support. Then there could be no question as to the majority of the committee, but in all committee reports that I have helped to construct and pass upon, and all other reports that have drawn my attention when such reports were made here, I never have known one to be insisted upon where there was even a question of unfairness or of a misunderstanding. I will put it that way, as I do not wish to commit myself to assertions of unfairness.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to say that, in my judgment, there is no rule which has been adopted by the Committee on Banking and Currency that requires a physical quorum to be present. There is no rule that I can find in the Senate which regulates the matter of a quorum of a committee, though there may be. The Senator from Oklahoma has been very anxious to get this bill considered and passed upon. This is not the first time we have endeavored to do it, but we have endeavored on a number of occasions to have a vote on the measure. Invariably a quorum was not present. This was not the second meeting, it was not the third meeting that was called on this matter. If this report is turned down nine-tenths of the reports now on the calendar are open to the same objection.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator is speaking without due consideration in that statement. If so, then there is a very different procedure in some committees from those committees on which I have the honor of serving.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I must say that I am on a number of committees, and it is very seldom that we report a bill out with a majority present physically, but we have a statement made that members are to be counted for a quorum in favor of a bill. I believe that nine-tenths of the reports have been made without a physical quorum being present.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question bearing upon the matter? Does the Senator think that that is a proper procedure on the part of a committee? Is that good government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Unless you do that you will not have reports of committees made. I know that we make reports in this Chamber every day by polling committees. The Senator no doubt has signed his name a number of times.

Mr. WARREN. Very few, and it is a very bad practice; but in that case the assent is undoubtedly given by a majority of the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That may be; but we had a number of meetings——

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. REED. I understood the Senator from Colorado to make the statement on the floor that there were a number of attempts made to get the committee together, and that, unfortunately, there had been a lack of a quorum. If that is the case, that certainly settles this question, because no one ought to contend that less than a quorum can make a report.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, that is the very question to be determined by the Senate, because there has been an effort made to get this bill considered. Probably two or three weeks were spent in hearing testimony on this bill, and following that there was a meeting at which it was agreed by a number of the committee to report the bill. The Senator from Oklahoma, the chairman of the committee, prepared the report. Then, some question being made as to whether it was understood that the bill would be reported, he said, "Very well; I will not report it, but I will call other meetings"; and he had at least two meetings called for the purpose. Yesterday when we met I suggested that he had better call a meeting and specify in the call that we were going to have this particular bill voted upon, and the Senator from Oklahoma said he had to leave, to go to London for a week or ten days. He will be there that length of time. I understand it is a business trip and not a pleasure trip; but however that may be, and I am not so certain as to that, he said, "I can not call it; I leave to-morrow"—that is, to-day—"for Europe." Consequently he said he wanted the bill presented, so that the press could criticize the features of the bill while it is pending and before it came up in the Senate. He further said that he did not expect to get it up at the present session of Congress. Consequently he thought the report ought to be filed and that the bill ought to be reported. Thereupon the vote was taken as indicated, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] being present by proxy under authority that he should be counted to make a quorum, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] being counted in the same way, he having left the committee room just a few minutes before the vote was taken, and the other members being there in person.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator speaks of polling committees. Was any attempt made to poll the committee or the balance of the committee before reporting the bill, after the committee meeting and before the bill was reported?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not know that there was.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, I am not entering into the issue as to whether the bill is right or not, but I want to assure the Senator, notwithstanding his views as to the lack of a majority, that I have been a Member of the Senate for some time, under a Democratic administration and under Republican administrations, and I have never understood and I have never believed that the business of a committee was being done by a minority. We have had quorums, although it sometimes required a great deal of telephoning or sending of the Sergeant at Arms and others for absent members.

Does the Senator believe that now, with the majority that his party has in the Senate, they want to subscribe to the doctrine of acting in this way and doing business by proxy? Can a Senator remain at home and still do business here in the Senate by proxy? In the first place, making large committees, extending the number of members, as your party has done, and then permitting two, three, or four members, or less than a quorum, claim they are the committee and then proceed to do business—is that safe procedure?

Mr. SHAFROTH. If you can not get action in any other way, it seems to me this is the only procedure that you can take. We have no rule. If we need rules, we should have the committee adopt a rule and provide that nothing but a physical majority can pass upon a matter. Then when that is the case we will find that there would be very little legislation in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. The rule always is everywhere that the majority shall rule, and not the minority.

Mr. SHAFROTH. A bill is reported; it is not passed before it comes into the Senate. There is no danger of any great wrong being perpetrated. There is no doubt of that. It is purely a question whether this bill shall be reported. I feel that as the Senator from Oklahoma is not here he ought to be sustained, because I know he has made effort after effort to get this report.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Did a majority of the committee give its assent to this favorable report?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; a majority of those who were present.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. A majority of the committee?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; there was not a majority of the committee there personally, but a majority of a quorum.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will yield after I make a motion. I feel that some of the Senators here have very different views upon this matter and perhaps feel a little strongly about it; but I feel very strongly also that the Senator from Oklahoma should be upheld. For that reason I move that the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Nebraska be postponed for 30 days.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I raise a point of order against that motion.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado said he would yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. All right.

Mr. ROOT. I am not going to keep the Senator from Arkansas from the floor more than a minute.

We have had stated by the Senator from Colorado the fact that a member of the committee from which this bill came was present by proxy. That is going into the record of the Senate, and I do not see how we can escape either affirming or disaffirming the proposition that the Members of the Senate can act in committee by proxy. To my mind, it is an astonishing proposition, wholly unsupported by any parliamentary procedure ever known, and we must meet it now. We are called upon to pass on the right of a Senator to act by proxy in a committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, all that I have to say in answer to that is that it is done every day, and I believe not only a large majority, but I believe that three-fourths if not nine-tenths of the bills that have been reported were not reported at the time there was a physical majority present. Now, that may be wrong. If it is, pass a rule to that effect.

Mr. ROOT. That may be the reason why so little respect is paid to the reports of committees and why we have so much crude, ill-considered legislation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not believe that that produces the result which the Senator intimates. We have free and full discussion in committee; the reports of committees are generally elaborate, and they have considerable influence upon the Members of the Senate

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator know of anything in the rules of the Senate or in any parliamentary law that gives to the chairman of a committee any other rights than are possessed by the individual members of the committee, except the mere right to call meetings and to preside at the meetings?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know that there is any direct rule upon the subject at all. I understand there is no rule in the Senate which prescribes how a vote shall be taken in a committee.

Mr. REED. If that is true, a minority of a committee can report bills simply because the chairman called a meeting, when there has not been a meeting, because there were not enough there to constitute a meeting. Then, of course, it would follow that any other two, three, or four members could get together and call it a committee meeting and make a report.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senate passes bills every day with a minority here—not a majority at all—with a quorum not present.

Mr. REED. But there is a quorum present in the contemplation of law. No one having raised the question one is presumed to exist, but the moment it is challenged the roll is called.

The Senator well knows that while there have been a number of meetings of this committee at which there was not a quorum, unfortunately those meetings were called in every single instance when a number of the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency were compelled to be in attendance upon other committees.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state——

Mr. REED. As an illustration, the last meeting of this committee was called for the very hour when I was obliged to be in attendance upon the Judiciary Committee. I had advised the chairman of the committee that I am unwilling at this time to pass upon the bill. I could not be in the Judiciary Committee and in the other committee. It has happened that way with me several times. I had no idea that this bill would be reported out unless there was a quorum of the committee present to transact business.

I have been trying to give this matter attention with not the slightest disposition in the world to delay it an hour, but the bill has been brought forward at a time when members of the committee were absolutely compelled to be elsewhere. Certainly the fact that the chairman of the committee saw fit to call a meeting at that time, and he did it, of course, with the best of purpose, does not deny to those other members the right and the Senate the right to at least have a quorum present to transact business.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in answer——

Mr REED. I want to say, in addition, that one of the purposes of having a committee meeting to pass upon a measure is that there shall be thrashed out, and after full conference, the various provisions of a bill. The committee, then, is generally expected to become somewhat in accord and give the Senate the benefit of its common judgment. But if this bill were to be now forced on us, I would, of course, not feel bound by anything the committee had done; no one else would feel bound by it. Why should not the bill go back and receive at the hands of this committee that consideration which it was primarily intended should be given to it when it was sent to the committee?

We sent this bill to the committee for the purpose of committee action. The Senator admits we have not had committee action; we have had minority action. He admits there has never been a quorum of the committee present at any one time when this bill was being considered, much less a quorum present at the time when it was voted into the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say that no doubt the Senator has a great many committee meetings to attend; but this meeting was held on Thursday last, and Thursday is not the regular meeting day of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. REED. But the Judiciary Committee was in session on that day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That might be, but it is not the regular day for the meeting of the Judiciary Committee. We can not foretell what day the Judiciary Committee is going to be in session.

I wish to say, further, that this notice was for 10 o'clock, which is half an hour before the usual time for the meeting of committees. We remained in session until 25 minutes of 11 o'clock hoping to get a quorum.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the floor for a few moments only.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have made a motion.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I want to make a few remarks on the general question involved.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the controversy which is presented here this morning is fairly well covered by a new rule which was adopted by the Senate on the 12th of April, 1912, but which has not as yet been incorporated in the regular Manual of the Senate.

The difficulty with which we are now confronted was quite a common one in the earlier Congresses of my service here. It would then frequently happen in all committees, and it especially happened in one committee, where the chairman was usually supplied with a pocket full of proxies of all of the absent members; that no matter how fully we might debate a question in committee, or how well prepared we might be to dispose of it according to the judgment of the majority of the Senators who were then present, we found ourselves embarrassed with this proxy business. It ran along thus until it became such an absolute evil that some of us had to take notice of it. That situation was of such frequent occurrence in two of the committees of the Senate of which I happened to be a member that it occurred to me that some remedy might be found. Our principal committees have been so greatly enlarged in membership that they have in great measure lost their influence, or rather, I should say, that the individual members of the committees had lost their influence in the deliberations of the committee that they usually feel so little interest in what is scheduled to transpire there that they rarely ever attend in sufficient numbers to have a respectable number of the committee present, so that frequently we had no majority quorum present, and this business of counting absent members or telephoning to absent members became a habit. In an effort to remedy this demoralizing practice, I offered an amendment to the rules on the 9th of April, 1912. A motion was made to refer the proposed amendment to the Committee on Rules, which was not adopted, because a more expeditious method could be found to dispose of it, and it was informally referred to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and myself as a kind of subcommittee to work out some provision that would meet the exigencies of that obviously embarrassing situation. We reported to the Senate, and the Senate adopted the following resolution on the 12th of April, 1912:

Resolved, That the several standing committees of the Senate having a membership of more than three Senators are hereby respectively authorized to fix, each for itself, the number of its members who shall constitute a quorum thereof for the transaction of such business as may be considered by said committee; but in no case shall a committee, acting under authority of this resolution, fix as a quorum thereof any number less than one-third of its entire membership.

And here is the part of the rule that applies specifically to this case:

Nor shall any report be made to the Senate that is not authorized by the concurrence of more than one-half of a majority of such entire membership.

We have now before us the case of a report coming from a committee consisting of 12 members concurred in and authorized by the personal vote of 3 members only. Even if the committee reporting this bill had availed itself of the power conferred by the Senate in this new rule, and had provided that one-third of the membership of the Committee on Banking and Currency should constitute a quorum thereof, under this rule it would have required the concurring vote of a minimum vote of 4. No report can be made under this rule from a committee consisting of 12 members without the concurring vote of 4.

It appears from the undisputed facts—and those are the only ones with which I care to deal—that this committee consists of 12 members. There were at most 6 members present. One of those members absented himself before the vote was taken. Nobody is authorized to go into an inquiry by which secondary evidence will be taken as to how this member would have voted if he had actually been present and heard the final argument in committee. His actually absenting himself from the committee deprives him of the right to vote by proxy or request. So that when it came to a vote on this particular report there were only 5 members who voted, 3 in favor of the report and 2 against it. Obviously it is not a report of that committee, even though it exercised its privilege under this new rule of the Senate to have made 4 members of the committee a quorum for the transaction of business, because, in that event, it would have required the entire 4 to report the bill, whereas it is admitted that only 3 voted in favor of this report.

I am quite committed to legislation having for its purpose the abolition of the New York Stock Exchange, and I am somewhat embarrassed at finding myself in a position where, in order to insist upon regularity, I have to assume an attitude which would apparently delay legislation along that line; but the integrity of our rules here and the necessity of observing them strictly is of the very greatest importance, and I assume that in the end they will bring before this body every matter that it ought to consider, the subject matter of this bill included.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I very gladly yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. I recall very well the introduction of the rule to which the Senator refers and the action that was taken on it at the time. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that that would have been accepted by the Senate, or that he would even have proposed it, unless it took, on a finality, the majority of an actual majority of the entire committee to affirmatively assent to a report?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Senate amended it in that respect on motion of the Senator from Utah. He was not willing that a report should come out of a committee without the concurring votes of a clear majority of a majority of the whole committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair ask the Senator from Arkansas when that rule was adopted?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. On the 12th of April, 1912.

Mr. WARREN. I think it has never been printed in the Rules.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It has never yet been printed in the Senate Manual.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At this juncture, may the Chair request some Senator to ask for a revised edition of the Senate Rules, so that the Chair and the Secretary, at least, may have the means of knowledge whether they ever possess it or not?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I will be very glad to act as the Chair's representative in that behalf; but I am advised that there is a new edition of the Rules of the Senate now being prepared.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there is a revision going on now——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I believe I will conclude what little I have to say without further interruption.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely want to say that the rule referred to by the Senator from Arkansas should have been included in the present revision, but that revision was made in a hurry toward the close of a session in a former administration.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have no part in the controversy between members of the committee about what took place there. It would be unseemly to undertake to create a situation where different versions of what transpired there were presented to the Senate for settlement. I deal, therefore, with broad facts—that there is a committee of 12 members, with 6 actually present at one time and with 5 alone voting, 3 for and 2 against reporting the bill. I therefore insist that if the objection is raised that the affirmative vote of that number of that committee can not report to the Senate a bill, and that the recent rule adopted by the Senate on the 12th of April, 1912, is conclusive against the claim that they can, it is hardly necessary to add that a Senator has no more right to empower another Senator to vote for him or otherwise act for him in committee during his actual absence from its session than he would have to so authorize that other to act for him in the sessions of the open Senate. In both instances the service required involves the exercise of discretion and judgment after joint deliberation, and by the very nature of the service this can not be delegated.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I had no notice of this rule. It is true that there has not been a vote taken in which there has been a concurrence of more than one-half of the majority of the entire membership of the committee. There is not any question about that, and if the rule referred to has been adopted and it is a rule of the Senate I, of course, have no complaint to make about it; but it does seem to me, Mr. President, that what we ought to do is to sustain the motion which I have made to postpone the consideration of this matter for 30 days, at which time the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] will be back.

I wish to say that a motion to postpone consideration is always, as is a motion to adjourn, in order, and that it is not subject to a point of order, as claimed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What does the Senator from Colorado mean by "30 days"? There is a rule that permits a motion to postpone to a day certain, but it does not say anything about 30 days.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move, then, that the consideration of the motion of the Senator from Nebraska be postponed to the 30th day of July, 1914.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, my point of order is that a motion to recommit is not subject to amendment, and the motion of the Senator from Colorado would be in effect an amendment of my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is not well taken. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I call for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those in favor of the motion of the Senator from Colorado will rise and stand until counted. [A pause.] Those opposed will rise. [A pause.] There is no doubt the motion is lost.

The question recurs on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that the written report accompanying the bill may be withdrawn from the files.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken. Morning business is closed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate take up for consideration House bill 13811, known as the river and harbor bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should have no objection if the Senator would withhold the motion for a few moments. The unfinished business, I believe, is the trade commission bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. That bill does not come up until 2 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, very well.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is objection to the request for unanimous consent to take up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Will a motion to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill displace the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will, if its consideration goes beyond 2 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not see the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] in the Chamber, and I will not make the motion if it will have that effect.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair made an incorrect statement. There is unfinished business before the Senate, which, in the opinion of the Chair, should be handed down at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood that. I did not want to make any motion that would displace that as the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The river and harbor bill, if taken up, could run until 2 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move, then, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill, and at 2 o'clock I will ask to have it laid aside.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	James	Page	Smoot
Borah	Jones	Perkins	Sterling
Brady	Kern	Pittman	Stone
Bryan	Lane	Poindexter	Thomas
Burleigh	Lea, Tenn.	Pomerene	Thompson
Burton	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Thornton
Camden	Lewis	Root	Tillman
Catron	McCumber	Saulsbury	Warren
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	West
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	White
Clarke, Ark.	Nelson	Shively	Williams
Fletcher	Newlands	Simmons	Works
Hollis	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Hughes	Overman	Smith, Md.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] is ill to-day, and will probably not be in attendance on the session of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is necessarily absent. I should like to have this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. BORAH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for amendments, the committee amendments to be first acted upon.

Mr. BORAH. I object.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that, objection being made, the bill must be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to the bottom of page 24.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 15613.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have been receiving, and I understand other Senators have been receiving, a multitude of letters from our constituents forwarding to us certain ready-prepared lettergrams and letters sent to them for their signature and then to be forwarded to us, these letters as a rule advising Congress to "shut up shop" and "go home," because, as alleged, it is "not doing any good," and that its mere presence in Washington is "a menace to business," warning us about the "interference of politicians" with "business," and so forth. They generally send the plated matter—ready-made lettergram or letter—to be signed and sent to us, and then they write contemporaneously a letter to our constituents telling them to sign the lettergram or letter and forward to their Senators or Representatives, and then add shrewdly: "It would be better yet for you to write a letter upon your own letterhead, in slightly different language, and sign that; it might have more influence."

This is a part of the scheme which has been going on. Most of my constituents send these forms to me unsigned, with a few ironical remarks of their own, at the expense of those who have forwarded them—the people of Mississippi being rather preeminently a humorous people. Very few of them have been caught with chaff of that sort, but now and then one does sign a letter of that kind and send it. I have written, in reply to one of the few who has been deceived, a letter which I shall read, which, in my opinion, expresses the facts, and I shall send it afterwards to the desk to be printed; but I shall ask that the name of the addressee be not printed with the letter, for the reason that he is a very modest sort of a man, and he might object to his name being brought into public notoriety in that way:

JUNE 17, 1914.

MY DEAR SIR: Your telegram was received. The whole country is being flooded by certain financial interests and by certain plutocratic industrial concerns with blank forms of night lettergrams or letters being sent to people everywhere asking them either to sign and send them to their Senators and Representatives or to send letters or telegrams drawn up by themselves. Senators and Representatives are to be thereby persuaded to adjourn Congress and go home on the ground that the country and "business" are suffering by surfeit of legislation or, as they would perhaps call it, with industrial dyspepsia.

The motives of the men who are carrying on this propaganda—the Simmons Hardware Co. and many others, amongst others some banking firms in New York City—are obvious. Not only are they obvious, but obviously undemocratic—plainly and palpably plutocratic. Like movements started with a series of "predictions" of "dire disaster" if we dared to revise the tariff. We revised it; no disaster followed. On the contrary, the whole country came to the opinion that we had used our power very conservatively, and if there were any quarreling with what we had done at all it was by Democrats who said we had not cut the tariff robbery deep enough.

Then these same great interests, though evidently not always the same men speaking for them, but through kindred organizations, while the banking and currency bill was under consideration said that the proposed measure was "revolutionary," that it would "bring on a panic," that it was "holding the country in a state of depression," etc. The truth is that the country was not in a state of depression. We had the courage to pass the bill anyhow. Within less than a week afterwards some of them, and within less than two weeks afterwards nearly all of them, were singing pæans of praise of the bill, and everybody was confessing that we had inaugurated an infinitely better financial system than the United States ever previously had.

Now, when we come to the trust question and want to pass supplemental legislation concerning it, the same influences are engaged in the same struggle—predicting disaster (or rather, under the guise of prediction, they are threatening disaster)—and some of them now would bring on a panic if thereby they thought they could frighten the Democratic Party from its program of reform legislation.

With all their other charges they are constantly talking about "politicians interfering with business." Now, no man has more objection to the ordinary politician in the sense of being the manipulators of conventions and primaries and mere office seekers and nothing more than I have. But Senators and Representatives, taken by and large, are fair samples of their people. They are, moreover, the choice of their people, and if they are a "poor lot," then the people who selected them are responsible for selecting a poor lot, and must have been a poor lot themselves or they would not have done it. A slur at the Senate and House, therefore, is a slur at the people who sent them here, because even Senators now are eligible for election by the people; and even before the law was passed making them eligible, they were practically so, for all the Southern and most of the Western States had primaries for their selection—voluntary primaries, independently of the law—or else primaries by State law. So that these so-called, much-derided politicians are nothing but the people in their representative capacity, and what these plutocrats are particularly afraid of is the people. They are afraid that this Democratic administration is going to carry out the Democratic platform, and that in carrying it out the masses of mankind will be righteously and fairly treated. They know that if the masses of mankind are righteously and fairly treated that the interests hitherto favored by law, or by the permitted violation or evasion of law, either one, will be hurt. Hence their cry of alarm. Wherever dishonest business is in our way it must be hurt; it ought to be hurt. No honest business will be hurt.

There is another consideration which I would impress upon you. In so far as there is any business depression now—and outside of the boll-weevil district I do not find very much, though some—it is the depression growing out of the feeling of uncertainty as to what the legislation supplementary to the antitrust laws will be. It is therefore logical, I think, that the sooner we relieve this feeling of suspense and uncertainty by putting the law upon the statute books the better it will be for all. If I were a surgeon and you were brought to me for an operation, and I saw that an operation was necessary and right, I would operate upon you just as soon as I could, provided you were in a proper condition. I certainly would not tell you to go away and come back at the end of four weeks, leaving you in suspense during all that time, probably to break down with nervous prostration because of anxiety and anticipation.

I am, with every expression of regard,

Very truly, yours,

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

Mr. President, that letter about expresses my views, and what I deem true views, and it will save me and others letters perhaps to the sought-to-be misled.

Now, this scheme has gone so far that I notice that the very headlines of these plutocratic newspapers are engaged in it. I hold in my hand an article from one of them this morning. Do not be frightened, Senators, I am not going to read all of it, but I just want to show you how they take advantage of the headline space to put in what is not true and what the facts as reported in the space below do not justify. Here is the report of the failure of H. B. Claflin & Co. A part of the headline says:

Tariff and general depression said to be in part to blame.

Then, on a different page of the paper, there is what purports to be "a special" from its "correspondent in New York," reciting this same falsehood, but here below is the actual report in the news column of the facts in the case, as made by the Associated Press from the actual report of the parties to the failure and the financial conferees and accepted by it. A part of it is this:

From one of the conferees, who was a powerful factor in aiding the elder Morgan to stem the tide of 1907 and who also participated in the recent effort to save the H. B. Claflin Co., the inside story of the efforts of this group of financiers to thwart the failure was learned.

"It was exactly like the days of 1907," said this merchant.

Roosevelt was President in 1907, and he had never even urged a reduction of the tariff and there had been none. Then, later on—evidently somebody must have asked him a question—he said:

Now, about the causes which provoked the failure. I must say that the present tariff laws were not the principal causes of the crash, although the tariff legislation had its influence on the general situation. It was simply a case where the Claflin business was too big for the capital invested

And that is the Gospel truth. The great German historian Gervinus, in writing a "History of the Nineteenth Century," opened his first chapter by trying to account for the failure of Napoleon Bonaparte's imperial scheme, and he explained it by one German word. He said it was überspannung—overexpansion, overstretching, as when you stretch a bow to a point where it will not rebound, you understand.

This firm of Claflin & Co. was undertaking upon insufficient capital not only to do their immense business up in New York and Brooklyn—a very immense one—but a 30 retail stores business all over the Union, in its largest cities. This man's account of it is true, to wit, that "the Claflin business was too big for the capital invested." Then he was asked this question:

Is there a shortage of money due to a business depression which prevented the raising of the money necessary?

No; there is plenty of money and cheap money, too; it isn't that. It is the situation where people are without the confidence sufficient to guarantee the raising of the money. It was a case of getting it all or not at all. We could not get it, that was all.

In other words, Claflin & Co. had overstretched their credit and had no collateral to put up to cover.

This happens with hundreds of people every year, though with few rich enough to fail for thirty millions. "Just as in 1907." "Verily, yes"—and Roosevelt President.

Now, so much for that, Mr. President.

In this connection I wish to ask that there be inserted in the RECORD an address made by the President of the United States upon yesterday. I will ask that it be inserted as nearly facsimile as possible. It is his address to the Virginia editors who were in the city of Washington. The President expresses himself with his usual facility and his usual felicity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MALTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Without objection, the request will be complied with.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT WILSON.

The address of President Wilson is as follows:

"I think it is appropriate in receiving you to say just a word or two in assistance of your judgment about the existing conditions. You are largely responsible for the state of public opinion. You furnish the public with information, and in your editorials you furnish it with the interpretation of that information. We are in the presence of a business situation which is variously interpreted. Here in Washington, through the Bureau of Commerce and other instrumentalities that are at our disposal and through a correspondence which comes in to us from all parts of the Nation, we are, perhaps, in a position to judge of the actual condition of business better than those can judge who are at any other single point in the country, and I want to say to you that, as a matter of fact, the signs of a very strong business revival are becoming more and more evident from day to day.

THINKS BUSINESS MEN TOO TIMID.

"I want to suggest this to you: Business has been in a feverish and apprehensive condition in this country for more than 10 years. I will not stop to point out the time at which it began to be apprehensive; but during more than 10 years business has been the object of sharp criticism in the United States, a criticism growing in volume and growing in particularity, and as a natural consequence as the volume of criticism has increased business has grown more and more anxious. Business men have acted as some men do who fear they will have to undergo an operation and who are not sure that when they get on the table the operation will not be a capital operation. As a matter of fact, as the diagnosis has progressed it has become more and more evident that no capital operation was necessary; that at the most a minor operation was necessary to remove admitted distempers and evils. The treatment is to be constitutional rather than surgical, affecting habits of life and action which have been hurtful. For on all hands it is admitted that there are processes of business, or have been processes of business, in this country which ought to be corrected, but the correction has been postponed, and in proportion to the postponement the fever has increased—the fever of apprehension.

UNCERTAINTY FATAL TO TRADE.

"There is nothing more fatal to business than to be kept guessing from month to month and from year to year whether something is going to happen to it or not and what in particular is going to happen to it, if anything does. It is impossible to forecast the prospects of any line of business unless you know what the year is going to bring forth. Nothing is more unfair, nothing has been declared by business men to be more harmful, than to keep them guessing.

"The guessing went on; the air was full of interrogation points for 10 years and more. Then came an administration which for the first time had a definite program of constructive correction; not of destructive correction, but of a constructive correction of admitted evil, a very clear program, disclosed so far as possible in a general program, in its particulars as well as in its general features. And the administration proceeded to carry out this program.

TARIFF PLUNGE A BOLD ONE.

"First, there was the tariff, and business shivered: 'We don't like to go in; the water looks cold,' but when the tariff act had been passed it was found that the readjustment was possible without any serious disturbance whatever. So that men said with a sense of relief: 'Well, we are glad to get that behind us, and it wasn't bad after all.'

"Then came the currency reform. You remember with what resistance, with what criticism, with what systematic holding back, a large body of bankers in this country met the proposals of that reform, and you know how, immediately after its passage, they recognized its benefit and its beneficence, and how ever since the passage of that reform bankers throughout the United States have been congratulating themselves that it was possible to carry out this great reform upon sensible and solid lines.

NEXT, THE TRUST PROBLEM.

"Then we advanced to the trust program and again the same dread, the same hesitation, the same urgency that the thing should be postponed. It will not be postponed, and it will not be postponed, because we are the friends of business. We know what we are doing; we purpose to do it under the advice—for we have been fortunate enough to obtain the advice—of men who understand the business of this country, and we know that the effect is going to be exactly what the effect of the currency reform was—a sense of relief and of security.

"Because when the program is finished it is finished; the interrogation points are rubbed off the slate; business is given its constitution of freedom and is bidden to go forward under that constitution. And just as soon as it gets that leave and freedom there will be a boom of business in this country such as we have never witnessed in the United States.

SPEAKS AS FRIEND OF BUSINESS.

"I, as a friend of business and a servant of the country, would not dare stop in this program and bring on another long period of agitation. Agitation longer continued would be fatal to the business of this country, and if this program is delayed there will come agitation, with every letter in the word a capital letter. The choice is a sober and sensible program now completed or months upon months of additional conjecture and danger. I, for one, could not ask this country to excuse a policy which subjected business to longer continued agitation and uncertainty; and therefore I am sure that it is beginning to be evident to the whole press of this country, and by the same token to the people, that a constructive program is at least not only to be proposed but completed, and that when it is completed business can get, and will get, what it can get in no other way—rest, recuperation, and successful adjustment. I can not get rest if you send me to bed wondering what is going to happen to me in the morning, but if you send me to bed knowing what the course of business is to be to-morrow morning I can rest. How much better is certain justice to the men engaged in business.

HAS FAITH IN CONGRESS.

"It is a matter of conscience as well as a matter of large public policy to do what this Congress I am now certain is going to do—finish the program. And I do not think it is going to take a very long time. I believe that the temper of those engaged in this great thing is admirable; that the various elements sometimes in antagonism in the Congress of the United States are drawing together; and that we shall witness an early, statesmanlike result for which we shall all have abundant reason to be thankful."

Mr. WILLIAMS. During the day the President had received a letter, signed by Speaker CHAMP CLARK, of the House, and all the Democratic Representatives from Missouri, pledging him their support in his campaign for antitrust legislation, and promising they would remain in Washington until the program was finished. He replied, expressing thanks and appreciation.

Now, Mr. President, I want to add this: We are going to stay here with him, our selected and elected chief. It is awfully hot and uncomfortable; I would rather be at home with my roses and fruits and garden, but we are of the opinion——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will in a minute. We are of the opinion that we have undertaken to fight this fight out, and we are going to stay here and "fight it out on this line if it takes all summer" until we have finished the chief items of our program. It was tariff, banking and currency, and trusts. We are not at all influenced in doing it by the fact that an ex-President of the United States predicted that we would not. We had intended all the time to do our main work here before we adjourned. Now I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator has said that we were going to stay here until this program is completed. I should like to know whom he means. I understand that some have gone to Europe and others to summer watering places.

Mr. CLAPP. And I understand this morning others desire to go to Europe.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to ask the Senator to be a little more specific.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, we will manage to keep enough of us here to legislate, and we are going to keep enough of us here when the time comes to put the bill we agree upon through by our votes. Now, I am not here——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a minute. I am not here for the purpose of criticizing Senators who go to Europe. In fact, if a Senator has nothing better to do, he might as well go to Europe. I suppose that sort of Senator is easily spared. But I am now announcing the fact that we Democrats in both Houses meant what we said in the salient points of our platform, and we are going to stay here until we prove to the country that we meant what we said, when we undertook to take these three great monsters of economic abuse by the throat and do something serious to them. We did not act the fool on the tariff; we did not act the fool on banking and currency; we are not going to act like fools upon the trust question. We are going to be with regard to that as with regard to the two previous questions—conservatively constructive, not merely destructive. We shall destroy what is plutocratic, exploitive, and industrially tyrannical. We shall conserve present conditions where honest, advantageous, or even economically indifferent.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I am a Progressive myself, and I am charmed to know that the Senator from Mississippi is a Progressive. It is not long ago that he was speaking of Democrats who were sometimes foolish, or that they made fools of themselves. He now says they have not made fools of themselves.

The Senator says he is going to stay here and we are going to have a quorum. I should like the Senator to examine the RECORD and see how many times the party of which he is a distinguished member has been able to have a quorum of its own Members in this Chamber. The Republicans have constituted a quorum here in greater ratio with their total membership than the Democrats on every roll call.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not said that we generally constituted a quorum by ourselves. Luckily for the Democratic Party there are some gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber who, like us, want reform legislation of one sort or another in this country, and we do not have to make a quorum merely by ourselves. They will be here to help, and the Senator can rely upon that.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator as he goes along may note that the whole of this side of the Chamber have been here to help at all times to make a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course you have, and you are going to stay here hereafter. All we have to do is to make up our minds that we are willing to stay here, and you are compelled to stay and help us to make a quorum. You dare not go home and leave us with a quorum of Democrats and Progressives to run the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I understood that the Senator from Mississippi is going to make an European trip.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not that I know of; not until the Senate adjourns finally, at any rate. The Senator said he had heard me once accuse the Democratic Party of being capable of foolish things and really of doing foolish things. Now, the difference between the regular old-fashioned Republican and a Democrat is that a Republican is constantly attempting to make people think his party is infallible, and never under any circumstances confesses that it will do or can do or has done a foolish thing, whereas a Democrat being frank and belonging to a party that does not pretend to papal or other infallibility, confesses to the ordinary faults of human nature. A Democrat finds his party now and then making a goose of itself, and when it does he is apt to say so; but the party thus far has not made a fool of itself at this Congress, either upon the tariff or upon banking and currency, nor is it going to make one of itself upon this trust question.

And one reason why we will not, Mr. President, is that we have at the head of us a brave and worthy captain, who "knows how to do things," and with tact and diplomacy knows how to influence other people to help him do things, and who has an active brain and an eloquent tongue to tell why he wants to do the thing to be done. Hitherto he and we put together have been irresistible. Hitherto he and we put together have proven ourselves conservatively constructive and upon the whole very wise, and gathering courage from the fact that thus far we have been conservatively constructive and wise, gathering a hope that we have laid in the grave and covered up the old differences which for so long a time made us inoperative and ineffective as a national force, we shall go forward from past victories to new victories with absolute certainty that the condition of the business of the country and the psychological condition which has been produced by these lettergrams, cryptograms, and agreed-on letters, and this prepensed propaganda will improve from day to day. The only thing I am afraid of is that toward the close of this administration, amid unalloyed prosperity, the Democratic Party may be singing the old Republican slogan and trying to persuade men that because we are in power we are the cause of every good fortune to which mankind have in the meanwhile fallen heir—including the weather and the roses and lillies and jasmines. We will try to avoid that, but we will try at the same time to stick at our posts, do our work, and justify the confidence which the people of the United States have placed in us.

It is true that a majority of the people of the United States did not vote for us. Neither did they vote for Abraham Lincoln, by the way. There are several other of our greatest Presidents that they never voted for, but they were all the same the choice of the people of the United States as between their actual opponents, and we are going to justify that choice.

Much has been said about the Democratic platform and the little things in it. It is the big things that count. The people know what the big things are. They know and knew that the three great big things were, first, exploitation of them by tariff taxation; second, exploitation of them and the country's credits by the Money Trust; and, third, exploitation of them as producers and laborers by industrial trusts. They know that if we can remedy these three abuses and tyrannies under one administration we shall have done more than any one administration in this country ever did since Thomas Jefferson retired from the White House after conquering the plutocratic counter revolution.

Mr. President, my chief object, of course, was to get the President's address into the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, day before yesterday I requested the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to permit me to put in the RECORD, at the request of the Attorney General, a couple of letters, but he was extremely anxious to get started on the bill, and at his request I postponed it. I was unable to get recognition this morning, and I will take advantage of the liberality of debate by having the Secretary read the letters in question and making then a very brief comment on them.

Several days ago in the debate here upon a resolution of mine pending, regarding the New York Central Railway, some reference was made to the New Haven investigation going on, and I said some things in that debate which it seems gave offense to the Attorney General, and it resulted in some correspondence. At his request I want to put in the RECORD both his letter and the letter of mine that brought forth his reply, and then I will say just a few words on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the letter read?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I ask that my letter be first read and then the letter of the Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

JUNE 20, 1914.

Hon. J. C. MCREYNOLDS,
Attorney General.

DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: I am in receipt of a letter from Senator LEWIS, of Illinois, in which he says that you have been very much annoyed and somewhat pained at the constant reference in the public press to the effect that I have stated on the floor of the Senate that I have a "letter" from you stating, in substance, that the Department of Justice had no intention of bringing any criminal prosecutions against the officials of the New Haven road.

I have never stated, either on the floor of the Senate or elsewhere, that I had any letter from you to this effect. I have been called upon several times by different newspaper correspondents, asking me if I had such a letter or if I had ever stated that I had such a letter, and I have on each occasion taken particular pains to explain to them that I had no "letter" from you and that I had not made such a statement. What I did state on the floor of the Senate is correctly reported on page 9432 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the issue of May 29, 1914. On that occasion I used the following language: "I have a statement from the Attorney General's Office now in my desk to the effect that there never was in contemplation any criminal action; that there was no violation of any statute in all the proceedings that were had in the New Haven affair." I had reference here to a public statement issued by the Department of Justice, and which was published in the afternoon papers on January 7, 1914, and in the morning papers on January 8, 1914, and is as follows:

"The Department of Justice is constantly receiving letters inquiring why it does not direct the prosecution of officers and directors who have been responsible for the financial irregularities of railroads which have been disclosed from time to time. These inquiries proceed from a mistaken but very common view of the powers of the Department of Justice. There is no law under which it can prosecute the officers, directors, or other agents of a railroad company for improvident or dishonest management of the financial affairs of that company. The Congress has not undertaken to regulate the issuance of securities by corporations created by States, or the conduct of fiduciary relations of their officers, but has left those matters to the States, respectively."

It was stated in the newspapers in connection with the above-quoted statement that the same was issued in connection with a desire on the part of the persons writing the letters to have the Department of Justice begin prosecution against officials of the New Haven road.

Referring again to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the same date and same page, I made the following statement: "The Attorney General did not contemplate any prosecution against anybody who has testified or who is going to testify; at least, in a conference called for the purpose of ascertaining whether it would be proper for that investigation to proceed, at which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] was present, there was no claim made by the Attorney General that he had any sufficient evidence on which to prosecute anyone, or that he contemplated any such prosecution." At this same conference you will remember that I distinctly stated that if the Department of Justice was in possession of evidence sufficient to maintain a prosecution against any of these officials, and that you contemplated such a prosecution, and that the investigation then going on before the Interstate Commerce Commission under a resolution that I had introduced in the Senate would interfere with such prosecution, I would do what I could to have the investigation before the Interstate Commerce Commission suspended until the Department of Justice could complete its action. There was no claim made at this conference by you that any Federal statute had been violated or that your department contemplated any criminal prosecution in connection with the New Haven affair. Your comment on the investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission was to the effect that you feared such investigation might interfere with the contemplated reorganization of the New Haven and the Boston & Maine railroads.

The two statements made by me, above quoted from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it seems to me, were therefore entirely justified by the facts. I do regret, however, that any newspaper should have made the statement that I had stated, either on the floor of the Senate or elsewhere, that I had a "letter" from you stating that no Federal statute had been violated, and that you had no intention of prosecuting anyone in connection with the New Haven affair. I certainly have no desire to place you in any false light or to make any statement not borne out by the facts. From the published statement of the department above quoted, and from our conference above referred to, I did not believe there was any misunderstanding. From this conference I formed the opinion that your objection to the investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission was based upon your belief that such investigation would interfere with the reorganization of these two roads. Upon this matter I, of course, do not agree with you, but I frankly concede that you have the same honest right to your opinion as I have to mine.

If the public statement issued by the Department of Justice above quoted is not correct, or if it in any way misrepresents the attitude of your department, I would be very glad, if you so desire, to make on the floor of the Senate any correction thereof that you may deem proper.

I have the honor to remain,

Yours, truly, G. W. NORRIS.

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to that letter the Attorney General sent me the letter which I send to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 24, 1914.

Hon. GEORGE W. NORRIS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SIR: Permit me to answer your letter of Saturday, June 20, wherein you discuss certain statements made by you in the Senate on May 29 touching New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad matters and my attitude thereto. I must reply plainly, but with a purpose to avoid unnecessary acerbity or personal offense.

I accept, of course, your disclaimer of any conscious design to misrepresent; and I am not unmindful of the difficulty commonly experienced in extemporaneous debate of viewing the subject from different angles and observing strict accuracy of expression.

Although its phraseology suggests a willingness on your part to make amends for any misrepresentations, nevertheless, your letter fails to meet the just objections to your statements on the occasion referred to and the necessary inferences therefrom. The language which you unfortunately employed is out of harmony with the real facts and, if accepted as accurate, would cast a false light about the situation.

In the report of the Senate proceedings for May 29 (RECORD, p. 9432) this appears:

"Mr. NORRIS. That is not true. The Senator from Missouri is referring to the resolution in regard to the New Haven Railroad. The Attorney General did not have in contemplation any criminal action, and nobody has been given immunity in that case. The Attorney General has never said, excepting as the statements have appeared in the newspapers——

"Mr. REED. Did he not write a letter in which he said——

"Mr. NORRIS. Not only that, but, if the Senator wants to go into that proposition, I have a statement from the Attorney General's office now in my desk to the effect that there never was in contemplation any criminal action; that there was no violation of any Federal statute in all the proceedings that were had in the New Haven affair."

The assertion that "the Attorney General did not have in contemplation any criminal action, and nobody has been given immunity in that case" was unwarranted and misleading. Speaking in your presence I had expressly declined to declare my plans or purposes, and this has been my uninterrupted attitude. It was therefore impossible for you to know what they were, and yet you undertook to make announcement in respect of them. As is well known, Mellen, a conspicuous figure, was then and is now under indictment in the Federal court because of certain transactions connected with New Haven affairs. How far his examination by the Interstate Commerce Commission gave immunity need not be discussed here.

On May 13 last, with others, you came to my office to talk of New Haven matters. While you were here—two of my assistants being present—I read within your hearing, and later in the day caused to be published, a letter written by me to the Interstate Commerce Commission on May 12, wherein attention was called to the possibility of immunizing Mellen and others theretofore reported as summoned for examination, and which concluded with these words:

"Of course, I have no desire to interfere with or to urge any objection to the course you may deliberately decide upon, but it seems my duty to the Government again to suggest that you carefully consider, along with other factors, the effects which an examination at this time of the persons named above may have."

On the same occasion I distinctly declared that the letter to the commission expressed my position with exactness; and, moreover, that I had nothing either to add to or to take from its plain terms. I have never objected to the commission examining anyone whom it decided to put upon the stand with full knowledge of all the circumstances; and you were so informed with no uncertain emphasis.

Again, the declaration (RECORD, p. 9432) that—"I have a statement from the Attorney General's office now in my desk to the effect that there never was in contemplation any criminal action; that there was no violation of any Federal statute in all the proceedings that were had in the New Haven affair"— is not in harmony with the facts. No statement to that effect was ever issued by me or from my office, nor was any such statement made either to you or to anyone else.

You undertake to justify the language quoted by presenting an announcement from this office published in the newspapers of January 7 and 8 last, but here again you fall into error. That the construction placed by you on that publication is impossible of acceptance will appear from even a hasty consideration of its terms. It had no reference whatever to violations of the antitrust or other Federal laws, but obviously was called for by "a mistaken but very common view of the powers of the Department of Justice," and its purpose was to remind the public of the statutory limitations upon the authority of Federal officials, together with the necessity of seeking relief in the State courts where directors or officers had been guilty of improvident or dishonest management of corporate financial affairs. A correct copy of the article as given to the press follows, and a perusal of it will show that nothing therein supports the language used in describing the character of statement from the Attorney General's office which you claimed to have in your desk:

"STATEMENT FOR THE PRESS.

"JANUARY 7, 1914.

"The Department of Justice is constantly receiving letters inquiring why it does not direct the prosecution of officers and directors who have been responsible for the financial irregularities in the management of railroads, as disclosed from time to time.

"These inquiries proceed from a mistaken but very common view of the powers of the Department of Justice. There is no law under which it can prosecute the officers, directors, or other agents of a railroad company for improvident or dishonest management of the financial affairs of that company, since Congress has not undertaken to regulate the issuance of securities by corporations created by the States, or the conduct or fiduciary relations of their officers, but has left those matters to the States, respectively."

The concluding portion of your letter contains the somewhat surprising suggestion that I may desire to correct what I gave out for publication in January. That needs neither correction nor explanation; it is plain and in all respects correct.

The thing which does need correction is your quoted language uttered on the floor of the Senate, and such correction should have proper publicity. To that end I submit that it should give you pleasure to seek early opportunity to put both your letter and this reply into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Faithfully, yours, J. C. MCREYNOLDS,
Attorney General.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have neither the desire nor the intention at this time to discuss at any length this apparent controversy. I may at some future time go into it in more detail; but it seemed to me that the Attorney General's request that his letter and the one that brought it forth be published in the RECORD was only fair; and I was glad of the opportunity to follow out that expressed desire of the Attorney General and to have the letter read into the RECORD.

It is only fair to me also to say that after reading the Attorney General's letter I feel that I was fully justified in the statement I made on the floor of the Senate, to which he particularly objects, and which seems to have given some offense. As to whether or not I was justified is a question of fact that can be determined now, since the quotations and the source and authority for the remarks are all placed in the RECORD and made public.

I said I had a statement from the Attorney General's office, and in my letter to the Attorney General I set forth that statement and said that if the statement was wrong or if it in any way misrepresented the Attorney General I should be glad to make a correction on the floor of the Senate. It will be noted, of course, that I took that statement from the daily press, and it was the only thing connected with the remarks I made that I could see might result in any injury, and then only if the statement were not correct. The Attorney General, in his reply, seems to get an entirely different idea from that portion of my letter, and he rather sarcastically, I think, says that my letter contains the startling statement that he may want to change a statement that he had given out for publication. Of course I had no such idea; but I realized that there might be a possibility of the statement as published and as I read it, and as I used it as a basis for my remarks, being incorrect. That was what I wanted to correct, if it needed correction. There was nothing wrong, however, in the statement, because the Attorney General in his letter again copies the statement; and, with the exception of one or two unimportant words, the statement in his letter is exactly the same statement as the one which is copied in mine and which was the basis of my remarks.

As I have said, I believe a fair reading of this statement issued by the Attorney General, and which is copied in his own letter, will convince any ordinary fair-minded individual that I was completely and entirely justified in drawing the conclusion which I did draw; but whether I was or was not, anyone reading the statement of the Attorney General and the statement made by me can judge for himself.

The Attorney General in his letter refers to the fact that Mr. Mellen had already been indicted because of connection with the New Haven affair. Of course, Mr. Mellen was indicted; he was indicted before this administration came into power; but, so far as I have been able to learn, neither the preceding administration nor this administration has made any effort whatever to bring Mr. Mellen to trial.

If what I said is offensive to the Attorney General—in other words, if he did intend to prosecute somebody; if he did think that a Federal statute had been violated, and therefore it was his duty to prosecute somebody—the best answer that he can make to the statement which I made is to bring forth the prosecution. For one, I should be glad, if there has been a violation of law, for that to be done. If there has not been, then my remarks, based on his published statement, were right. If, on the other hand, there has been a violation of law, the Attorney General will be able to answer me and his other critics by prosecuting the guilty parties who have violated the law. He has had nearly a year and a half, and has so far made no attempt in that direction.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, before the pending trade commission bill is laid aside I feel that I ought to put into the RECORD a few legal authorities to offset those which were put into the RECORD yesterday.

My attention was sharply arrested by the very sincere, eloquent, and forceful argument of the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and it is probably fair to say that his argument puts that side of the question as strongly as it can be put, and that the authority he cited is as strong an authority as exists on that side.

The case which was cited by the distinguished Senator is the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. McChord (103 Fed. Rep., p. 216). That case is not a decision of the United States Supreme Court; it is not even a decision by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals or even by a circuit court; it is a decision by a district judge of the United States court—Judge Evans. Moreover, the case is not in point, because the railroad commission of Kentucky in that case had the sole decision under the statute. There was no appeal from it to any court.

This question of delegating legislative authority to an official or to a commission has been decided many times by the United States Supreme Court in the last few years, and I wish to put in the RECORD for the use of Senators the cases that have been so decided.

In the following cases the court sustained laws granting power to an executive officer or to a commission on the ground that the power conferred was administrative and did not involve a delegation of legislative powers in violation of the Constitution:

Field v. Clark (143 U. S., 649; Feb. 29, 1892), In re Kollock (165 U. S., 526; Mar. 1, 1897), Buttfield v. Stranahan (192 U. S., 470; Feb. 23, 1904), Union Bridge Co. v. United States (204 U. S., 364; Feb. 25, 1907), St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railway v. Taylor (210 U. S., 281, 287; May 18, 1907), Monongahela Bridge Co. v. United States (216 U. S., 177; Feb. 21, 1910), United States v. Grimaud (220 U. S., 506; May 3, 1911), Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co. (224 U. S., 194; Apr. 1, 1912), and Kansas City Southern Railway Co. v. United States (231 U. S., 423; Dec. 1, 1913).

The case of Buttfield v. Stranahan (192 U. S., 470), decided February 23, 1904, arose under an act of Congress. By section 1 of that act it was made unlawful "to import or bring into the United States any merchandise as tea which is inferior in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the standards provided in section 3 of this act, and the importation of all such merchandise is hereby prohibited." Section 2 provides for appointment by the Secretary of the Treasury of a board of tea experts "who shall prepare and submit to him standard samples of tea." Section 3 provides that the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of said board, "shall fix and establish uniform standards of purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of all kinds of teas imported into the United States," and that all teas inferior to such standards shall be deemed to be within the prohibition of the first section hereof.

> The claim that the statute commits to the arbitrary discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury the determination of what teas may be imported, and therefore in effect vests that official with legislative power, is without merit. We are of opinion that the statute, when properly construed, as said by the circuit court of appeals, but expresses the purpose to exclude the lowest grades of tea, whether demonstrably of inferior purity, or unfit for consumption, or presumably so because of their inferior quality. This, in effect, was the fixing of a primary standard, and devolved upon the Secretary of the Treasury the mere executive duty to effectuate the legislative policy declared in the statute.
> * * * Congress legislated on the subject as far as was reasonably practicable, and from the necessities of the case was compelled to leave to executive officials the duty of bringing about the result pointed out by the statute.

Accord: Field v. Clark (143 U. S., 649; Feb. 29, 1892), St. Louis & Iron Mountain Railway v. Taylor (210 U. S., 281, 287; May 18, 1907).

Here we have a statute of the United States delegating to the Secretary of the Treasury the authority and power of fixing the standard of tea that should be imported, and the Supreme Court of the United States upheld that delegation as being not a delegation of legislative authority, but the imposition of administrative authority in detail.

The next case to which I wish to refer is Union Bridge Co. v. United States (204 U. S., 364), decided February 25, 1907.

Section 18 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, provides that whenever the Secretary of War shall have reason to believe that any bridge over any navigable waterway of the United States is an unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of such waters it shall be his duty, after hearing, to order alteration of the bridge so as to render navigation unobstructed, specifying changes to be made, and prescribing reasonable time in which to make them. Willful failure to obey the order is made criminal misdemeanor.

This statute does not delegate legislative power. Mr. Justice Harlan, in delivering the opinion (p. 385), said:

> It would seem too clear to admit of serious doubt that the statute under which the Secretary of War proceeded is in entire harmony with the principles announced in former cases. In no substantial, just sense does it confer upon that officer as the head of an executive department powers strictly legislative or judicial in their nature, or which must be exclusively exercised by Congress or by the courts. * * * As appropriate to the object to be accomplished, as a means to an end within the power of the National Government, Congress, in execution of a declared policy, committed to the Secretary of War the duty of ascertaining all the facts essential in any inquiry whether particular bridges over the waterways of the United States were unreasonable obstructions to free navigation.

Congress could have determined the fact itself, but this was impracticable, because Congress has so much else to do.

The court further said:

> By the statute in question Congress declared in effect that navigation should be freed from unreasonable obstructions arising from the bridges of insufficient height, width of span, or other defects. It stopped, however, with this declaration of a general rule and imposed upon the Secretary of War the duty of ascertaining what particular cases came within the rule prescribed by Congress, as well as the duty of enforcing the rule in such cases. In performing that duty the Secretary of War will only execute the clearly expressed will of Congress, and will not in any true sense exert legislative or judicial power.

Accord: Monongahela Bridge v. United States (216 U. S., 177), February 21, 1910.

The next case I wish particularly to call to the attention of the Senate. It is a criminal case, the United States against Grimaud (220 U. S., 506), decided May 3, 1911.

The acts relating to forest reservations show that they were intended "to improve and protect the forest and to secure favorable conditions of waterflows." It was declared that the acts should not be "construed to prohibit the egress and ingress of actual settlers" residing therein nor "to prohibit any person from entering the reservation for all proper and lawful purposes * * * provided that such persons comply with the rules and regulations covering such forest reservation." It was also declared that the Secretary of Agriculture "may make such rules and regulations and establish such service as will insure the objects of such reservation, namely, to regulate their occupancy and use and to preserve the forests thereon from destruction; and any violations of the provisions of this act or such rules and regulations shall be punished," as provided in section 5388, chapter 3, page 1044, Revised Statutes, as amended.

This case arose on indictment for grazing sheep on reservation without having obtained permission required by the regulations adopted by the Secretary of Agriculture. It should be here noted that the authority was given not to declare what one act should be unlawful, but to establish a general set of regulations which should control. Demurrer was sustained and Government sued out writ of error to Supreme Court. Defendants in error argued, first, that the law was unconstitutional, because it did not sufficiently define or define at all what acts done or omitted to be done, within the supposed purview of the said act, should constitute an offense or offenses against the United States. Second, that the law was unconstitutional, as it was not within the power of Congress to delegate to the Secretary of Agriculture authority or power to determine what acts shall be criminal, and the act in question was a delegation of legislative power to an executive officer to define and establish what shall constitute the essential elements of a crime against the United States.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court below. In the opinion by Mr. Justice Lamar, page 585, it is said:

> Under these acts, therefore, any use of the reservation for grazing or other lawful purpose was required to be subject to the rules and regulations established by the Secretary of Agriculture. To pasture sheep and cattle on the reservation at will and without restraint might interfere seriously with the accomplishment of the purposes for which they were established. But a limited and regulated use for pasturage might not be inconsistent with the object sought to be attained by the statute. The determination of such questions, however, was a matter of administrative detail. What might be harmless in one forest might be harmful to another. What might be injurious at one stage of timber growth or at one season of the year might not be so at another.
> In the nature of things it was impracticable for Congress to provide general regulations for these various and varying details of management. Each reservation had its peculiar and special features; and in authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to meet these local conditions Congress was merely conferring administrative functions upon an agent, and not delegating to him legislative power.

Quoting again from page 517:

> From the beginning of the Government various acts have been passed conferring upon executive officers power to make rules and regulations, not for the government of their departments, but for administering the laws which did govern. None of these statutes could confer legislative power. But when Congress had legislated and indicated its will it could give to those who were to act under such general provisions "power to fill up the details" by the establishment of administrative rules and regulations, the violation of which could be punished by fine or imprisonment fixed by Congress, or by penalties fixed by Congress or measured by the injury done.
> Thus it is unlawful to charge unreasonable rates as to discriminate between shippers, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has been given authority to make reasonable rates and to administer the law against discrimination. (Int. Com. Comm. v. Ill. Cent. R. R., 215 U. S., 452; Int. Com. Comm. v. Chi. R. I., etc., R. R., 218 U. S., 88.) Congress provided that after a given date only cars with drawbars of uniform height should be used in interstate commerce, and then constitutionally left to the commission the administrative duty of fixing a uniform standard. (St. Louis & Iron Mountain R. R. v. Taylor, 210 U. S., 281, 287; Union Bridge Co. v. U. S., 204 U. S., 364; In re Kollock, 165 U. S., 526; Buttfield v. Stranahan, 192 U. S., 470.) It appeared from the statutes involved that Congress had either expressly or by necessary implication made it unlawful, if not criminal, to obstruct navigable streams; to sell unbranded oleomargarine; or to import unwholesome teas. With this unlawfulness as a predicate the executive officers were authorized to make rules and regulations appropriate to the several matters covered by the various acts. A violation of these rules was then made an offense punishable as prescribed by Congress. But in making these regulations the officers did not legislate. They did not go outside of the circle of that which the act itself had affirmatively required to be done, or treated as unlawful if done. But confining themselves within the field covered by the statute they could adopt regulations of the nature they had thus been generally authorized to make, in order to administer the law and carry the statute into effect.

There is only one other case to which I wish to refer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOLLIS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator has been quoting from a case in Two hundred and twentieth United States, and I understood from what he said about it that he regarded it as perhaps the strongest case in support of this provision in the bill. He asked the Senate to give particular attention to it. Does the Senator think that that case is authority for the proposition that Congress may delegate to an officer the power to declare that a particular act shall be a crime?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; I so understand; and that is material in this discussion, because this bill also provides for criminal procedure as well as for the issuing of injunctions. I do think it is so done, and mainly this case is authority through the other cases which give the Interstate Commerce Commission the same power.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think that under that authority Congress could vest the Postmaster General with the power to declare what acts should constitute offenses against the operations of the Post Office Department?

Mr. HOLLIS. I believe that would be entirely constitutional. Whether it would be good policy or not is an entirely different question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me call the Senator's attention to what I conceive to be the difference between the case the Senator is referring to and what the Senator now thinks it is authority for. I understand the general rule to be that no legislative body has the power to invest an administrative officer with the power to make law. Now, while I think the case in Two hundred and twentieth United States goes to the very verge, if it does not go beyond it, still we were there dealing with property of the Government; we were dealing with the public lands; and we were simply giving the Secretary of the Interior power to make regulations for the use of the public lands by the citizens. We could have forbidden the use altogether; and having the right to forbid the use altogether, we could condition the use as we pleased; and we did condition it by requiring compliance with the regulations of the Secretary of the Interior.

That was not conferring upon the Secretary of the Interior the power to make a criminal law. Congress had made the law. Congress had said that a violation of the regulations should constitute an offense. So the making of the regulations was not the making of a law; it was simply furnishing the opportunity for the coming into operation of the congressional law. It would be the same as if we said, in the case of the Post Office Department, that the Postmaster General may prescribe certain forms for making returns or that certain books shall be kept, and that any person who makes false returns or false entries in the books shall be guilty of an infraction of the law. That would simply furnish the occasion for a violation of the law, but would not be the law itself.

I invite the Senator's attention to that view of the matter.

Mr. HOLLIS. I am very glad to have the Senator's view. He is not discussing the present bill, however. He says that the forest reservation bill and the book accounting bill, in the case of a railroad, go as far as should be gone in that direction. He may well say that and yet be for the trade commission bill, because here the commission is not given authority to legislate or to make rules, but is merely given directions to proceed for punishment of cases of violation of the law which Congress makes when it prohibits unfair competition. It is just like the laws for the punishment of the crime of false pretenses. Those statutes do not undertake to define false pretenses, but they say if a man is guilty of false pretenses he shall be punished in a certain way; if he is guilty of larceny he shall be punished in a certain way. It is left to the common law, which is not more than the common sense of the courts, to say what is a violation, and then, of course, Congress or the other legislative body provides for the violation and provides a punishment; and that is what is done in the trade commission bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire further yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HOLLIS. With pleasure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This law inhibits unfair competition. It declares that unfair competition is unlawful, and vests the proposed commission with power to prohibit it.

Mr. HOLLIS. I beg pardon. The law prohibits it, but it gives the commission certain duties to perform in connection with the enforcement of the law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill expressly says that the trade commission shall prohibit these practices, as I understand.

Mr. HOLLIS. No; that the trade commission shall enforce the law. They are given no authority to prohibit. They are merely given authority to make an order, but that order can not be enforced without recourse to the courts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Very well. The question I want to ask the Senator is this: Where would the trade commission go to ascertain what particular acts were included in the expression "unfair competition"? Would they go to the decisions of the courts?

Mr. HOLLIS. They would go wherever any lawyer has to go who wants a precedent in a case he is prosecuting. I myself had this experience: I had to prosecute a suit for damages against a corporation for interfering with trade relations. I went to the old English common-law decisions, and found ample authority for collecting damages for that sort of interference with trade relations. Our court, the United States circuit court of appeals, had no difficulty in following the English authorities. Unfair competition, as was so ably stated yesterday by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], has been already defined in a great many cases, and they will have no lack of authorities to determine what they think is unfair competition. That, however, does not settle it. Under this bill, when they have determined, either on their own motion or on an application by some one else, that a certain practice is unfair competition, they can merely express their idea, their judgment, in the form of an order; and then, if that order is not obeyed—and it would not be obeyed, of course, unless those against whom it was issued thought it was good law—they would have to apply to the court, and the court under this bill as it is written, as I understand, would take up the matter de novo, just like any equity appeal, and would determine whether there was unfair competition on the law and on the facts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Arkansas, as I remember, read a list of cases in which it had been held that there was unfair competition.

Mr. HOLLIS. It had been held that under certain circumstances there was unfair competition, and, so far as those cases go, they will form the yardstick or the measure that will indicate what is to be done in the future in cases like those.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is that list of cases, or the list of cases which would be found by diligent reading of all the legal authorities and law books, exclusive?

Mr. HOLLIS. I hardly think it would be. As we practice law in my part of the country, dictionaries or any authorities that the court considers respectable are referred to. The common law is not confined to any one set of decisions or those of any particular grade. It is found everywhere, and it has as much weight as the reasoning displayed in the opinion entitles it to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. After exhausting the list of things which the courts have held to be unfair competition, then what standard would be appealed to?

Mr. HOLLIS. The very first case that went from this commission to the court would give a precedent; and there would probably be in a few years a body of advancing, progressing decisions on this question that would be a continually growing and improving guide of conduct, just like the decisions of every court in the country on the question of negligence in tort cases.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But whenever a case arose where practices were thought by somebody to be unfair competition which had not been theretofore held by any court to be unfair competition the trade commission would have to break new ground?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes; they would.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, the question I want to submit to the Senator is, What standard would they refer to? Would it be their own personal judgment as to whether it was unfair?

Mr. HOLLIS. There could not be a case imagined or that could come up where they would not get some light from the cases that are already in the books. Such a case could not be imagined; and it would be very easy, as the courts do now, to reason from the precedents to the present case. They would find plenty of light to guide them; and instead of not finding much they would probably find so much that they would be at greater loss to decide between the different views than they would to find some light that would help them.

That is the merit of this law. That is where it is better to have it somewhat flexible and not undertake by definition to pin it down to certain practices, because whenever that is undertaken you have to find out what those words mean; you are likely to have words injected that were not put there by Congress, and it seems to be the better opinion that this is the way to do it.

Before I answer any further questions I should like to finish the authorities. I have only two more cases upon this subject, and then I should like to discuss the bill for a moment.

The next case to which I wish to draw attention is Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co. (224 U. S., 194). That is one of the book-account cases to which the Senator has referred. One of the questions in the case was whether the power conferred upon the commission, in its discretion, to prescribe a period of time within which common carriers should have a uniform system of accounts and the manner in which such accounts should be kept was void by reason of its being an unlawful delegation of legislative power.

Counsel for appellees argued as follows:

Section 20 of the act to regulate commerce is void because it is an unlawful delegation of legislative power. The law gives the commission discretion to determine whether it will legislate or not. The law also confers discretionary power upon the commission to determine what, if any, the legislation shall be.

Mr. Justice Day, in the opinion, said, at page 214:

We can not agree to this contention. The Congress may not delegate its purely legislative power to a commission, but, having laid down the general rules of action under which a commission shall proceed, it may require of that commission the application of such rules to particular situations and the investigation of facts, with a view to making orders in a particular matter within the rules laid down by the Congress. This rule has been frequently stated and illustrated in recent cases in this court and needs no amplification here. Buttfield v. Stranahan (192 U. S., 470); Union Bridge Co. v. United States (204 U. S., 384); United States v. Grimaud (220 U. S., 506).

That is what is proposed in the present bill as I read it. It is to give this commission power to make orders in a particular case within the rule that is laid down by Congress, to wit, that unfair competition is prohibited.

The last case is Kansas City Southern Railway v. United States (231 U. S., 423). The case of Interstate Commerce Commission against Goodrich Transit Co., just mentioned, was affirmed as to the constitutionality of the provision of section 20 of the act to regulate commerce giving the commission power to prescribe the form of accounts, and so forth.

In this case the question is sharply raised that was so eloquently discussed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] yesterday. Here was a case where property was actually taken away from some of the parties interested. The question was whether certain old and discarded property should be charged to property account or to income account. If charged to income account, the preferred stockholders lost their dividends, or a large part of them. If charged to property account, they did not. The preferred dividends were noncumulative in this case; so if the decision were against the preferred stockholders, they would have no opportunity ever to get them back. The court, in spite of that, held that this rule laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission under the authority of Congress was not a legislative act, but an administrative act. The opinion, by Mr. Justice Pitney, on page 443, says:

There is here no unconstitutional delegation of legislative powers. The reasoning adopted in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Goodrich Transit Co. (224 U. S., 194, 210, etc.) is controlling. And since, as just shown, uniformity in accounting is dependent upon the adoption and enforcement of precise classification, the authority to define the terms of the classification necessarily follows. It amounts, after all, to no more than laying down the general rules of action under which the commission shall proceed and leaving it to the commission to apply those rules to particular situations and circumstances by the establishment and enforcement of administrative regulations.

The bill under discussion provides as follows, on page 21 of the committee print, at the end of section 5:

Whenever the commission, after the issuance of such order, shall find that such corporation has not complied therewith, the commission may petition the district court of the United States, within any district where the method in question was used or where such corporation is located or carries on business, praying the court to issue an injunction to enforce such order of the commission; and the court is hereby authorized to issue such injunction.

There is nothing said in this law which makes the finding of the interstate trade commission even a prima facie rule of conduct. There is nothing here except what is shown to any court when a judgment is asked for. The parties must come in, prove their case, cite the proper law, and get their injunction, if they can bring it within the rules of law, upon the facts.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HOLLIS. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. I hardly see how the Senator from New Hampshire reaches the conclusion he has just stated, namely, that this does not differ from the ordinary case where the party plaintiff or the complainant must appear and make his showing in order to obtain an injunction. Does the trade commission, under this statute, have to make any other showing before the court than that it has made an order? And is it not the duty of the court under this statute, upon such showing, to enjoin obedience to that order?

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, that is an important question to discuss, because we can make it either way that seems best to us. My mind is open on the subject. My mind is open as to whether the order issued by the interstate trade commission ought to have any force whatever except giving it authority to apply to the court. If it shall seem best to the Senate—and, as I say, I am not committed on the subject—that that case, when it reaches the courts, shall be tried de novo, just like any other equity appeal, we can make it so, and I am not sure that that will not be right; or if it seems best to the Senate that the order made by the commission should have prima facie weight, so that the burden of proof is shifted to the defendant, we can make it that way; or if, as some extremists want it, it should be made absolutely binding unless the court should think there is bad faith or that the commission has not used its honest judgment, we can make it that way.

I am not prepared to say at this time which of the three ways I think is best; but I do think that as the statute now reads the order of the commission would not have even prima facie weight, and the case would be tried from the first.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HOLLIS. I do.

Mr. THOMPSON. As I understand the question of the Senator from South Dakota, the Senator from New Hampshire has not exactly answered it. I think, from the statement he made, he regarded it as mandatory for the court to issue the order. Under this bill, as I read it, I do not regard it as mandatory; but I think, as a matter of fact and as a matter of law, before an order is issued the court will look into the merits of the transaction.

Mr. HOLLIS. I so understand it; but if it is not so, and the Senate wants it so, we can find language that will express that idea, no doubt.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I really think that is the reasonable construction of the language used; that if it meant at all that the court should hear and determine the matter on its merits on the petition presented by the commission, it would have said so in few or more words, as the case may be; but surely it would have been the natural thing to have given the court that power.

Mr. HOLLIS. Of course we do not know what was in the mind of the draftsman, and if we did, it would not be material; but it is the duty of the Senate to make its ideas clear when it decides what it wants in a bill.

I wish to call attention to just one more point, and then I am through.

It has been questioned here whether this designation of unfair competition lays down a rule that is sufficiently precise for legislation of this sort. I desire to call attention to the interstate-commerce act, as amended June 29, 1906, and June 18, 1910. In that provision the Interstate Commerce Commission is given the discretion and authority to determine whether acts are—unjust or unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory, or undnly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this act.

And further, they are authorized and empowered—to determine and prescribe what will be the just and reasonable individual or joint rate or rates, charge or charges—

And, further—

what individual or joint classification, regulation, or practice is just, fair, and reasonable.

That is the very same thing that this bill undertakes to give to the trade commission—the authority to decide what classification, regulation, or practice is just, fair, and reasonable; whether it is a fair practice. If the Interstate Commerce Commission can be given that authority under the Constitution—and it is not doubted; wherever the courts have passed upon it they have upheld it—then certainly it is our province to say that the trade commission may determine what is fair competition.

I can not see any difference between laying down the rule that an unfair practice shall be prohibited and that an unfair competition shall be prohibited.

I wanted to get these matters in the RECORD at the outset, so that they might follow after the very able argument of the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. NEWLANDS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones	Page	Smoot
Borah	Kern	Perkins	Stone
Brady	Lane	Pomerene	Thomas
Bryan	Lea, Tenn	Ransdell	Thompson
Camden	Lewis	Reed	Thornton
Catron	Lippitt	Saulsbury	Tillman
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Weeks
Clarke, Ark.	Newlands	Sherman	West
Fletcher	Norris	Shively	White
Hollis	Oliver	Smith, Md.
Hughes	Overman	Smith, Mich.

Mr. WHITE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on official business.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. SUTHERLAND answered to their names when called.

Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. JAMES, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. NELSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is confined to his house by illness.

Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. CHILTON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is necessarily absent from the Senate. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a minute that I may submit a conference report?

Mr. BORAH. I yield for that purpose.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 28, 29, and 33.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of Senate amendment insert "$3,475,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71, and the Senate agree to the same.

B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
GEORGE C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BRYAN. Before the conference report is agreed to I desire to submit some remarks upon it. It will not take me more than 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRYAN. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina, now that he has presented the report, to let it go over, and we will proceed with the unfinished business for the day. Before the Senate acts on the report I should like to be allowed to say something upon it, if that course is agreeable to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no objection to that. I should be glad to have the Senator from Florida make any speech he wants. I want to get the matter off my hands and to get the naval appropriation bill through. This report completes it. The House has already adopted the report, and if it is adopted by the Senate it will be ended then and become a law as soon as the President signs it.

Mr. BRYAN. I understand that, but I understand also that we have a right to discuss the report.

Mr. TILLMAN. I would be glad to have the Senator discuss it.

Mr. THOMAS. I was under the impression that I had the floor when the absence of a quorum was suggested. If I am wrong about it——

Mr. BORAH. I yield the floor to the Senator from Colorado if there is any question about it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have sought recognition half a dozen times to inquire of the Senator from South Carolina, who presents the conference report, whether or not the item for a breakwater at Key West is retained by the conferees.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; it went out in the conference. The House voted overwhelmingly against it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then I also should like to be heard before the report is agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I inquire what was done with the conference report on the naval appropriation bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. TILLMAN. It will lie on the table subject to call by the two Senators from Florida, who want to make some remarks on it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Thank you.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is not my intention at this time to go into a lengthy discussion of the pending measure. I should like, however, to suggest two or three improvements in the bill, together with some doubts which I entertain as to the validity of section 5, leaving their discussion to some time in the future when I shall have had an opportunity to investigate the matter further.

Personally I am opposed to the creation of any more commissions for any purpose if their creation can be avoided. We are rapidly becoming a government by commission or by bureau, or by both, and the tendency seems to be to increase instead of diminish them. In the West bureaucracy has become so common that it has ceased to be remarked upon. It is extremely difficult for a man in one of the public-domain States of the Union to go down the streets of a town of ordinary size without encountering from half a dozen to a dozen representatives of commissions or bureaus charged with the duty of administering some so-called or supposed executive function.

The purpose of this bill, among other things, is to create a commission the discharge of whose duties will require the employment of an army of subordinates. It is impossible at this time to forecast the extent either of their number or their duties, but there is no doubt that they will cover the surface of the entire country in the discharge of the broad functions and powers that are here proposed to be bestowed upon them.

I can readily imagine that out of 350,000 corporations, to which the report of the chairman refers, fully one-half will come under the purview of this statute. If they are to be examined, if they are to be required to file reports, if the various and constantly increasing number of complaints against these corporations by their competitors are to be docketed and investigated, it certainly means the employment, through the agency of this bureau, of thousands upon thousands of employees, possessed very largely of inquisitorial powers—and I use the word advisedly—inquiring into, making examinations of, and interfering with the ordinary as well as the extraordinary course of business. The expense consequent upon this newly appointed body of employees, apart from other considerations, is going to be very large indeed. If the bill, in so far as the objects and duties of the commission are concerned, could be made more definite, we could perhaps forecast with some degree of intelligence the expense of administration.

I quite agree that unfair competition is not safely susceptible of specific definition any more than is the subject of fraud. An old chancellor once said that it would never do to define fraud lest some rogue at once defraud the definition. We all know what fraud is when we are confronted with it; we probably know what unfair competition is when we are confronted with it; but there must be in each specific instance, whether the charge be of fraud or unfair competition, an examination of the facts and then the application of a general law to it. This means that unfair competition under this law must be determined by the facts of each individual case, which may or may not become a precedent for other cases either differing from or in many respects analogous to it.

As a consequence these general powers, these general duties, can only be performed by the exercise of what, for want of a better term, I am obliged to call a judicial power. It may not be so strictly speaking, but it certainly is a power which must investigate before deciding, and which should not decide until there shall be an investigation. In that respect it bears every analogy to a judicial power.

Therefore, apart from the question of the authority of Congress to create and endow a commission with this enormous authority, I question very much whether it would be wise to do so unless it is absolutely necessary, and we should be very cautious in determining that it is absolutely necessary, when we come to consider the consequences and the far-reaching results of the exercise of this authority upon the business and economic interests of the country.

The first sentence, therefore, of section 5 strikes me as being inexpedient if not beyond the powers of Congress to enact, and that is one of the matters to which I want to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee while I am on my feet. A part of this section, that which permits an appeal to the judicial power of the United States, invests the courts merely with authority to issue a mandatory injunction upon the request of the commission, if its order shall be disregarded by the corporation against which it may be aimed. Let us see:

> Whenever the commission, after the issuance of such order, shall find that such corporation has not complied therewith, the commission may petition the district court of the United States, within any district where the method in question was used or where such corporation is located or carries on business, praying the court to issue an injunction to enforce such order of the commission.

Now, that is the extent to which the commission can appeal to the courts. It may ask the courts to enforce an order which has been disobeyed, and that is the measure as well as the limit of the relief which the court can grant.

This section goes on to say:

> And the court is hereby authorized to issue such injunction.

The power to issue may, and doubtless does, include the power to review, but what authority have the courts of the United States, under the sentence which I have just read, to inquire into the merits of the controversy? The court must be guided by the facts set forth in the petition, and inasmuch as the power to determine whether the unfair condition exists or not is the same power which petitions the court, my construction of that clause is that it does not confer upon the judiciary any authority whatever except to grant the injunction according to the prayer of the complainant. The competition is unfair, because the commission has said so. Being unfair, its order must be obeyed, and, as a consequence, to enforce obedience the court must grant the right of injunction.

Now, that is not the good, old Anglo-Saxon method of administering justice, which recognizes the right of every person, however guilty, to have his day in court. It may be that the condition of business is such that it is absolutely necessary to invest a commission with power to make a decree which is not only final but not subject to appeal, and to grant the courts the power only to see that it is enforced. I do not believe the business conditions in this country, bad as they are and as I know them to be, have reached such a point as to justify legislation of that kind.

I invite the attention of the committee to this subject, and I hope they will consider it very carefully before a vote is finally taken upon the bill.

Now, subdivisions b and c——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Before the Senator from Colorado leaves that point let me ask him if the service remitted to the court is judicial service at all? Is it not a purely ministerial duty, carrying out the orders of the commission?

Mr. THOMAS. I am obliged for the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, because it is most pertinent, and it seems to me also to be unanswerable. The section confers a ministerial duty upon the courts, and, of course, one which involves practically no discretion.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me suggest that this power is exactly the power exercised by the courts through the interstate-commerce act with reference to the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission compelling carriers to desist from certain practices.

Mr. THOMAS. But in those cases there is expressly given to the parties who are affected by the order a right to resort to the courts.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No greater opportunity than is given by this act.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope that may be the construction placed upon it; but it is impossible for me to place it upon the language of the bill, which merely authorizes the commission to file a petition, but not the party against which the order of the commission is directed. It merely authorizes the commission to appeal to the courts, and then only for the purpose of enforcing the order which has been disobeyed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I ask the Senator from Colorado whether this even requires that the court shall find that the order of the commission has been violated? It provides that when the commission——

Mr. THOMAS. I have just stated, if the Senator will pardon me, that inasmuch as under the law the finding of the commission seems to be conclusive, the statement of the fact in the petition would bind the court.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I did not hear the Senator state that, but I was about to suggest that the language is that whenever the commission after the issuance of such an order shall find that such corporation has not complied therewith, it shall file its petition, and the court is authorized to issue the injunction apparently upon the finding of the commission.

Mr. THOMAS. The courts either should be endowed with power of review or they should not. If they are endowed with the power of review at all it ought to be mutual, and if it is mutual it, of course, must involve the authority on the part of the court to make its investigation and reach a conclusion. If this clause does this of course it answers the objection completely, but it seems to me it does not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the court has no judicial discretion to exercise—and it would seem from this language that it has not—is it entirely a useless formality for the court to issue an injunction? Why not rest upon the order of the commission?

Mr. THOMAS. I would not be prepared to say that it would be a useless formality, because I imagine if the court issues its mandatory writ, obedience necessarily follows, or, rather, disobedience of it necessarily brings pains and penalties for contempt of the order. In that respect it might be very effective and very necessary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But is it the exercise of judicial power or of the judicial function for a court to issue an injunction without a hearing and a determination?

Mr. THOMAS. The criticism which the Senator makes is my criticism also. The question which he asks and which I attempted to answer went to the operation and effect of the bill. I think, irrespective of the fact that the writ may be the result of a mandatory statute, it nevertheless would carry with it the necessity of obedience or the consequences which result from a disobedience of the decree.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me suggest to the Senator that the court would exercise the judicial function of determining, first, whether the commission was authorized by law to make the order in question, and, second, whether the order in question violated any constitutional right.

Mr. THOMAS. If the court did so it would do it in spite of and not because of this statute.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is just so with reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission. We know that under the interstate-commerce act orders are made enjoining the collection of unreasonable rates and enjoining the continuance of unjust discrimination. Those orders go to the courts. The courts have held within the limit of their jurisdiction that those orders are regulations of commerce by an instrumentality of Congress, and simply inquire into the question whether the order itself is violative of any constitutional right; on the other hand, whether the statute itself authorized the commission to act.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator say that the language used in section 5, which I have just criticized, is taken from or is a copy of the language of the interstate-commerce act?

Mr. NEWLANDS. My understanding is that it parallels the language of that act. I will proceed, however, to examine it.

Mr. THOMAS. I will pass from that for the present, because I said at the outset that I do not intend to enter into any very lengthy discussion of these suggested objections at the present time.

I was about to refer to subdivisions b and c of section 3 and to suggest that in my judgment subdivision b accomplishes all that could be accomplished by the enforcement of subdivision c, which according to the statements made here yesterday indicates that the enactment of subdivision c into a law will impose an enormous and needless burden of expense upon the corporations subject to its provisions.

The reports which are required are of course thought to be necessary to carry out the purposes of the act—that is to say, to give to the commission information which may be needed to make the act effective—but the commission may, under subdivision b, require any corporation at any time to furnish it any information that it sees fit to ask for, the extent of its request being limited only by its own discretion. Therefore, inasmuch as the ultimate expense of the administration of this law, like the administration of all other acts, bears ultimately upon the consumer, why should we impose a burden the object of which can be provided for just as well? It may be that some purpose is to be subserved by subdivision c of which I know nothing, but I am unable at present to determine why the previous provision of the same section is not ample for every purpose of the commission.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In regard to the suggestions which the Senator now makes, I wish to say that my understanding of the reason for subdivision c is that it may determine upon what reports it may require. It is not supposed that it will require reports from all corporations at any given time, but only from such classes of corporations as in its discretion or in its opinion may need investigation. It would require reports of a general character from certain classes of corporations, and from that information so derived it might conclude to use the power granted by subdivision b in further investigation, being led to such investigation by the information contained in subdivision c. That is the reason for the two subdivisions, I understand.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, as I read this subdivision c it is applicable to all corporations, or may be made applicable to all corporations, which come under the jurisdiction of the commission; and I think it is safe to assume that it will be extended from time to time until it does embrace all interstate-commerce corporations, and possibly those which are indirectly identified with interstate commerce. I do not believe that the benefit sought to be obtained is commensurate with the expense that will be entailed upon these companies through the exercise of that power. However, I am open, I hope, to conviction at any time, both as to suggestions which I have made adverse to the measure and to those which will doubtless be offered by other Senators.

My own notion, Mr. President, about this species of legislation, speaking from the Democratic standpoint and also from the standpoint of my own convictions, is that the action of the Federal Congress should be negative in its character, and that we can accomplish quite as much, if not more, by statutes of a prohibitory character, not needing the intervention of a commission, with its multitude of employees, for their enforcement, as can be accomplished by legislation of this kind. For example, let me assume a statute prohibiting any corporation from engaging in interstate commerce which is a constituent of other companies engaged in the same line of business controlled by a holding company; that no corporation shall be permitted to enter into interstate commerce the capital stock of which is out of all proportion to its actual assets; that no corporation shall be permitted to engage in interstate commerce which is directly or indirectly identified with any transportation company; that no corporation shall be permitted to enter into interstate commerce which through interlocking directorates is indissolubly associated with other corporations engaged in similar business—these and kindred regulations crystallized into a statute of the United States would be ample, in my opinion, to effectuate the purposes of this proposed trade commission; would do away with the enormous expense which must attend the exercise of its functions; prevent unfair competition, divorce the relation which so frequently is found to exist between industrial and transportation companies; do away with holding companies; make interlocking directorates impossible in interstate commerce; and, at the same time, enable the Department of Justice to handle the situation, and to handle it more satisfactorily than is possible in the case of a commission of the kind which is here proposed.

These ideas are not original with me, Mr. President. I first saw them as they appeared in some of the mazagines of the country from the pen of Mr. Robert R. Reed, an eminent attorney of the bar of the State of New York. I understand that he appeared before the Committee on Interstate Commerce in the Sixty-second Congress, and that his views so impressed certain members of that committee, notably the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], that a bill was introduced and was pending before that committee, embodying those views, before the last session of Congress.

Mr. Reed has been here since this Congress has been in session; he has urged his views upon committees of both Houses, as I have been told, and I exceedingly regret that they have not materialized into some proposition that we might consider here before ultimately determining what our course upon this tremendously important subject shall be. So much, Mr. President, for the pending measure.

Before I take my seat, however——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the Senator passes from that subject, will he permit me to call attention to the provisions of the statute to regulate commerce with reference to judicial hearings?

Mr. THOMAS. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so. I have not a copy of it here.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 33 of Senate Document No. 475, Sixty-third Congress, second session, the provision is:

> If any carrier fails or neglects to obey any order of the commission, other than for the payment of money, while the same is in effect, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any party injured thereby, or the United States, by its Attorney General, may apply to the Commerce Court for the enforcement of such order.

Of course that jurisdiction has now devolved upon the district courts.

> If after hearing—

Observe, the provision is "after hearing"—

> that court determines that the order was regularly made and duly served, and that the carrier is in disobedience of the same, the court shall enforce obedience to such order by a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such carrier, its officers, agents, or representatives from further disobedience of such order or to enjoin upon it or them obedience to the same.

That gives the court full jurisdiction to hear and determine the case.

Mr. THOMAS. I felt very sure, Mr. President, that my recollection as to the general character of that law was correct; but, of course, I hardly felt at liberty to express it with over-confidence in view of the statement of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to know what distinction the Senator makes between this power and that?

Mr. THOMAS. There is all the distinction which exists between a statute that confers judicial power upon a court and a statute which simply confers a mandatory power upon a court; in other words, all the distinction between judicial authority and executive authority.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And yet the courts have held, with reference to an order made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, that all the court can do is to inquire as to whether the commission acted under its authority and whether the order invades any constitutional right.

Mr. THOMAS. The court can not even do that here.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not see why it can not do so here.

Mr. THOMAS. Simply because the bill does not permit it to do so.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There is nothing in the statute which permits it.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes; the statute expressly provides for a hearing.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is an elemental principle of law that where a tribunal applies to a court to enforce an order made by it, it must first show its authority to make the order. That is elemental. There is no necessity of a statute for that.

Mr. THOMAS. The proposed statute here, which I am criticizing, determines just how that authority shall be exercised and just how it shall be presented to the court. This commission says to John Smith, "You have engaged in unfair competition." That is its decision. John Smith declines to obey the order. Then the commission goes before the proper United States court and files a petition setting forth the facts—first, that it has decided that the competition is unfair; second, that it has ordered John Smith, the offending corporation, to desist from that practice; and, third, that John Smith has refused or neglected to desist from it, and therefore it asks for a mandatory order or injunction compelling him to do so. That is the whole thing. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] calls my attention to the statute specifically. It provides:

If, after hearing—

And, of course, a hearing means a trial—

that court determines that the order was regularly made and duly served, and that the carrier is in disobedience of the same, the court shall enforce obedience to such order by writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise.

And in the operation of this provision of course hearings have been had, as they must be had, and decisions have followed in the usual course of the administration of justice.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Would the section satisfy the Senator from Colorado if we followed the language of the interstate-commerce act?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I contend that it specifically means the same as that act.

Mr. THOMAS. If the proposed statute follows the interstate-commerce statute, the fact that that statute has been judicially construed would be an immense step in advance, whereas as it stands at present I certainly can not give my sanction to the passage of the pending bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What I contend is that the section under consideration practically means that.

Mr. THOMAS. I have the greatest respect for the Senator's opinion. I wish that I could coincide with him, as I frequently do, but under the circumstances it is impossible for me to reach the same conclusion.

Mr. President, the country was startled yesterday by the suspension of the oldest, if not the greatest, dry-goods house in this country. It was not entirely a surprise, and yet, generally speaking, it was unlooked for. It is quite natural that in a time like this various causes will be assigned for this failure, which may or may not be well founded. Some men are prone to assign causes which accord with their prophecies or with their own desires, while others, from the best of motives, may assign causes which are entirely erroneous. I do not pretend to the possession of any infallible power of correctly discerning the reasons for this unfortunate commercial collapse, but I believe, Mr. President, that I can do so, and that some one in this body should rivet the attention of the country upon conditions which in similar instances have led to similar results, to the end that the character and methods of modern business operation, and not legislation by Congress, be made responsible for its occurrence.

The H. B. Claflin Co. is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, institution of the kind in the country. It reaches back to the early days of the past century, and its career has been a long, an honorable, and a successful one. It was for many years, and, I think, up to the close of the last century, engaged strictly in a wholesale dry-goods business, and, of course, had its customers in every State of the Union. I think that it is safe to say that if its business had been continued along those lines, and it had withstood the temptation of branching out in the effort to control the retail dry-goods business, it would to-day be wealthier than ever, a successful and prosperous institution; but the spirit of American enterprise, as commercially and industrially directed during the past 25 years, has been toward enlargement and expansion, toward control and monopolization. Every known industry has sought through some nucleus established by the financial powers to embrace in its far-reaching arms and agencies all of its branches and ramifications. In that way, Mr. President, legitimate enterprises, extended beyond all reason and far beyond the amount of capital behind them, have collapsed into ruin from their own weight. The H. B. Claflin Co. is the last, and I hope will remain the last, unfortunate illustration of the effect of the commercial law of gravitation upon these huge enterprises.

This company some time ago was "Morganized," and I do not know of a word that has been coined in recent times which more graphically expresses a vicious and entirely indefensible industrial and commercial condition or one which has done more to unsettle the social order of this country—to spread abroad the desire to get rich quick, to create dissatisfaction and disaffection with old and stable and conservative methods of procedure.

Some time ago this particular enterprise attracted the attention of the "Morganizing" authority and power. The result was a gigantic aggregation, foisted upon the investing public, and, of course, it was listed on the New York Stock Exchange. That exchange to-day deals in shares of companies, Mr. President, which represent all the industries of the country, and does so through the "Morganization" of these industries, whereby they have become subject not only to speculative influences, but to speculative and commercial schemes and conspiracies designed to raise and lower the value of their stocks that gamblers may profit or lose at the expense of the industries they represent.

This institution was capitalized at $9,000,000 a number of years ago, and then the United Dry Goods Co. was organized, which was at once put in possession of a controlling interest in the H. B. Claflin Co. The authorized capital of the Claflin Co. is $9,000,000, all issued; that of the United Dry Goods Co., a Delaware corporation, is $25,000,000, of which $17,250,000 has been issued. But not content with two companies, the cupidity of those identified with the enterprise suggested a third, called the Associated Merchants Co., which is also controlled by the United Dry Goods Co. This has a capitalization of $35,000,000, of which $25,240,400 is outstanding, or a total outstanding capitalization of $41,490,400.

The officers and directors of these three companies are almost identical. They are:

H. B. Claflin Co.: President, John Claflin; vice presidents, John C. Eames and Lewis Stewart; secretary, George C. Armstrong; treasurer, Dexter N. Force; assistant secretary, Stewart W. Eames; directors, George E. Armstrong, John Claflin, John C. Eames, Stewart W. Eames, and Dexter N. Force.

Associated Merchants Co.: President, John Claflin; vice president, John C. Eames; treasurer, Lewis Stewart; secretary, Moses Ely; directors, John Claflin, George F. Crane, Howland Davis, Woodbury Langdon, Arthur L. Simpson, John A. Stewart, and Lewis Stewart.

United Dry Goods Co.: President, John Claflin; first vice president and treasurer, Lewis Stewart; second vice president, John E. Eames; secretary, Moses Ely; directors, John Claflin, Thomas F. Bayard, George F. Crane, Howland Davis, Woodbury Langdon, John A. Stewart, and Lewis Stewart.

Here, Mr. President, is a commercial trinity, a three in one and one in three, the aggregate authorized capital of which is nearly $70,000,000. Everyone knows that no such capital as the amount outstanding was actually invested in these various enterprises; that the necessity for the existence of the three concerns was only of a purely speculative character; and that inevitably this violation of the common principles of business integrity would lead sooner or later to disaster. Let us see how this company branched out.

The New York World to-day gives a list of 28 different retail concerns, spreading all over the United States and existing in many of the greatest cities of the country, controlled either by the United or Merchants companies, a great many of which have not only been capitalized beyond all reason but have been bonded as well. The Associated Merchants Co. is not in the dry-goods business at all; it is not in any business, Mr. President, except that of holding the stocks and bonds of its constituent companies. Dividends have been paid by it, by the United Co., and by the Claflin Co. Here is the condition of some of the constituent companies of the Associated Merchants Co.:

Hahne & Co., incorporated in New Jersey, located in Newark, capital $1,800,000, debenture bonds $4,600,000; Powers Mercantile Co., incorporated in New Jersey, located in Minneapolis, capital stock $300,000, debenture bonds $800,000; William Hengerer & Co., incorporated in New York, located in Buffalo, capital stock $765,000, debenture bonds $750,000; Stewart Dry Goods Co., incorporated in Kentucky, located in Louisville, Ky., capital stock $150,000, debenture bonds $650,000, income bonds $500,000.

The Associated Merchants Co., which I have said transacts no business, owns, among other companies, the J. N. Adam & Co., of Buffalo. The Adam Co., of New York, has income bonds of $1,200,000 and debenture bonds of $1,200,000. The total bonded indebtedness of the constituent companies which I have mentioned is $9,700,000. This is only a small proportion of the number of constituent business enterprises controlled in this country by this huge aggregation for whose stock and bond issues it is liable.

Mr. President, I do not care how capable a man may be, how experienced he may be, what administrative powers he may possess, there is a limit to them all. No man on earth is big enough, and never will be big enough, though he may have the capital of a Rockefeller, to control successfully so extensive a part of one of the great primary pursuits of man; and it is fortunate that that is so, because otherwise monopoly would not only be inevitable, but it would eventuate in a single monopoly controlling everything.

This great concern, with its years upon years of successful and honorable business, has expanded until it has collapsed, having insufficient capital to carry on its affairs, saddled with a huge stock and bonded indebtedness of its own and constituent companies, requiring enormous profits for fixed charges, to say nothing of income upon the investment, which is always apparent when the pennies of the poor are sought by those who sell and dispose of stock and bonds, compelled to meet the competition of rival retailers which it should have secured as its wholesale customers, perished because it was no longer fit to live.

There is an editorial, Mr. President, in the New York World of to-day upon this subject which is so apposite that I may be pardoned for reading it into the RECORD, especially as it is very short. It is headed "Morganized dry goods," and is as follows:

That ballooning and pyramiding are as perilous in dry goods as in stocks is proved by the collapse of the H. B. Claflin Co. It is an old and conservative house, whose high character was recently commercialized. Its legitimate business was the wholesaling of dry goods. Having been Morganized and financed and inflated, it became in a large and scattered way a retailer of dry goods and a note broker dealing with thousands of banks.

By the way, Mr. President, I may say that one of these stores in the city in which I reside went into the hands of a receiver yesterday.

The wholesale business of the Claflin Co. did not lead to this catastrophe. The retail business that could receive its proper attention, such as that involved in the great shops of New York and vicinity, has not been the cause of the trouble. The H. B. Claflin Co. goes into the hands of receivers because in its proprietorship of retail stores in 28 cities in all parts of the country its credit was overextended and wise supervision was impossible.

Wholesaling used to be wholesaling. If a customer failed, the wholesaler did not take over his establishment. He closed him out. The Claflin idea of late has been to absorb retailers without much regard to their solvency and to look to the banks for the support necessary to carry on so vast an enterprise, managed slovenly.

It is the inflated paper of these merchants, indorsed in every case by the H. B. Claflin Co., involving, it will be seen, nothing more than self-indorsement, which the banks have now refused to carry. Those who wish to look beyond this for the cause of the failure may do so, but here is explanation enough for bankruptcy.

Of general conditions in the dry-goods trade which has not been Morganized it is sufficient to refer to the prosperity of the affiliated and well-managed Claflin retail stores in New York and to the latest weekly report of Marshall Field & Co., Chicago wholesalers. In the Field circular of June 19 it was said that "shipments show a very considerable gain over the corresponding sale a year ago," and that "it is unusual to find conditions so generally favorable to the dry-goods trade in all sections."

H. B. Claflin will be remembered as a great merchant. His name and his fame were capitalized, and that is all. The sequel is found in the fact that to save the Morganized properties operating upon his reputation not less than $24,000,000 in cash was needed at once, and it was not to be had. It was the value of a name.

The commercial laws of natural expansion were violated until they snapped in twain and the structure toppled to pieces. The great house of Claflin is gone; and, Mr. President, the most pathetic part of such a failure consists of its consequences upon the innocent and the unoffending. It is also serious in that, because of the various constituent companies all over the country, its consequences are generally distributed all over the land, involving not alone its own concerns but houses that are affiliated commercially with them and banks which have extended them credit. All these are more or less apprehensive of the consequences. If this concern, as it should have done and would have done but for the unfortunate modern methods of monopolization to which I have called attention, had confined itself to its legitimate business in the city of New York, and had failed, the consequences would have been merely local and would not have disturbed business conditions throughout the rest of the country.

To my mind, the combinations of the various industrial pursuits of America by the house of Morgan, whether successful or unsuccessful, constitutes and will constitute the commercial crime of the centuries. The house which is responsible for it, unfortunately, seldom feels the consequences of its misconduct.

Mr. President, the principle of consolidation had its origin in the effort to kill competition, an effort which has been made effective by the great financial concerns of the country or through their agency.

I read an editorial from the Saturday Evening Post which made its appearance yesterday, entitled "Big banking alliances":

A big German bank boasts that it is represented on the directorates of more than 200 corporations, while a bigger rival figuratively gathers about half of industrial and commercial Germany under its wing.

As to the corporate connections of eminent Wall Street bankers one may refer to the Money Trust report. In Germany and the United States, at least, big business has deliberately, even eagerly, put itself in hock to big banks. The common explanation is that big business constantly needs fresh capital and ties itself up with certain powerful banks in order to get itself financed.

That is not the real reason, however. A sound railroad or industrial does not need to stand hat in hand in Morgan's anteroom or the anteroom of the Deutsche Bank to get capital.

Mr. President, a truer word was never uttered, nor a more salutary one at this time. A sound railroad or industrial does not need to stand hat in hand in Morgan's anteroom or the anteroom of anybody else.

Take the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western road, a railroad which was constructed in the old-fashioned way, the money for which was raised upon the issue and sale of stock, which has no bonded indebtedness, or, if any, a small one, which has no difficulty in meeting its engagements, which pays 25 or 30 per cent dividends upon its capitalization, and which does not knock at the doors of Federal commissions for leave to raise its rates and increase the taxes upon American commerce. So it is with sound industrial concerns, of which few survive.

It is a most melancholy fact that to-day all business is being done upon borrowed capital. The chief reason why the railroads want and are petitioning for an increase in rates is to increase their borrowing power. No concern goes into business now without an issue of bonds. Its stock is the commission capital demands for underwriting its securities. A railroad company does not buy an engine, or a rail, or a car, or make an extension without increasing its bonded debt, without fastening upon its customers an added fixed charge. When is it going to end?

Why, Mr. President, one of the causes of the present business depression the world over lies in the fact that the liquid capital of the world is absorbed by new bond issues, by the extension of national debts, by the creation of new securities. Nobody pretends that the railroads of the country ever expect or intend to pay, or can pay, their bonded indebtedness; but they are going to increase it and increase it, and increase it again. Where and when will the end be? It must come at some time, because the borrowing power is limited by the loaning power. When the limit of the borrowing power is reached, as it will be when the productive energies of mankind are required to meet annual interest charges, then will come a collapse that will be the prelude to universal repudiation.

We are not borrowing wisdom from experience, either in government or in private life. On the contrary, we are continuing our mad course of doing business upon borrowed capital for all the world like an heir who has not reached his maturity and who mortgages his expectations at a high rate of interest, to the end that he may anticipate and then squander his inheritance.

I continue with this editorial:

The real reason is to restrain competition. Big business does not flock to big banks as a source of capital, but as a refuge from competition.

Undoubtedly the most important function of such institutions as Morgan & Co. and the Deutsche Bank is to keep competition in hand. They are a sort of medieval fair, at which traders can meet and discuss and adjust their differences under bonds to keep the peace, and make plans for their mutual benefit without knifing one another.

Mellen's testimony pictures Morgan in a dominating position. An important reason for that position was that Morgan, taking it all around, could do more to suppress competition than anybody else. Naturally, therefore, business turned to him.

Mr. President, one of the last survivals of the old-fashioned method of doing business was that of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, of Philadelphia. It was established in 1831 by Asa Baldwin, and until 1911 it was a partnership—a magnificent enterprise, paying enormous profits, employing fifteen or sixteen thousand men, manufacturing locomotives and selling them in every quarter of the globe, and making extensions from time to time out of its earnings as the growing nature of its business required. Such a spectacle must have been annoying to the array of modern business elements which believes that the true way in which to carry on business is to incorporate it and bond it. Hence an offer was made for this business too tempting for its owners to resist. So, in 1911, it was incorporated and taken over by the Baldwin Locomotive Works Co., which was capitalized at $40,000,000, more than twice as much as it ought to have been capitalized for, and of course it was bonded. A bonded debt of $10,000,000 additional was placed upon a solvent, going concern that it might keep up with the modern procession of overburdened pursuits; and of course these bonds, with their interest of 5 per cent or 6 per cent or whatever the amount is, have been and will forever continue to be a fixed charge upon that concern, while of course it will be contended that legitimate business will be injured by anything that may so interfere with its transactions as to imperil these "fixed charges" plus a profit upon its preferred and common stock. It is the last of the old guard, so far as I know, that has disappeared under the overwhelming surge of modern capitalization and methods of doing business.

Mr. Claflin stated yesterday—and the statement was a manly one if he is correctly reported—that his failure was not due to recent tariff legislation. He did not make the statement quite as broadly as that, but I think he meant to be fair; and yet it has been and will be heralded all over this country that the collapse of the Claflin institutions, dropsical with water, spreading all over the country, was due to the policy or lack of policy of the Democratic administration. It is merely, in the industrial world, what the recent exposé of the New York, New Haven & Hartford is in the transportation world. Both institutions were the offspring of the same financial father. Each of them had headquarters in the same place, and each a part of the general policy of commercial organization which seeks to make all industries tributary to the stock markets and financial kings of New York City.

I am sorry this collapse has come. It may be a blessing in disguise in that it will call attention to its immediate causes, and result, if not in a cessation of business upon this line, at least discouraging its further extension.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the very eloquent address of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], which he has just concluded, certainly shows that legislation along the lines proposed in this bill is needed in this country.

I listened to the first part of his speech, also, with a great deal of interest, because it called attention to phraseology in the pending bill which, I think, can be much improved. I think that so far as we can, in preparing a bill for a trade commission, we should conform to the language which has received judicial construction in the Supreme Court of the United States, among others in the case of the interstate-commerce act, as this is somewhat to be compared to that legislation.

I wish to say that I shall propose an amendment to section 5 of this bill; and in order that it may have the consideration of the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Utah, who so clearly stated his views on it, I wish to suggest the phraseology of the amendment which I shall propose, which I do not think will be out of joint with the ideas of the committee.

I propose to strike out, in lines 7 and 8, on page 21 of the bill, the words "restraining and prohibiting it from using" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "directing the discontinuance of"; and also, in line 11, on page 21, to strike out the words "restraining and prohibiting the use" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "directing the discontinuance."

My reason for doing that is to avoid using, in connection with the powers of the commission, words which have received clearly judicial construction, and which pertain to the processes of the courts, and, as I conceive, not to those of a commission.

I also propose to strike out lines 15 to 22, inclusive, regarding the process and course to be taken after the commission shall determine any competition to have been unfair, and so declare, and use, mutatis mutandis, the words of the interstate-commerce act, as follows:

If any corporation fails or neglects to obey any order of the commission while the same is in effect, the commission, or any party injured thereby, or the United States, by its Attorney General, may apply to the district court of the United States within any district where the method in question was used or where such corporation is located or carries on business for the enforcement of such order. If, after hearing, that court determines that the order was regularly made and duly served, and that the corporation is in disobedience of the same, the court shall enforce obedience to such order by a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such corporation, its officers, agents, or representatives, from further disobedience of such order, or to enjoin upon it or them obedience to the same.

That, Mr. President, will bring the wording of this act into strict accordance with the interstate-commerce act, which has had such frequent construction by the courts that I think it is very desirable that we should use that form.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will state that I see no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Delaware, and I will bring it to the attention of the committee. At the same time, I insist that the application to the court by the commission for the enforcement of its order means judicial action by the court. It asks for the issuance of an injunction against whom? Against the defendant. The defendant must appear and must, of course, be heard. So, while all the action of judicial proceedings is not laid down in this bill, I insist that it is all implied.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator pardon a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. In the Senator's view, what matters will the court consider upon that application?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Simply the question, first, whether the commission is authorized by law to make the order; and, second, whether or not it invaded the constitutional rights of the defendant.

Mr. CLAPP. That is just what the Senator from Delaware suggests we should copy from the interstate-commerce law. It seems to me that is much plainer, and that it would be much better to make it plain, and obviate just such discussion on the law as we have had this afternoon on this portion of the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have no objection at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in connection with the very eloquent and illuminating discussion of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] with reference to the failure of the H. B. Claflin Co., I ask unanimous consent to have read an editorial which appeared in to-day's issue of the Wall Street Journal, of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal of Friday, June 26, 1914.]

REVIEW AND OUTLOOK—THE CLAFLIN FAILURE.

It is easy and cheap to ascribe the largest failure of its kind in the country's commercial history to the administration at Washington. This is not altogether fair, although it must be admitted that the disturbance of public confidence, of individual consuming power and credit, and of established methods of commerce tested by the expert practice of years has an undeniable responsibility in the matter.

But the Claflin firm failed because it was based on a combination of wholesale and retail business, which imposed upon it a financial burden heavier than it could carry. The H. B. Claflin firm, before embarking in the retail business, was perhaps the largest wholesale house in the world. Its customers were independent and well distributed. But when it embarked in the retail trade it stood to reason that its independent customers would resent that enterprise, and would take their business elsewhere.

There followed a result which was, unfortunately, only obvious after the event. The company had to make its own customers and finance them. It ceased to be a wholesale house in a broad and safe sense, and became merely the financial backer of a large number of retail stores all over the country, whose only credit was that of the H. B. Claflin house. The notes of these concerns, probably held by 3,000 or more great and small banks throughout the United States, were practically Claflin paper. The indorsement made these notes merchantable, and the failure leaves the banks as creditors of the indorsers.

This is an instance of expansion in the wrong direction. Given sufficient financial strength, the idea was all right, but with what the New York Herald correctly describes as "slow assets and quick liabilities" there was only one end when the parent concern had exhausted its credit.

It is revealing no secrets to say now that the late J. P. Morgan saw this clearly. He has been freely abused, especially by people who did not know or understand him. But his analysis of this situation at its inception was crystal clear, and it is not too much to say that had he been alive the result would have been foreseen, and therefore rendered largely harmless.

There is here no criticism of a great merchant, whose rectitude is a proverb and whose reputation is clean enough to stand an honest commercial failure. An apology for the president of the New York Chamber of Commerce would be an impertinence. The facts need only to be presented to be understood.

As might be expected, the best commercial and financial intelligence in the country is now directed to localizing and minimizing the danger to credit.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, here is one of the most vital measures that has been before Congress in many years, a proposition radically and absolutely to revolutionize the attitude of Government toward business, and I think a full attendance of the Senate should be here to listen to the discussion. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Fletcher	Oliver	Smoot
Brady	Hughes	Overman	Sutherland
Bryan	James	Page	Thomas
Camden	Jones	Perkins	Thompson
Catron	Lane	Pomerene	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lea, Tenn.	Ransdell	Weeks
Chilton	Lewis	Saulsbury	West
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	White
Clarke, Ark.	Myers	Sheppard
Crawford	Nelson	Sherman
Culberson	Newlands	Simmons

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to announce the illness of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which detains him from the Senate this afternoon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. KERN, Mr. REED, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

Mr. CUMMINS entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Idaho will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. It is now about 5 minutes to 5 o'clock, and I ask unanimous consent that we may take up the calendar under Rule VIII and consider bills to which there is no objection until quarter to 6 o'clock.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to consult the pleasure of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection, Mr. President, if the Senator has none. It is immaterial to me.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, there is a conference report——

Mr. NEWLANDS. There is a general expression on this side of the Chamber that we should like to hear the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought, as it is nearly 5 o'clock, and the Senator from Idaho certainly could not get through with his remarks this evening, it would be better for him and for everybody else if he would start to-morrow as soon as the bill is taken up, and then he could conclude his remarks without interruption.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Judiciary Committee has adjourned, and several of us came up especially because we desired to hear the Senator from Idaho, and we may get tied up with the Judiciary Committee meeting in the morning.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope we will not adjourn before the usual time.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not ask that the Senate adjourn. I ask that we may take up the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the unfinished business is to be laid aside, I shall insist upon taking up the river and harbor bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I would have to ask unanimous consent, and in that case the Senator could object to taking up the calendar.

Mr. KERN. I suggest that the Senator from Idaho be allowed to proceed.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Very well.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I regard this bill as one of the most important measures which we have had before Congress for many years. We are accustomed to use similar language in regard to almost any important measure which comes up, but the trades commission bill will mark an era in the industrial policy of this country. For a great many years—in fact, since we have been a Government—we have entertained the belief that the competitive system of industry or competition is essential to our business and our political welfare. We have believed that in the competitive field, however severe the competition, things would finally adjust themselves to the public good. This bill has upon its face the appearance of being built upon that principle to some extent, but it in fact marks the beginning of the time when the business of the country will be regulated and controlled through bureaus and commissions, and marks the beginning of the time when the question of competition will be eliminated entirely, and we will simply undertake to regulate and control the combinations, however large they may be, seeking to prevent their extortion, seeking to regulate their relations with labor, and prices, and so forth. We ought to enter such a field with hesitancy and after only the most serious consideration, if, indeed, we should enter at all.

I am going to assume, Mr. President, in the argument this afternoon that this bill is constitutional. In other words, I am not going to discuss the question whether or not we can do what we are undertaking here to do. I shall assume that we can delegate the power which we have undertaken to delegate to this commission. While not conceding it, that is not the feature of the bill which I want to discuss at this time. The question still remains whether or not this measure is framed as it should be framed, assuming that we have the constitutional power to do what we are seeking to do.

As I said a moment ago, we have been heretofore proceeding along a different line, but we do not disclose an entire willingness to abandon the original proposition. We passed in 1890 what is known as the Sherman antitrust law. The Sherman law bids the business of the country to compete. It was built upon the theory that competition is the life of trade. It punishes those who unnecessarily restrain trade or destroy competition. It was enacted for the purpose of destroying monopoly, which is the absence of competition. For the last 24 years the business world, through the courts and through our public declarations, from a party standpoint and otherwise, has been led to believe that we expected the channels of interstate trade to be kept perfectly free from all restraint and monopoly, and that competition should constitute the primal element of our interstate commerce. We have given business to understand that we were not concerned with the severity of competition, but only with its preservation, however strong.

For a number of years after the passage of that statute it was not clear to the business world as to its meaning, although I think that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States have rendered that statute, which was in the first instance somewhat uncertain and ambiguous, sufficiently certain, sufficiently positive; and at this time business need not have very much difficulty in knowing what that law means.

Mr. President, while the Sherman antitrust law bids the business world to compete—that is to say, objects to the destruction of competition in any form—we announce another rule here in another law, saying that while we recognize competition as necessary we insist that it shall not be unfair competition. We propose to have competition, but to regulate competition which means to oversee the whole business world and ultimately and logically to tolerate monopoly.

The first law was claimed to be uncertain, so far as the business world was concerned, in its beginning, if it is not so now; the objection which I present to this bill at this time is the uncertainty of this law. When you say to the business world that competition is recognized as the life of trade and as essential to our business interests and to our political and our public welfare, and say upon the other side that while that is true still you must not compete unfairly, it is certainly due to the business world to lay down what the rules of competition shall be and what shall constitute unfair competition. Uncertain and ambiguous laws are always for the benefit of the lawless.

Mr. President, I want to call attention, in the first instance, to some of the decisions of the courts with reference to this subject, decisions which have been rendered as a result of long contests upon the part of the business concerns which have announced the rules which have been embedded not only in our jurisprudence but are supposed to be embedded in our business affairs.

I will say here that I would gladly vote for any measure which I believe would strengthen the Sherman law and make efficient and effective its enforcement. I would join with those who will add simplicity and effectiveness in its enforcement. I would remove as much of the mere administrative feature of it from the overburdened courts as possible. I would like, in other words, to join with my colleagues in any administrative provisions which would put into practical effect the splendid body of principles now found in the many decisions of the Supreme Court.

I am a firm believer in the policy of that law. I believe that it can be successfully enforced. I believe that under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, as they now stand, it is within the power of the Executive side of the Government or the political side of the Government to end monopoly in this country, if we have the courage to do so, and I would willingly support any measure which I thought would result in making more effective the enforcement of that law.

Let us turn for a moment, Mr. President, to the Sherman law, and see the rule which has been announced by Congress and see what kind of a strait-jacket we are undertaking to put the business of this country in by leaving the Sherman law as it is with the numerous decisions which have been rendered under it, and at the same time enacting a law which says that unfair competition is unlawful without advising the business world or defining in any way what shall constitute or what does constitute unfair competition. And this strait-jacket will be far more embarrassing to small competitive firms, to legitimate business, than it will be to great combinations or monopolies. Assuming that unfair competition results ultimately in doing the things which we demand shall not be done under the Sherman law, how can we expect the business of this country to proceed along the line which we are now marking out when we concede as legislators that we can not in advance advise them what is unfair competition.

I agree perfectly with what the President said last night that there is an element of uncertainty in the business world arising out of the conditions which exist with reference to the enforcement of these laws and their enactment, but how shall business become satisfied and certain and confident of itself when it is approached upon one side by the law, which means a penalty if they do not keep alive and obey the laws of competition, and upon the other side if they go too far or practice unfair competition when they are not advised in advance what is the limit of competition which shall enable them to avoid violating this measure, if it becomes a law, and how little competition they can have without violating the Sherman law? The Sherman law says:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court

Every person who shall monopolize, or attempt to monopolize, or combine or conspire with any other person or persons, to monopolize any part of the trade or commerce among the several States, or with foreign nations, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

It is well known that in a number of the cases arising under this law the contention was made upon the part of the business concerns that competition had become destructive, that the practices of the competitors were unfair and calculated to destroy, and that it was for the purpose of getting rid of those conditions that they asked the right to combine and cooperate, and that their cooperation or combinations were reasonable. But these pleas were rejected. They were told that the absence of competition was the beginning of monopoly, and that competition, however severe or unfair, would finally work out to the public good. Some people interpreted this as prohibiting larger units of business, but such was not true. Units which resulted from normal and regular growth, from giving increased quality of goods, and so forth, were never inhibited. Bigness itself was never condemned.

The Supreme Court in the Northern Securities case, in discussing this feature of the proposition, to wit, free competition, said:

That Congress has the power to establish rules by which interstate and international commerce shall be governed, and by the antitrust act has prescribed the rule of free competition among those engaged in such commerce.

What did the business world understand by free competition? That there should be no restraint; that there should be no step taken looking to monopoly; that competition, regardless of its ruthlessness or its destructiveness or the method in which it was carried on, should, nevertheless, be free and be left free to settle itself and to adjust business concerns upon that principle.

The Supreme Court quotes from Sixty-eighth Pennsylvania State, page 173, as follows:

When competition is left free, individual error or folly will generally find a correction in the conduct of others. But here is a combination of all the companies operating in the Blossburg and Barclay mining regions and controlling their entire productions. They have combined together to govern the supply and the price of coal in all the markets from the Hudson to the Mississippi Rivers and from Pennsylvania to the Lakes. This combination has a power in its confederated form which no individual action can confer. The public interest must succumb to it, for it has left no competition free to correct its baleful influence. When the supply of coal is suspended the demand for it becomes importunate and prices must rise. Or, if the supply goes forward, prices fixed by the confederates must accompany it. The domestic hearth, the furnaces of the ironmaster, and the fires of the manufacturer all feel the restraint, while many dependent hands are paralyzed and hungry mouths are stinted. The influence of a lack of supply or a rise in the price of an article of such prime necessity can not be measured. It permeates the entire mass of the community and leaves few of its members untouched by its withering blight. Such a combination is more than a contract; it is an offense. * * * In all such combinations where the purpose is injurious or unlawful the gist of the offense is the conspiracy. Men can often do by the combination of many what severally no one could accomplish, and even what when done by one would be innocent. * * * There is a potency in numbers when combined which the law can not overlook where injury is the consequence.

Quoting from the Thirty-fifth Ohio State, page 666, the court in that case says:

It is no answer to say that competition in the salt trade was not, in fact, destroyed, or that the price of the commodity was not unreasonably advanced. Courts will not stop to inquire as to the degree of injury inflicted upon the public; it is enough to know that the inevitable tendency of such contracts is injurious to the public.

Again, quoting from the Illinois Supreme Court as follows:

So long as competition was free the interest of the public was safe. The laws of trade, in connection with the rigor of competition, was all the guaranty the public requires; but the secret combination created by the contract destroyed all competition and created a monopoly against which the public interest had no protection.

These cases, Mr. President, I read from the State courts for the reason that they are specifically referred to and approved by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, let us take a recent case upon this subject which illustrates the situation, because they made the special plea in this case that the combination was made for the purpose of getting rid of ruthless, unfair, overreaching competition. I do not recall that they used the word "unfair," although I think you will find it in the counsel's brief, likely; but I know the contention was made that this combination was brought into existence for the purpose of placing a reasonable restraint upon competition, and that as a result of the combination the prices had not been raised; no injustice had been done to anyone. But the court said the effect of your combination, regardless of the ruthlessness of the competition which it was brought to displace, is in violation of the antitrust law, and therefore void. This particular case was under the trust law of the State.

This is the case of the State against International Harvester Co., reported in Two hundred and thirty-seventh Missouri, page 378. The attorneys in that case said:

The decision in this case becomes one of great practical importance to all persons and corporations doing business in Missouri. In an age "where modern industrial conditions are such that combination is not only necessary but inevitable," and when the uniting of properties and doing business on a large scale is an "economic necessity," it is of supreme importance that the commercial world should know precisely the line demarking the legitimate corporation from the illegal "trust." It presents a problem of construing the laws of Missouri, etc.

In the body of the opinion of the judge who wrote the leading opinion it is said:

The respondent is a Wisconsin corporation, chartered in 1881, under the name Parker-Dennet Harvesting Machine Co., to engage in the business of manufacturing and selling harvesting machines—that is, binders, mowers, etc., and other agricultural implements. It was located at Milwaukee, Wis., and conducted its manufacturing business there. Its name was afterwards changed to Milwaukee Harvesting Co., and under that name it was licensed to do business in this State in 1892. It established itself here and conducted its business of selling its own manufactured articles until the occurrence of the events herein complained of by the State, since which time it has conducted a business of selling only the products of the International Harvester Co., a New Jersey corporation, which corporation will be hereinafter more particularly referred to and discussed. After the organization of the last-named company it acquired all the stock of respondent, and respondent's name was again changed, the last name being International Harvester Co. of America, the words "of America" alone distinguishing its name from that of the New Jersey corporation. Respondent is frequently referred to in the evidence as the "Milwaukee," and for convenience and ready distinction we shall sometimes refer to it by that name.

Besides the Milwaukee company, there were other foreign corporations, manufacturers and sellers of farm implements of the same or similar character, licensed to do business in the State, among them the McCormick Harvester Co., an Illinois corporation; the Plano Manufacturing Co., also an Illinois corporation; the Warder-Bushnell & Glessner Co., an Ohio corporation; and D. M. Osborne & Co., a New York corporation. In addition to the above corporations, the Deering Co., which was an Illinois copartnership, was also a manufacturer and seller of harvesting machines, and doing business in this State. The manufacturing plants of all these concerns were located in their respective State domiciles; the business they conducted here was that of selling their manufactured products. There were other concerns engaged in like business, but the six companies above named, including the respondent, were the chief concerns; and in 1902—which was the date of the alleged unlawful combination—after several years prior thereto, they did from 80 to 90 per cent of all harvesting-machine business in the United States and in the State of Missouri. The commissioner has listed these companies in the rank of the relative volume of business done by each, as follows: (1) The McCormick, (2) the Deering, (3) the Warder-Bushnell & Glessner, (4) the Plano, (5) the Osborne, and (6) the Milwaukee. The machines of each company bore the company's trade-mark for a name—"McCormick," "Deering," "Champion" (the Warder-Bushnell & Glessner), "Plano," "Osborne," and "Milwaukee"—and were well known to the trade by their respective trade-marks.

Here were six or seven competitive business institutions, and the competition, it was said, was so severe that it was maintained and carried on upon an unfair and unjust basis, such as would result in no benefit, they contended, to the consumer, but possibly to his injury, because ultimately he must pay for whatever ravages or losses in business or failures of concerns that would take place in paying for the product as it would ultimately reach him. It was contended that it was but reasonable for those combinations to come together and end that unfair competition. If it had come before this commission, what would the commission have said about it? Suppose the commission had said, "This is unfair competition; it is unlawful"; then would it not have been a proper thing for the combinations to come together and end the unfair competition? In other words, what line of conduct would a business institution of that kind be warranted in following; to what line or principle could it safely adhere? And if this commission should have concluded to end that unfair competition, how would it have done, except by reuniting them or permitting their unification, which would of itself be a violation of the trust law? And thus this measure may in the end come to be an aid and a refuge for monopoly.

Now, I grant you that if you would write into this bill and determine what "unfair competition" is, so that a business concern could know it, it might be in aid of the Sherman antitrust law; but when you leave it so uncertain that they can neither know whether they are violating the Sherman antitrust law or this law, you are simply placing the business of the country so that it can not proceed until it receives its directions from your commission. How is business going to know whom it can buy out; how it can enlarge its business or its business units? How is it going to know what it may do to secure the trade in this territory and in that territory? How is it going to determine how it may increase its powers here and there, either by the purchase of other combinations or by cooperating with them, until it has proceeded and has been brought before the commission and the commission determines the proposition? Assuming, now, that the commission has the constitutional power to determine it, must the business of the country wait to know what it will do until it is drawn before the commission and that is determined?

This committee, composed of many of the ablest of the Members of the Senate, concede by this bill and concede by the report that they can not define "unfair competition." This bill discloses and the report discloses that the ingenuity of the Senate is insufficient to define that term so that it may be a guide to the business of this country. Shall we expect business to take on an air of confidence and of certainty when we start it upon this unknown sea, without rudder or compass, to determine according to a commission's judgment upon a particular state of facts whether or not it has violated the law? And I repeat that uncertainty will embarrass the honest and the well meaning, and at times may actually aid monopoly.

Let me read a little further from this decision in order to get the real gist of it. I read from the separate opinion of Judge Graves, because he goes into this question more particularly as to why they thought it was necessary to combine.

> Every syllable of evidence in this record shows that there was then actual competition. The same evidence likewise shows that after 1902 there was no real competition. The International Harvester Co., acting through its agent, the respondent herein, fixed the prices of each machine to the retailer and permitted no deviation therefrom. The only possible chance for competition was by the agent cutting off a part of his commission. The machines were listed to the agents at a fixed sum, and that sum had to be accounted for at the settlement. That there was real competition prior to 1902 and no competition since is best shown by a few excerpts from the testimony.
> Mr. McCormick, one of the leading spirits in the International Harvester Co., in part, said:
>
> "Q. Was a part of the unstable condition incident to this unsettled condition prior to the formation of the International Harvester Co. a variation from the list price and the selling of the machines? Did that constitute a part of the unbusinesslike methods that you mention?—A. The unbusinesslike methods were a multitude of things.
>
> "Q. Was that a part of it?—A. Yes, sir.
>
> "Q. That is, the Deering people would have a machine listed at $90 and let the dealer have it at $80?—A. Yes, sir.
>
> "Q. Was that a common practice in giving rebate?—A. All kinds of subterfuges for modifying prices—taking old machines at large values, throwing in other property, wasteful expenditure of money and time, and salary of men.
>
> "Q. I was not asking you of what you complained in detailed statement. I ask you if the selling below list price was one. Was that true?—A. Yes, sir.
>
> "Q. Now, since that time you make one price on paper and get another price from the dealer?—A. We do not.
>
> "Q. You maintain the prices listed?—A. Yes, sir.
> "Q. And before that consolidation that was not done by any of the companies?—A. Was not done so generally."

Here we have a practice, Mr. President, of all kinds of subterfuges for modifying prices—taking old machines at large values, wasteful expenditures of money and of time, salaries of men, and so forth. Some of those things, of course, could not be said to be unfair, but some of them would be so; and the commission would undoubtedly adjudge some of them to be, and if these combinations removed those things and gave the country one price, and a lower price as they claim, they were held nevertheless to be subject to the inhibition of the antitrust law. Undoubtedly this commission would have adjudged those things which were done by the competitive organization as unfair in some respects, and the independents would have been denounced for practicing the things they were doing; we would have here two laws, one of which would have condemned what they were doing, and the other law would condemn what they did in order to get rid of it. I do not believe, Mr. President, that the business of the country can stand that kind of a proposition, and I do not believe it will work out for clean, legitimate, independent business concerns. I believe that we are under obligation to make this law sufficiently certain and definite that individual business may know when the law is passed what it can safely do. We are under obligation to write the rules and regulations into this law, so that a man may know when he enlarges his business or extends his territory or readjusts his affairs that he may do so with absolute safety. I say to you that it seems to me no less than the approaching of a crime, in the business condition now prevailing, to say to the business concerns of this country, "We have established a rule that you shall compete, but that you shall not compete unfairly," without advising them in any way, shape, or form of what that unfair competition consists. We start business to groping its way through experiments and orders and judgments, all of which the people as a whole must pay for in the end.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Idaho realizes that there are practices in trade which constitute unfair competition, does he not?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And he recognizes the fact that those practices should be discouraged by law. Under what general phrase, then, would the Senator provide by law for the discouragement and the discontinuance of such practices? Can the Senator suggest a comprehensive phrase that would meet the conditions more accurately than the one used in this bill?

Mr. BORAH. I do not believe that it is possible by two words, whether the words are "unfair competition" or some other words, to define the lines for business action in this country.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Can the Senator do it in 10 words or 20 words?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I could, but let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States we have been 20 years defining the lines along which the business of this country shall be carried on and what they might do lawfully and what they might not do.

Mr. THOMAS. And they have not been defined yet.

Mr. BORAH. And, as the Senator from Colorado says, they have not been defined yet; but nevertheless there is a vast code of rules now announced by the Supreme Court with which business may familiarize itself. The contention which business has been making for 20 years is that it has not known what to do. Now that the element of uncertainty has been reduced, if not eliminated, now about the time we are prepared to say to these combinations the law has been made sufficiently plain so that you can not be excused from its observance, and you must obey it, instead of enforcing it we enter a new field and proceed along quite a different line. We can change a law or policy here in a few days or weeks, but business can not be expected to change its whole basis on a theory in a fortnight.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I take it that when the Senator says it has taken 20 years to determine what the Sherman antitrust law means that he includes within that time the many years which the Department of Justice wasted in not making any effort to ascertain what it meant or to enforce it.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I include that time.

Mr. POMERENE. That would constitute about three-fourths of the time.

Mr. BORAH. But suppose I concede the position of the Senator from Nevada, that it is difficult to define these practices in the law, then, what does the Senator from Nevada think about the difficulty of the business world in knowing what we are trying to do? If we find it difficult, if not impossible, to define our terms or make specific and certain what shall be the experience of business?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Senator has presented with great force the fact that under the Sherman law we have commanded the business of the country to compete. Competition is war. There may be brutal warfare and there may be civilized warfare. Warfare is still recognized by the civilized world as a possible condition at any time; and it is doing its best to substitute civilized for barbaric warfare. So, with reference to competition, there is brutal competition and there is civilized and fair competition. The Senator says that it is difficult to include in any phrase of moderate length a rule that will embrace all unfair practices. So it is; and I asked the Senator whether he could suggest a phrase of greater extent than the one used that would be more satisfactory. The Senator, as I understand, is not able to suggest such a phrase. Shall we abandon the attempt altogether, then, to civilize competition, or shall we adopt a phrase, a rule, which will constitute a standard of action for enforcement by a commission organized by Congress to carry out as its servant its constitutional power of regulating commerce?

It seems to me that it would be folly for us to attempt by a definition of each practice to cover the field, because we have the testimony of experts in business that unfair competition is so multiform that if we condemn 20 practices that exist to-day, 20 more will be invented to-morrow. So we must have some general rule.

The committee has adopted the very best rule it could find; it relies upon a phrase that has a constantly increasing significance. We admit it is not a term that has been used as extensively as the terms "a reasonable rate" or "unjust discrimination"; but it has a definite meaning in economics, and that meaning you will find is being recognized gradually in legal phrasing and in the decisions of the courts, and we believe it will be maintained just as the term "reasonable rate" has been upheld as a standard of action and just as the term "unjust discrimination" has been upheld as a standard of action covering discriminations in all their multiform aspects without describing in a long and wearisome code each phase of what constitutes unjust discrimination.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, beginning with the trans-Missouri freight case and ending with the Standard Oil case the defense was continually made by these leading men of business that their combinations were made for the purpose of getting rid of what the Senator calls "brutal competition." They believed that was what they were doing. Their standard was such as to lead them to believe that they had a right to get rid of that brutal competition.

Mr. NEWLANDS. They got rid of it by creating monopoly. We wish to get rid of it, not by creating monopoly, but by establishing a fair competition that is in accord with the moral law and will condemn every practice in business that is against good morals, and will condemn every practice for which the individual himself would have a remedy against his competitor either at law or in equity, giving that individual the protection of the State through this tribunal by means of a proceeding without expense to himself, instead of turning him over to the expense, weariness, loss, and anxiety attendant upon the litigation of the individual with a powerful combination.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. If I may interrupt the Senator from Idaho, recognizing the Senator from Idaho as a very eminent and able lawyer—and in saying this I am speaking from personal experience, for it was my honor as well as my delight to participate with him in the courts of the Northwest—I now, respecting that legal opinion of his, ask the Senator from Idaho the following:

First, suppose the Senator from Idaho were able to devise, in specific phrase, a definition of unfair competition, and suppose that definition as devised by him were actually written within the law. I ask the Senator would it not then be the law that all other conduct that might result in unfair competition, but was not done in the manner prescribed in that definition, would, by virtue of the very definition, be legalized?

Mr. BORAH. I think that is true, unless the law should provide that the specification should not be considered a limitation. But what I say is that we are dealing with a thing that is malum in se, and that as a matter of fairness to those who want to obey the law they should be placed in a position where they can do so.

Mr. LEWIS. Secondly, I ask the Senator this question: After the definition had actually been placed in the law, and those who sought to violate the law simply varied their method slightly apart from the manner of the definition, would not they likewise be, therefore, exempt from punishment by virtue of the fact that they had not violated the letter of the law, it being a criminal statute?

Mr. BORAH. I think that is correct. Now, let me ask the Senator from Illinois a question.

Mr. LEWIS. Gladly.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator from Illinois can not define in advance what unfair competition consists of, if he can not advise with reasonable certainty what constitutes unfair competition, how is the business world going to know, except through a long series of hearings and decisions running through the years, as under the Sherman law, what constitutes unfair competition? Does not all this disclose that we are seeking to deal with this matter in an impractical way?

Mr. LEWIS. My answer to the Senator from Idaho would be that the expression "unfair competition," as now incorporated in the bill, is not a new phrase. It is not untried, and in the processes of business is not an experimental phraseology, but is a mere adaptation of expressions from the decisions of the courts which have come down to us as expressive of certain conduct. Therefore the business world would have to recognize the meaning of the term as it had been previously defined in the particular decisions that had denounced certain conduct as resulting in unfair competition.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let us see in what position we place the business world. We say that unfair competition has come to have a settled meaning in the law, or a reasonably settled meaning in the law. If so, why do we not put into the law a definition of what is unfair competition? Shall we expect the business world to examine the common-law decisions and all the different litigations arising under the statutes to ascertain and settle for themselves what unfair competition is, while we, as experienced legislators, trained in the law, and familiar with these opinions, are unable to say anything more or give a single rule of action or a single rule of conduct by which they are to be guided?

Now, it may be true, and I think it is, that we are venturing upon a sea of legislation where nothing but uncertainty can be the result of that legislation. Then it becomes a question as to the wisdom of venturing upon it.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STONE. The Senator probably will not conclude his remarks to-night?

Mr. BORAH. No.

Mr. STONE. It is getting late, and I should like to have the Senator yield in order that I may move for an executive session.

Mr. BORAH. I yield for that purpose.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 27, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 26, 1914.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, never far from any of us, we would draw near to Thee with open minds and hearts, that we may be guided by Thy counsels in all the duties pertaining to life; that Thy thoughts may be our thoughts and Thy ways our ways, for of Thee and through Thee are all things. So may we live and act that we may leave behind us a record worthy of emulation. And to Thee we will ascribe all praise, in the name of Him who taught the way and the truth and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the resolutions of the Omaha Commercial Club on the conservation of flood waters in the West.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a certain document that he names. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report, accompanied by a statement, on the remaining items in disagreement upon the naval appropriation bill; and inasmuch as there are only three items, Mr. Speaker, and the Senate has agreed to the House provisions as to all of them, I ask unanimous consent to waive the printing under the rule and dispose of the conference report at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] presents a conference report on the naval appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent to waive the provision of the rule in relation to printing and going over a day, and to take it up and dispose of it at this time.

Mr. MANN. What is the purport of the conference report?

Mr. PADGETT. The House disagreed to the Senate amendment with reference to the Norfolk Dry Dock. The Senate recedes, and the amendment goes out. The House insisted upon its disagreement on the amendment with reference to the Key West Breakwater. The Senate recedes, and that goes out. The Senate conferees recede from the Senate disagreement to the House amendment authorizing the sale of the ships, and accepts the amendment to the amendment as passed by the House.

Mr. MANN. Does the Senate recede from all its amendments in disagreement except the ship amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And it agrees to the House amendment on the sale of the ships?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill and also read the amendments in controversy.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the Clerk should read the conference report.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the accompanying statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the statement accompanying the conference report be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 913).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 28, 29, 33.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of Senate amendment insert "$3,475,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 71: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 71; and the Senate agree to the same.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.
B. R. TILLMAN,
CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
GEO. C. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the following statement:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 14034) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted by the accompanying report on the amendments of the Senate, namely:

Amendments Nos. 28 and 29 provide for a new dry dock at navy yard, Norfolk, Va., to cost not to exceed $3,000,000, with an appropriation of $200,000; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 33 provides for the construction of a breakwater at the naval station, Key West, Fla., to cost $600,000, with an appropriation of $100,000; and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 40 is a change of total under "Public Works at Navy Yards and Stations," and reduces the amount from $4,300,500 to $3,475,500, a reduction of $825,000.

Amendment No. 71 provides for the sale of the battleships Idaho and Mississippi, and the House receded from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agreed with an amendment striking out the Senate amendment and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The President may, in his discretion, direct the sale in such manner, at such price, not less than the original cost price, and upon such terms as he may deem proper of the two battleships Idaho and Mississippi. All moneys received from the sale of said vessels shall be deposited by the Secretary of the Navy in the Treasury. After said sale, in addition to the two battleships hereinbefore authorized, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed a first-class battleship carrying as heavy armor and as powerful armament as any vessel of its class, to have the highest practicable speed and the greatest desirable radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not to exceed $7,800,000. Out of the money when so deposited in the Treasury there is hereby appropriated toward the construction of said battleship on account of 'Increase of the Navy:' 'Construction and machinery,' $2,000,000; 'Armor and armament,' $2,535,000, and 'Equipment,' $100,000: Provided, That no vessel shall be sold under this authorization unless such sale or the agreement therefor shall have been made prior to July 1, 1915."

And the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same.

L. P. PADGETT,
J. FRED. C. TALBOTT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice that in the amendment with reference to the change of totals the statement does not show whether the House or the Senate receded.

Mr. PADGETT. It says the House receded with an amendment.

Mr. MANN. On a change of totals?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that the Senate receded on all amendments in disagreement.

Mr. PADGETT. There were three amendments in disagreement, and this was the total at the end of the bureau, and it was just to make the figures agree with the facts. In the former report a number of matters had been agreed to, and this other one that was agreed to in this report left that total open.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, by inserting an explanation of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the statement referred to:

MEMORANDUM.

Total of the bill as agreed upon		$140,350,833.61
Naval home	$77,117
Naval-hospital fund	40,000
Total not paid from the Treasury		117,117.00
From the Treasury		140,233,716.61
Last year's naval act, exclusive of naval home ($82,209)		140,718,434.53
Reduction in this year's bill		484,717.92

"Last year's building program consisted of 1 battleship, 6 destroyers, 4 submarines, 1 transport, and 1 supply ship. This year's bill carries a building program of 2 battleships, 6 destroyers, and 8 or more submarines, yet the amount to be appropriated out of the Treasury for this year's bill is $484,717.92 less than last year.

"If the sale of the battleships Idaho and Mississippi is consummated, there will be turned into the Treasury approximately $12,000,000, of which $4,635,000 will be expended toward the construction of an additional dreadnaught, whose fighting efficiency is at least twice as great as the Idaho and Mississippi combined.

"The efforts of the committee, as well as the Navy Department, have been to spend a minimum amount on shore stations and perfect the efficiency of the Navy at sea. The total of last year's naval act, exclusive of 'Increase of the Navy,' amounted to $105,474,948.53. The total of this year's bill for the same purposes amount to $103,894,099.61, a reduction of $1,580,848.92, notwithstanding the enlargement of the Government torpedo factory and the powder factory.

"Last year's naval act for 'Public works at yards and stations' carried $4,348,945. This year's bill for the same purposes carries $3,475,500, an apparent reduction of $873,445, which includes $700,000 transferred from the Bureau of Equipment which did not appear in this appropriation last year, which, therefore, in fact makes a real reduction in 'Public works at navy yards and stations' of $1,573,445.

"The working appropriations of the Bureaus of Steam Engineering and of Construction and Repair, which have to do with industrial work at navy yards and stations for construction and repair of ships of the Navy, have been reduced by $92,000 and $305,000, respectively, without any loss of efficiency and notwithstanding the fact that the activities in the yards due to enlargement of the Navy have greatly increased.

"Due to enlarged competition in bidding for ordnance material and a reduction in the expense for experiments, the appropriations for the Bureau of Ordnance have been reduced $695,110.

"The bill carries provisions for an investigation for the erection of a Government armor plant, for the enlargement of the activities at the Government torpedo factory and Government powder factory, all of which, together with the Washington Gun Factory, placed the Government in an independent position to largely manufacture its own torpedoes, powder, guns, armor, and special-treatment steel, by which the Government will be able to determine the costs of production and prevent extortionate prices by contract.

"The appropriation for the Naval Academy has been reduced $87,500, and the appropriations for the Marine Corps have been reduced $212,763.92."

PENSIONS.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into the consideration of the legislative bill I would like to ask unanimous consent to take up the omnibus pension bill. It is a very short bill and will only take about 10 minutes. It is the last bill we will have this fiscal year, and possibly the last we may have this session. Therefore I desire to call it up.

Mr. MANN. This is the regular pension day. It does not require unanimous consent.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. This is the regular pension day, but when the House adjourned last night it was considering the conference report on the legislative bill, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] in charge of that bill desires to proceed with its consideration.

Mr. MURDOCK. It requires the unanimous consent for the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is this the bill that was reported yesterday?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up House bill 17482, an omnibus pension bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 17482) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

The name of Charles Forbes, late of Troop E, Eleventh Regiment United States Cavalry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out lines 7, 8, and 9 on page 2 of the item just read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out lines 7, 8, and 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Robert S. Wagner, late of Company H, Twenty-fourth Regiment United States Infantry, Regular Establishment, and pay him a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, after line 9, insert the following:

"The name of Catherine Woods, widow of William T. Woods, late of Company G, Second Regiment New York Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 a month."

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Speaker, this is to pension Catherine Woods, of 49 King Street, Little Falls, N. Y., widow of William T. Woods, deceased, who served during the War with Spain in Company G, Second Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, from May 12, 1898, to November 1, 1898, when honorably discharged. (I. O. 1014303.)

The records of the War Department show that during his service the soldier was treated as follows:

June 12, 1898, hemorrhoids; June 26, 1898, hemorrhoids; July 1, 1898, hemorrhoids; July 17 to September 16, 1898, furloughed on account of illness, nature of same not given.

The soldier filed a claim for pension March 7, 1899, based on blood poisoning, abscesses, piles, and rheumatism. He filed a great deal of testimony, and the claim also underwent a thorough special examination; and he was also examined by boards of surgeons of the Bureau of Pensions. The evidence thus obtained was of such a character as to cause the allowance of his claim for disease of mastoid cells of right side at $6 per month from date of filing. That part of the claim based on hemorrhoids was rejected on the ground that the soldier admitted that same existed prior to his enlistment, and that part based on rheumatism was rejected on the ground that the soldier admitted that rheumatism attacked him and made itself manifest some time after his discharge. It was therefore held that these two diseases were not due to service origin.

The soldier died August 1, 1913, and it is shown by the testimony of the attending physician that the cause of his death was disease of left kidney. A claim for pension filed by the widow was rejected by the Bureau of Pensions on the ground that the fatal disease of the soldier (disease of left kidney) was not a result of the disease of mastoid cells of right side, for which he was pensioned, nor was it otherwise shown to have been due to his military service. It is stated in affidavits executed by physicians who treated the soldier through his final and fatal illness that the left kidney was in a very diseased condition, and an abscess of long standing which was constantly discharging pus was found in the kidney when it became necessary some two weeks before his death to remove this organ by an operation. These physicians state that this abscess of the kidney was due to the abscess of the mastoid cells of the right side for which the soldier had been for years pensioned. The Bureau of Pensions would not accept this view, or that the fatal disease was the result of the pensioned cause, and have declined to reopen or reconsider their adverse action.

The evidence on file in the claim shows that the petitioner is the widow of the deceased soldier, and as such she was paid the accrued pension due him at the date of his death. In connection with her claim for pension she alleges the soldier left four minor children who are now living, and that she has them to support. No evidence of the dates of birth of these children have ever been filed.

With the bill the petitioner files evidence showing she is a woman of excellent character, but possesses no property whatsoever and depends on her own earnings, amounting to about $3 per week, for her support and the support of her four small children.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have looked carefully into the case covered by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. It has been properly briefed up, and the amendment is satisfactory to the members of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after line 9, on page 13, the following:
"The name of Theodore T. Simon, late of Company H, Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $25 per month."

Mr. MILLER. I trust the chairman of the committee will be inclined to accept this amendment.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I think the Member from Minnesota ought to change the rate.

Mr. MILLER. I will conform to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I think the gentleman should consent to make it $17.

Mr. MILLER. Make it $20. That is pretty small. The man is really absolutely helpless. He can not do a day's work.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. The committee do not feel that they can consent to more than $17.

Mr. MILLER. I will modify it to $17.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by changing the amount to $17. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor. I will yield for a question.

Mr. ADAIR. I should like to ask whether the committee have considered this claim; whether it has been written up in the usual way?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. This is the situation in reference to this claim: It was written up and considered by the members of the committee, and the case was laid on the table. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] procured some additional evidence and asked that the claim be reopened. I assured the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] that the case would be taken up by the committee at our last meeting, but we were unable to secure a quorum on Wednesday of this week, and consequently his case did not come up for consideration; but after having looked over the additional evidence submitted by the gentleman I think that the case is a worthy one.

Mr. ADAIR. I have no objection to the gentleman's claim. The only point I want to make is this: I think it is a very bad practice for Members to offer amendments to bills after they have been brought in here, to be included in an omnibus bill, without consideration by the committee.

Mr. MILLER. I agree with the gentleman entirely, and I would not have done it to-day except that this is the last chance, and this is a very serious case.

Mr. ADAIR. If the chairman of the committee says it has been duly considered, and if the committee are willing that this amount shall be allowed, I shall not object.

Mr. MILLER. The facts in this case as disclosed by the record are as follows:

Theodore T. Simon, of Duluth, Minn., served during the War with Spain in Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, from April 29, 1898, to October 3, 1899, when honorably discharged. He was 25 years of age at enlistment. (I. O. 1379530.)

The records of the War Department fail to show he was ever reported as sick or received medical treatment for any cause.

When mustered out he stated that he was suffering from disease of the lungs. The medical officer, by whom he was then examined, certified he could find no evidence of disease of lungs.

He filed a claim for pension December 12, 1908, based on enlarged veins, weak lungs, and rheumatism. The claim was rejected March 29, 1909, on the ground of no ratable degree of disability from the alleged causes since date of filing the claim.

He again filed a claim January 25, 1911, based on enlarged veins of both feet, malarial poisoning, rheumatism, and locomotor ataxia. This claim was rejected August 21, 1913, after an exhaustive special examination on the ground of no record, medical or other satisfactory evidence showing origin in service, existence at date of discharge or for many years thereafter, and the soldier's inability to show said disabilities were due to his military service. No appeal was taken, but an effort was made to have the claim reopened, which was denied on the ground the evidence offered failed to warrant such action.

The soldier swears that the disabilities alleged by him were contracted in and due to his military service.

Comrade Charles E. Collett testifies that in the service in the Philippines the soldier contracted rheumatism and dysentery and complained of pain in his neck, legs, and back, and upon several occasions had to fall out of line, not being able to march, and became run down physically from same.

Eight other comrades testify to substantially the same effect as Comrade Collett.

A. E. Broadbridge testifies that he knew the soldier prior to his enlistment, and he was then a robust and strong man, free from any disability, but when he returned from the service he was in poor health, a wreck physically; and that he complained of and suffered from pains in the back and legs and neck and from rheumatism, and has been treated continually for these troubles from 1899 to 1912, when affiant testified.

Three other lay witnesses testify to the same effect as Mr. Broadbridge.

Dr. Malingren testifies to treating the soldier in 1904 for pains in the neck, back, and leg.

Dr. Sweency testifies to treating the soldier in 1905 and 1912 for rheumatism and pains and stiffness of the neck, spine, and legs, and that in 1912 he found the soldier suffering from locomotor ataxia, which is now growing worse.

Dr. Breden testifies that in 1908 the soldier consulted him and he found trouble with the spine and neck that indicated locomotor ataxia, and since then this disease has developed.

Dr. Griffin testifies that he examined the soldier in 1909 and found he suffered from flat feet, varicose veins, and could not stand with feet together and eyes closed; in fact, had all the indications of locomotor ataxia.

Several other doctors testify to treatment of soldier since 1908 for rheumatism, trouble with spine, varicose veins, and locomotor ataxia.

The soldier was examined February 3, 1909, by a board of surgeons, who reported that they could find no evidence of rheumatism or disease of the lungs. They did find varicose veins and disease of heart and malarial poisoning, and rated them at 12/18. At this time the soldier could walk without use of cane or crutch. No evidence of any vicious habits, past or present. The soldier complained to this board of spinal trouble.

He was again examined December 4, 1912, by another board, which reported him suffering from varicose veins of neck, arms, and legs, rated at 4/18; locomotor ataxia, rated at 17/18; malarial poisoning, severe, rated at 14/18. No evidence of rheumatism or other disease. Heart somewhat deranged in its actions, but covered by other ratings. No evidence of vicious habits.

The special examination developed the fact that the soldier and all of those who had testified in the case were people of most excellent standing. It also brought out the fact that the main, if not the only, radical disability was that of locomotor ataxia. No one, not even the soldier himself, alleged he had this disease in the service, but he and several comrades do testify that in the service he suffered from a great deal of trouble and stiffness of the neck and back about the spine, and claims this caused this terrible disease which in after years developed.

With the bill the petitioner files an affidavit in which he states he is wholly disabled by locomotor ataxia and disease of the bowels and bladder and piles and varicocele, and that all of the property he possesses consists of a house and lot worth $2,500.

His allegations are fully sustained by lay testimony.

A great many witnesses testify to the fact that the soldier is now wholly unable to perform any work; that he was a strong man before his enlistment, came home in feeble and run-down condition, and suffering from rheumatism, varicose veins, and spinal trouble, and is now suffering from locomotor ataxia, and that the only property he has is a house and lot worth about $2,500.

Three physicians in affidavits filed with the committee testify that the soldier is now wholly unable to do any kind of work, as he suffers from locomotor ataxia, and is confined to bed. These physicians state that they believe the soldier's disease is due to service in the Philippines. They also state he suffers from piles and disease of bowels and bladder, in addition to locomotor ataxia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following as a new paragraph:

"The name of James H. Lacy, late of the United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is on all fours with the case of the gentleman from Minnesota. It has been considered by the committee and was laid aside temporarily, and then, as I understand, the committee were unable to get a quorum and accordingly it was not incorporated in the omnibus pension bill.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I do not know anything about that bill. I do not think that we could consistently accept it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I have submitted this to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DERSHEM] and also called the gentleman's attention to it.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. What action did the committee take?

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the bill was laid on the table temporarily, and then was to be presented again to the full committee.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. But the full committee never took it up again and no additional facts were submitted, as far as I know.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here is the proposition: This person had more than 10 years' service in the United States Navy. He was engaged in deep-sea diving, and had a hemorrhage of the ear as the result of that. At the present time he is lying at the point of death. He has a wife and minor children and is practically a pauper, one might say, on the mercy of the people. He had service prior to the Spanish-American War, and in that war he was on the U. S. S. Wasp, where they did not have medical officers. He was afflicted with disease there, and I can not understand, with that kind of service, why this case was adversely reported by the subcommittee.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. The case was not adversely reported by the subcommittee.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was laid aside.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. It was laid aside, and as far as I know no additional evidence was ever submitted to the committee, and for that reason I do not think we can take up his case at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I called the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DERSHEM], the chairman of the subcommittee, to the case, and he said the facts were worthy of consideration.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. But they have never been brought to the attention of the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman states that this is the last opportunity when it can be considered. It is most pressing and urgent or I would not bring it to the attention of the House, under the circumstances.

Mr. GARNER. Can not the gentleman get his bill considered and put on in the Senate as an amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not. One of the Senators from the State of Wisconsin is absent, and I do not know whether I can obtain the support of the other Senator. The bill has not been introduced in the Senate.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the gentleman have his case put on in the Senate. We ought not to take these cases up and consider them here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I went over all of these facts in the Pension Office.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Yes; but the committee has not.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I submitted them to the subcommittee, since this matter was considered by them, and I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DERSHEM] will bear me out that this is a most worthy case.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will not act favorably upon this.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the gentleman has allowed one Member to have his case brought up, does he think that he is acting fairly when he prevents another Member from bringing up as meritorious a case, after he has gone over all of the record and can assure the House that it is a meritorious case? Does the gentleman think that he is playing fair?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. But in the case of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], when he submitted his additional evidence it was considered by the subcommittee, with the recommendation that the bill do pass; but the full committee never had a meeting, and consequently he could not get his bill in, while in the gentleman's case the committee has not had an opportunity to consider the additional evidence.

Mr. STAFFORD. I submitted the case to the subcommittee, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania is here, and I think he will bear me out.

Mr. DERSHEM. Mr. Speaker, this case has been submitted to me, as the gentlman states. I have gone over it very carefully, and it was my intention to present it to the full committee. We have a ruling in our committee that no case which has been laid on the table can be taken up unless we have a two-thirds vote of the committee, or a membership equal to two-thirds of the committee present. Of course, since this case has been called to my attention a second time by the gentleman, we have never had a two-thirds membership present at a meeting of the committee. That is the reason that I have never presented it to the full committee, and consequently we have not taken any action.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will say this to the gentleman, that after this is passed in the Senate, if he finds on investigation that it does not meet with his approval, I will consent to have it stricken out by the Senate.

The following is the memorandum on the amendment for a pension to James H. Lacy, adopted this morning, prepared by the clerk of the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 14621. James H. Lacy, Hot Springs, S. Dak., served during the War with Spain in the United States Navy from April 11, 1898, to September 28, 1898, when honorably discharged at his own request, the war being considered as practically terminated. He had previously served in the United States Navy almost continuously from October 26, 1885, until August 7, 1896. (I. O. 1401208.)

He filed a claim for pension January 26, 1912, based on malarial poisoning and resulting tuberculosis, which he alleged he contracted in the service in August, 1898. The claim was rejected on the ground of no record, medical, or other satisfactory evidence to show origin in service, existence at date of discharge, or for continuance for some time thereafter, of the said diseases. No appeal was taken, but an attempt was made to reopen the claim, which was denied on the ground that the evidence tendered did not warrant such action.

The records fail to show the sailor was reported as sick or received any medical treatment for any cause during service in 1898. They show in connection with his earlier services that he was treated three days in 1888 for diarrhea, three days in 1889 for fever, two months in 1890 for erysipelas due to two wounds in face received in a brawl on shore and not in line of duty. No other record of treatment for any cause.

Rear Admiral Aaron Ward states that he recalls the sailor well as of last service which was on U. S. S. Wasp and in Cuban and Porto Rican waters, and there was no medical officer aboard to keep records of illness at that time and the food was not good owing to climate and no facilities for cold storage aboard, and many of the men did suffer from tropical fever, as soldier claims he did.

Two lay witnesses testify in 1913 that soldier was a well and strong man prior to service in 1898, but when he returned from service in September, 1898, he was pale, weak, and anemic and suffering from malaria and has ever since suffered from same and results thereof and has never regained his good health.

A physician testifies in 1913 that he examined sailor in 1911 and found him suffering from a typical case of tuberculosis, and he has since steadily gone down in physical condition from same.

He was examined by a board of surgeons September 3, 1913, who report him as in first stages of pulmonary tuberculosis, and rate total for same—$30 per month. They could find no evidence of malarial poisoning, as the stomach, liver, spleen, kidneys, and heart are normal.

With the bill petitioner files an affidavit stating he is wholly disabled by consumption, result of malarial poisoning, and possesses no property.

His allegations are fully sustained by lay witnesses.

A physician testifies the sailor now is wholly disabled by severe pulmonary tuberculosis of both lungs and not able to do any work.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. KEY of Ohio, there were—ayes 42, noes 29.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEY of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 12579. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5324. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents for certain lands to the town of Myton, Utah.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 12759, the Indian appropriation bill, with Senate amendments thereto, and ask that it be printed with the Senate amendments numbered, and that it do lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is this a conference report?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; it is not a conference report. The bill has passed the House and has been returned to the House this morning after having passed the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Under the present practice of the House and the Speaker, are not these appropriation bills with Senate amendments, unless taken off the Speaker's table for consideration in the House, ordered printed with the Senate amendments numbered, without further proceedings?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. That is all the gentleman wants.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is all I desire.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20 and agree to the same with an amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will ask unanimous consent first for the consideration of amendment No. 30, will he not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We had that yesterday.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman from California objected.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Then I made the motion.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think the gentleman from California withdrew that objection.

Mr. MANN. But it is not shown in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is exactly as amendment No. 1, that deals with Senators and the other with Representatives. We have adopted amendment No. 1; we voted on amendment No. 1, and I now ask unanimous consent to consider No. 30 and enter the same order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider——

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will separate the request, I have no objection to either one.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to consider at this time Senate amendment No. 30 to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California objects. The Clerk will report the next amendment in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of two automobiles, including the driving, maintenance, and care of same, one for the use of the Vice President and one for the use of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, $9,000; one half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and the other half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, in order to test the sense of the House on this amendment, which was not considered in the House, I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina proposes that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a preferential motion, that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20 and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes a preferential motion that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20 and agree to the same.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman want any time?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; we want some time over here; I want five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman if he wants it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this amendment provides for an automobile for the use of the Vice President and an automobile for the use of the Speaker of the House. This question has been before the House on two or three separate occasions. So far as an automobile for the Vice President is concerned, I am informed that the Vice President desires an automobile. We are to-day providing automobiles and carriages not only for Cabinet members, but we are providing automobiles and vehicles and paying for their upkeep out of the Public Treasury for the heads of the various departments of the Government. I think it is a great mistake, it is a false economy to deny to the Vice President of the United States an automobile. The Vice President is a poor man——

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD (continuing). Who should not be compelled to purchase an automobile himself, and he desires an automobile. One should be purchased for him and maintained at public expense.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. In just a minute. I think it is false economy for the Congress to deny to the Vice President of the United States this dignified method of travel which his high office warrants and which the people of this country, irrespective of party, want him to have. Now I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX. Is it not a fact the Vice President already has an automobile at the public expense?

Mr. GOOD. Has the gentleman ever seen it?

Mr. COX. I do not think I have seen it, but I have been informed he has one.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman has seen it, he would hardly call it a respectable automobile. It certainly is not the kind of automobile which the Government should furnish the Vice President.

Mr. COX. It has certainly run down very rapidly, because it is not very old.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman realizes the Vice President desires an automobile. He recognizes the fact that it is not suitable for the office that he occupies, and he is desirous of having a new automobile.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield at that point again?

Mr. GOOD. And the gentleman very well knows that an automobile that was made in 1909 is hardly a modern machine for 1915.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. COX. The gentleman states the Vice President wants this new automobile. What authority has the gentleman for making that statement?

Mr. GOOD. I am so informed by Members of the Senate.

Mr. COX. What I want to inquire of the gentleman is—I believe whatever the gentleman says about that, but has he ever talked with the Vice President?

Mr. GOOD. I have not.

Mr. COX. Or anyone who is authoritatively in a position to speak for the Vice President as to whether the Vice President requested that this item go in here?

Mr. GOOD. On the statement of the Committee on Appropriations in another legislative branch of this Government who is authorized to speak in the matter. I am told by Senators that the Vice President does favor this appropriation for automobiles. And it does seem to me that it is pretty cheap economy for Congress to deny these automobiles for these two great officials of the Government.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ADAIR. I would just like to ask the gentleman if he thinks an appropriation of $4,500 is necessary to purchase a respectable automobile either for the Speaker or for the Vice President? Does not the gentleman know that some of the best automobiles on the market, some of the best-looking machines that can be bought, can be purchased for a price not exceeding $2,500?

Mr. GOOD. I call the gentleman's attention to the language of the amendment. It provides for the purchase of two automobiles, including the driving, maintenance, and care of the same, one for the use of the Vice President and one for the Speaker. Now, the gentleman himself enjoys the use of an automobile. He knows that for the purchase of an automobile and pay of the driver and maintenance $4,500 will not go very far for such purpose for a whole year.

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman that I understood it was for the automobile alone. I think the amount is not excessive for all the purposes mentioned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield me two minutes more?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I wanted to ask the gentleman whether the Vice President desired to use this automobile here in Washington, or whether he wanted to have a fine automobile to take his trip about over the country on the Chautauqua circuit?

Mr. GOOD. These automobiles for the Vice President and for the Speaker are for use in the city of Washington. And I think, Mr. Speaker, that we ought not to question this appropriation. As I said before, I think it is not only false economy but that it is cheap economy to do so. I regard the office of the Speaker of this House as second only to that of the President of the United States. It is a great office, and the Speaker of this House ought to have an automobile. We should not degrade this great office. We owe this to the Speaker and the Vice President and to their families. The Vice President ought to have a modern automobile, and these automobiles ought to be paid for and maintained at the expense of the Government of the United States.

Mr. BALTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. For a question.

Mr. BALTZ. Does the gentleman say that the Speaker of the House made a request of the Congress for the purchase of an automobile?

Mr. GOOD. I made no such statement. My impression is that the Speaker some years ago expressed himself as not wanting an automobile.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the gentleman know the Speaker did not request it?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know that, but I know this: If the Speaker does not want an automobile not a penny of this appropriation will be used, so far as the purchase of an automobile for the Speaker is concerned; but if he does want an automobile, the money is ready for him to purchase one and to provide for a driver and the pay for the maintenance; and if he does not want one, it does seem to me that that ought not to be an excuse for denying the Vice President of the United States an automobile, who does want one.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield.

Mr. SIMS. Why not include one each for the majority leader and the minority leader, for they certainly have to do a great deal of individual work incumbent upon them? Let us be just and give each one who has a great deal of work to do a machine.

Mr. GOOD. That is not the question in dispute. The only question in dispute is whether we shall give an automobile to the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of this House.

Mr. GARNER. In order that the RECORD may show conclusively the attitude of the Vice President, is it not his position that he is perfectly willing to accept this automobile if provided by Congress, and that he has not been advocating the purchase of an automobile for himself?

Mr. GOOD. I will say——

Mr. GARNER. My understanding is that the Vice President will accept the automobile if it is appropriated for, but he has not requested a Senator or anyone else to make an appropriation. There is a great deal of difference between those two positions, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] ought to be accurate and ought to know what he is talking about before he puts the Vice President in the attitude of lobbying for an automobile for himself.

Mr. GOOD. I have not put the Vice President in that attitude. I would not do that.

Mr. GARNER. You are saying that he is asking for it. What is that except lobbying for it?

Mr. GOOD. I said that he desired it, and I gave the gentleman the source of my information.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I doubt if I will use the entire five minutes. But I wish to say that I am opposed to the motion made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. I think this is a question that each Member must solve for himself. So far as I am concerned I refuse to make fish of one and fowl of another; absolutely so. In the Sixty-first Congress, I think it was, there was considerable of a row on the floor of this House about buying the then Speaker, Mr. Joseph G. Cannon, an automobile. Every Democrat on this floor, I think, without a single exception, voted against that appropriation.

Mr. GARNER. And a great many Republicans.

Mr. COX. And, as suggested by my friend from Texas, a great many Republicans voted against it. I do not know what exigencies have arisen since that time that would induce me to recede from my former position. I could not believe that the great Speaker of this House wants this automobile. I can not and I will not believe that he wants it until he takes the floor in his own defense and says he wants it. I do not believe he would be in favor of riding in an automobile at the public expense.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does the gentleman say "in his own defense"?

Mr. COX. Yes, in his defense; because I think the Senate has put this in here without any request coming from him at all. One of the things that has endeared the Speaker to the people of this country has been his democratic simplicity. [Applause.]

I am going to relate this episode because it is true. I recall last summer, after we had worked here all day until about 6 o'clock in the evening, with the thermometer standing probably at 100 in this House, walking out across the east plaza toward my home I happened to turn and look toward the depot, and I saw the great Speaker of the House wending his way to catch a street car home, with his life companion on one side and his boy on the other. And I said to myself, "Truly, there is a man who represents Democratic simplicity, who is standing upon the platform of 1912, when we promised the people we would return to Democratic simplicity."

Mr. GOOD Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GOOD. In regard to Democratic simplicity I will ask the gentleman if he is not aware of the fact that the great Secretary of State in this bill asks not only for a driver but also asks for a footman?

Mr. COX. I hope the conferees have not agreed to that. He will never get it by my vote. Now, as to the Vice President, discretion might be the better part of valor coming from me on that point. It might be the part of wisdom that I should keep still upon it, but I am not going to do it.

Mr. GOOD. Go to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I will not do it. I am opposed to that. If the gentleman from Iowa had said that he had it direct from the Vice President's lips that he wanted this automobile, as I said to him a moment ago, I would have agreed to the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa. But whether the Vice President wants this automobile or not, he is not entitled to it. I have no objection on this earth to the Vice President of the United States riding in an automobile. He can buy all that he pleases, and I will never enter a criticism upon it. But I do object, Mr. Speaker, to the Vice President of the United States riding in automobiles at public expense, whether he wants the Congress of the United States to buy them or not.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. For a question solely.

Mr. MILLER. Is it not a fact that the Secretary to the President has an automobile for his own use furnished by the Government?

Mr. COX. I refuse to yield. I am not discussing that. I am only discussing the question raised by the gentleman from the State of Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman think——

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my remarks on this subject and on the bill generally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I am an advocate of Democratic simplicity and Democratic economy, but I am not an advocate of that kind of Democratic simplicity and economy that strains at gnats and swallows camels. [Applause.]

I believe that the legislative branch of the Government should give to its presiding officers that degree of dignity and respect to which they are entitled. I have been greatly mortified as a Member of this body to observe during my short residence in this city the discrimination which has been made between the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress and subordinate officers of the Government. They have been placed in the eyes of the community and in the eyes of representatives of foreign Governments in an unworthy position by reason of this discrimination. I think it is incumbent upon the legislative branch of the Government to demonstrate, by the adoption of the amendment put in the bill by the Senate, that we believe this discrimination should no longer exist.

I would favor a proposition to do away with all automobiles and public conveyances for the use of Government officials if we could pass upon the question in an abstract form, but as long as we accord these privileges and accommodations to other officers under the Government I am in favor of giving the same consideration to the presiding officers in both branches of Congress, and therefore I support the amendment put in the bill by the Senate. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as we are in the automobile business, so far as chiefs of departments are concerned, so far as bureau chiefs are concerned, and so far as Cabinet officers are concerned, who are admittedly, in the degree of their official importance, less than the Speaker of this House and the Vice President, I am in favor of doing away with the distinction that now exists.

I do not believe it is good policy, Mr. Speaker, to furnish automobiles to the extent we have been doing, with reference to all the departments of the Government. I would cheerfully cut out that item of public expense and let public officials buy their own machines. I want to place the furnishing of these automobiles, if we furnish them, upon a different basis from that which has been given by some gentlemen.

I do not know what Vice President Marshall's financial ability is to buy his own automobiles. I have a long acquaintance with him. He lived in my district when elected, and it does not make any difference to me whether he is able to buy them or not. I believe that the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States ought to give that dignity to the positions commensurate with their importance, and I do not believe that this Congress can afford to stultify itself—and it is a stultification—by furnishing automobiles to the heads of departments and refusing them to the Speaker and to the Vice President.

I want to lend my voice against the implied statement developed in this discussion, and that is that the Vice President has been lobbying for an automobile. I have never had a word from him on the subject, and consequently I do not know anything about it; but I do know this: That the gentleman is a high-minded, patriotic citizen, and would be the last man, so far as my knowledge of him goes, to go before any committee or solicit any Senator to appropriate any amount to purchase an automobile for him. I shall vote for the motion of the gentleman from Iowa upon the ground that there should be no discrimination against the Speaker and the Vice President and in favor of the department chiefs, and because the people, I am satisfied, desire to protect the dignity and usefulness of the great positions they respectively occupy. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to move the previous question.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question before he moves the previous question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Formerly the Speaker of the House had an automobile, and it was taken away from him. What became of that automobile?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It was sold.

Mr. MURDOCK. Did we get anything for it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Five hundred dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know what we got for it. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have six minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not regard it as important whether the Vice President or the Speaker of the House desires an automobile, or whether either of them has expressed any opinion upon this subject. The Vice President did last summer make use of an automobile—and he may yet; I do not know—purchased some four or five years ago, much to the chagrin of every patriotic American citizen who saw him in it. Not able, probably, out of his own means to purchase an automobile, he patriotically used the one which the Government furnished him. We ought to have furnished him one commensurate with the position which he holds.

We authorize in this bill $25,000 for automobiles for the President of the United States in connection with other contingent expenses. Who would take that away from the President? Who would deprive the President of the United States, the greatest of the Nation, of the use of a modern, proper means of transportation from point to point? The Secretary to the President has the use of an automobile, or did have, and I presume the custom still prevails. I suppose it was paid for out of the same appropriation.

For very good reasons we pay the President a salary of $75,000 a year, besides other expenses, which amount to more than $150,000 a year. We pay the Speaker and the Vice President salaries of $12,000 each. Do we mean to say that we consider the office of Vice President and the office of Speaker of so little importance as compared with the President's office that the President may have these automobiles properly, which I think is true, but that the others ought not to have them? And because the Democratic side of the House at one time, in a moment of peevishness, aided by some of the Republican Members, largely out of personal resentment or as a partisan political move, took away the automobile from the Speaker, is no reason why now, without regard to partisan propositions or motives, you should maintain the same position.

The present Speaker of the House of Representatives, living, as he does, in not the most expensive house or most expensive quarter of the city, renting a house up on Massachusetts Avenue, not more than commensurate with the social duties of his office, is not in a very convenient place for personal transportation by walking. Yet if we deny him the right to an automobile, we propose to say that he, in his high office, with a small salary compared with the dignity of the office, shall be obliged to walk or ride in street cars. I do not have time for anything else much except riding in the street cars, unless some friend carries me home in an automobile. I see one right before me who did it night before last, and another who did the same thing last night, and I never miss the opportunity when it is offered to me.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman realizes that real economy is to have friends with automobiles.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I realize that real economy means to save time; and if the time of the Speaker of the House of Representatives is worth anything at all, it will be saved by the use of an automobile. The Speaker of the House stays here day in and day out, while most of us are home from one-third to one-half of the time during the summer months. I would give the Speaker, and the Vice President also, a method by which they could ride in Rock Creek Park every day in the hot weather and cool off. Some of you would not give him that. You will go home and take it easy, while the Speaker will remain here at his post of duty possibly all summer. I speak for the dignity not only of the Speaker, but of Congress, of the House of Representatives itself, of the United States. I believe the people are proud of the men who hold these high offices while they are in office. I believe they are proud of the offices. I believe they desire to give the proper facilities for these men to perform the duties of their offices. I shall vote for the automobiles as I voted in the past. I would vote for the automobiles now, even if I had been foolishly led astray and had voted against them in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked for 10 minutes time. I think the question has been fully discussed, and at the end of the 10 minutes I shall move the previous question.

I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, the Democratic Party has always stood for the strictest economy in the administration of public affairs. The record our party has made for economy since coming into power has attracted the attention and won the universal approval of all the people. When we assumed control waste and extravagance permeated every branch of our public service. An army of men were on the pay rolls who were performing but little, if any, service for the Government, but who were given places because of some political service rendered the party then in power.

Mr. Speaker, we all remember what followed the election of a Democratic House in 1910. Under Republican rule the employees of the House were so numerous they were actually in the way, and, in fact, greatly interfered with the transaction of the public business. The first thing this Democratic House did was to appoint a committee to investigate and report the amount of help actually needed in carrying on its business. The report of that committee showed conclusively that a very large number of men were on the pay rolls who were rendering absolutely no service whatever to the Government, but who had been given places because they were ward politicians and had rendered some political service for their party. When the report of the committee had been adopted and useless and unnecessary positions were declared vacant, we had reduced the running expenses of the House over $100,000 per year. Think of it. For 16 years under Cannonism this unnecessary expenditure of the people's money, this criminal waste, this burden upon the taxpayers, continued until nearly $2,000,000 had been given away to those who were rendering no service whatever to the Government of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we not only saved the taxpayers over $100,000 annually on the running expenses of the House, but immediately following the inauguration of President Wilson waste and extravagance was weeded out of all the departments of Government and millions of dollars saved for the people. This administration has been entirely free from scandal so far as the expenditure of the public funds are concerned, and now an appreciative people, regardless of party, are loud in their praise of the work done, the reforms inaugurated, and the vast amount of money saved for the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. Speaker, during the eight years I have been a Member of this House, I have vigorously opposed every form of extravagance and useless and unnecessary expenditure of the people's money. We must not forget that we are spending money collected through taxation from an already overburdened people, and that it is our duty to make their burdens lighter rather than heavier. We should not forget that a large part of the Government taxes are paid by those who earn their bread by the sweat of their faces; by men and women working in the mills and the factories and on the farms.

Mr. Speaker, the proposition before us this morning is whether we shall appropriate $9,000 for the purpose of buying two automobiles—one for the use of the Vice President and one for the use of the Speaker of the House. There is no one here who has a greater admiration for the Vice President of the United States than myself, but I do not believe he has even intimated to any one that he wants the Government to furnish him, at the expense of the taxpayers, an automobile for his private use. When he was governor of Indiana he refused to accept an allowance for house rent, an appropriation for which had been made, and I am quite certain he is just as conscientious now as he was then.

So far as the present Speaker of the House is concerned, we know where he stands upon this question. I followed his leadership in the Sixty-first Congress and voted with him against an appropriation to buy automobiles for a Republican Speaker and a Republican Vice President. Now that our party is in power, I do not intend to reverse myself and vote away the people's money to buy automobiles for either a Democratic Vice President or a Democratic Speaker. I am sure every Member present will agree with me when I say that CHAMP CLARK is one of the greatest Speakers who ever presided over the deliberations of this body in the history of our country. [Applause.] He is a man of such irreproachable integrity of character that all men are constrained to acknowledge his virtues and all applaud his democratic simplicity. He has not asked for an automobile, and I do not believe he wants it. I followed him in his fight for economy in the Sixty-first Congress and I shall stand for economy now.

Mr. Speaker, some time during the day we will vote upon the question of mileage for Senators and Representatives, and I want to once more state my position upon that question. Time and again I have introduced bills to reduce the mileage to what I thought would cover actual expenses, and time and again voted for the reduction. When the bill under consideration passed the House we reduced the mileage to actual expenses, but the Senate struck it out and restored the present rate of 20 cents per mile. When the vote is taken I shall stand by the action of the House reducing it to actual expenses for one trip only during each session.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I want to say that this administration has made an enviable record, so far as economy is concerned, in the administration of Government business. Let us not mar that splendid record by voting out of the Treasury a single dollar except when it is absolutely necessary. We owe this to those who have trusted us with the management of their affairs. Let us not forget we are servants of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, as has been stated, when this question was before Congress in 1910 in the form of a provision to supply the Speaker with an allowance for maintenance of an automobile practically every Democrat on the floor voted against it. At that time the honorable Speaker of this House was the minority leader, and the speech that he made on that occasion, I think, will go down in history as one of the greatest short speeches that he ever made in this House. He stated that he did not believe it was necessary to good legislation, necessary for the dignity of the Speaker of this House, or necessary in any way except for the personal comfort of the man who occupies the Speaker's chair that he should have an automobile. The minority leader of the House has become the Speaker, and I dare say there is not a man on this floor upon either side who has served while he has filled that honorable position who finds fault with him for his conduct of that office. No man could be fairer than he. It was charged upon that occasion that we were cheeseparing because we moved to strike out $2,500, or whatever the amount might have been, for the maintenance of the automobile of the Speaker and of the Vice President of the United States; and while the Speaker of this House is a man who has not grown rich in this world's goods, he has served the people honorably, faithfully, and efficiently, and I am sure that the man who now occupies the chair would rather have the respect and confidence of the people of the country and of the district that sends him here than he would to change his position on this subject and take any automobile that this House could vote for him. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. POU. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think the Speaker really needs an automobile more than does the President?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not care to enter into a discussion of that. That may be true.

Mr. POU. But is it not important to enter into a discussion of it?

Mr. FOSTER. It may be that he needs it more. I am not saying that there is not a Member of this House who does not at times feel the need of some way of getting about more easily and quickly than he does on the street cars.

Mr. POU. We are giving the President $25,000 a year for this purpose, and I would like the gentleman to say candidly if the Speaker, having to come here every day, and having to go about more than the President, is not in more need of an automobile than is the President.

Mr. FOSTER. It may be true. The great commoner who occupies the Speaker's chair does not ask for this automobile, and I am sure if he were consulted he would say to this House the same thing that he did in 1910, and that he does not care for it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the House agreed to a conference report appropriating $10,000 for automobiles to be run in connection with hog cholera. If we deny this request of $9,000 for automobiles to the Speaker and Vice President, to whom does the gentleman think we ought to offer our congratulations?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, the gentleman may bring up many instances of abuses in the Government service, but that is not an excuse in this case. The automobile business is an abuse by the officials of this Government that ought to be stopped. The other day it was shown that one official had two $4,000 automobiles. Is there any excuse for it?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. My colleague knows that yesterday we agreed to the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill which authorized the expenditure of $10,000 for automobiles in the connection with the study of hogs. Does the gentleman not think it just as important to spend a little money on the human side, for our high officials?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I think that is no excuse. We probably furnish motor trucks for departments that may be necessary.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but these are not motor trucks. They are automobiles for riding purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. A motor vehicle for the purpose of getting around the city, wherever it may be necessary, might not be out of place, but the wholesale furnishing of these vehicles is an abuse, but I will state to my friend that I do not want to compare the Speaker of this House with the question of carrying a few men around about the country in investigation of the hog-cholera business. There is no comparison in the two. I do not think those are parallel cases at all. We all realize that there is an easy way of getting around in the city of Washington. I would like to see the Speaker of this House have an automobile. I think so well of him that I would like to see him have the very best the market can afford, but I know the Speaker well enough to believe that he does not desire one at public expense, and I think he meant what he said in that great speech that rather than do this he would be in favor of increasing the salaries of these men sufficiently to stop all these perquisites in the way of automobiles and other things which are voted by Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman be willing to compromise on a motor cycle for the Vice President? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois one minute more.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Wyoming, as usual, attempts to be funny when he proposes such a ridiculous question.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman has not answered my proper question.

Mr. FOSTER. The question was so ridiculous that it needed no answer, and so senseless that one could not give a sensible answer.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield? I will try and propound one that is proper.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I can not yield, for I have not the time for such questions on that side.

Mr. MANN. Embarrassing questions.

Mr. FOSTER. No; not embarrassing; but gentlemen on that side are continually wanting to take out of the Treasury the people's money. When you think of the thousands and millions of people who labor in this country who have to pay the taxes, we ought to be more careful of the expenditures.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Not now.

Mr. FOSTER. And when you talk about saving a few thousand dollars it is "cheeseparing," and when you talk about saving millions you are "crippling the Government."

Mr. MANN. We can save this on mileage.

Mr. FOSTER. We will save it all on both.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HULINGS].

Mr. HULINGS. Mr. Speaker, if this were a proposition to abolish the entire practice of furnishing automobiles and instead give these officials of the Government commensurate salaries to properly discharge their public duties, I would be in favor of it. Or if it were believed that an automobile clothed a Member of the House with dignity, I think it would be a good investment to buy an automobile for every Member of the House. [Applause.] But I do not believe that the Speaker of this House needs to be clothed with dignity by the use of an automobile. CHAMP CLARK clothes himself with dignity wherever he goes. [Applause.]

I do not believe, on the other hand, in this pretense of Democratic, Jeffersonian simplicity and pennyroyal economy. [Laughter.] The time will come when these men will be traveling with aeroplanes instead of automobiles. We have left that period when the President of the United States could ride his horse down the avenue, hitch him to the fence, and come in to be sworn as President of the United States. We are living in a different time, and so long as it is the practice to buy automobiles for subordinate officers of the heads of the Government, I am fully in favor of buying automobiles for the two presiding officers in the Capitol. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time is exhausted.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. And on that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 129, nays 130, answered "present" 3, not voting 171, as follows:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a recapitulation of the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky). The Clerk will recapitulate the vote. There was a great deal of confusion in the House when this vote was taken, so much so that this recapitulation is taken. The Chair must insist during the recapitulation of the vote that there must be order in the House. When order is not maintained the Chair will stop the Clerk from recapitulating the vote.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting "aye"——

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I did not hear my name called on the list just recapitulated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recorded as having voted "aye."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks gentlemen had better wait for these inquiries until the recapitulation has been completed.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the House is not in order. These gentlemen are not entitled to stand around in front of the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentlemen who are inquiring as to how they are recorded, at least according to the custom, have the right to be here immediately in front of the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk resumed and completed the recapitulation of the vote.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How is the gentleman from South Carolina recorded?

Mr RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I am not recorded. I was in my office and the bells there did not ring the second time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman in the House listening when his name was called?

Mr. RAGSDALE. No, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not qualify.

Mr. MURDOCK. How would the gentleman have voted?

Mr. RAGSDALE. I would have voted "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to the pension bill passed this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted——

Mr. MANN. What is it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has made a request to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. On what subject?

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. On the pension bill this morning—simply to put in a statement in regard to the case of Mrs. Woods.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request, having received a memorandum from the clerk of the committee confirming what I stated to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] None being heard, leave is granted.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request in reference to the amendment I offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adhere to its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard for a moment upon that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And on that I move the previous question.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I had the floor, if it comes to that. The gentleman was entitled to the floor, but he sat down, and I was recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No——

Mr. MANN. That is the fact. I would not have insisted on it, but the gentleman wants to cut off debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman from Illinois did not have the floor and he has never been recognized by the Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman made a motion——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the previous question had already been ordered and debate is not in order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman made a motion and took his seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] made a motion. When the Chair was about to put the motion the gentleman from Illinois arose and addressed the Chair, and was recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the previous question had already been ordered on the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. That is not so. The previous question could not have been ordered on this motion, because it could not have been made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This motion might be in order after the previous question was ordered. The Senate amendment was before the House. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moved that the House further insist on its disagreement. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] offered a preferential motion that the House recede and concur. The gentleman from South Carolina had the floor, yielded time, and finally moved the previous question, which was adopted. There is no more debate in order on any motion affecting this amendment. The gentleman from South Carolina only offered his motion to adhere, on the ground that it would be a preferential motion, but it is not debatable, because debate has been cut off upon this Senate amendment and any motions that may be made to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] made a motion to further insist on disagreement. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] made a preferential motion. The gentleman from South Carolina then moved the previous question, which would be operative upon the two pending motions. The gentleman from South Carolina, after the vote, abandoned the motion which he had made and made a new motion, that the House adhere to its disagreement. The previous question was not operating upon that motion, and could not be operating upon that motion, because it was not pending. Now, the gentleman from South Carolina might have moved the previous question simply upon the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD]. And the gentleman from South Carolina only moved the previous question. It was only operative upon the motions which were pending, and the gentleman from South Carolina, knowing that fact, endeavored to take me off the floor after I had secured recognition by again moving the previous question. He knew that he had not moved the previous question on the motion to adhere. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] endeavors to make it out that that motion applies. Mr. Speaker, the House might be perfectly willing to order the previous question on the motion that the House further disagree, which sends the bill back to conference, and quite unwilling to order the previous question on the motion to adhere on a Senate amendment relating to the Senate, where the House would discourteously refuse to permit any further conference on an amendment in which the Senate was especially interested, and the ordering of the previous question on the one motion can not be considered as ordering the previous question on the other motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit me, I think I can find a ruling here. What is before the House is Senate amendment No. 20. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] was recognized and entitled to the floor. He offered a motion to further insist upon the disagreement of the House to that amendment. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] offers a preferential motion. The motion was recognized, but it did not take the gentleman from South Carolina from the floor, and he still controlled the time. After discussion had continued for some time he moved the previous question. The ordering of the previous question covers the amendment and all intermediate motions. That has been the uniform practice of the House. I doubt very much myself whether any other motion was in order, the previous question again having been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The situation, as the Chair understands it, is this: The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] had the floor. He himself moved that all debate cease in 10 minutes. The question arose on the adoption of the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Iowa. Upon that question the gentleman from South Carolina moved the previous question, which was adopted. After the vote had been taken and announced upon that question, the gentleman from South Carolina arose, addressed the Chair, was recognized, and he made a motion. Thereupon he took his seat. At that juncture the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] arose, addressed the Chair, and was recognized. The Chair is of the opinion——

Mr. FITZGERALD. The question was never stated from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the Chair, if the Chair will permit me, to this fact: The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] made his motion. The question was never stated by the Chair or from the desk.

Mr. MANN. It was stated by the Chair, and such a question is never stated by the Clerk.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment. Whereupon the gentleman from Illinois said, "Mr. Speaker, I wish to be heard on the proposition," but was not formally recognized by the Chair. Now, I appeal to the RECORD if that is not a correct statement of what occurred; and I think if the Chair will examine the RECORD, he will find that the gentleman [Mr. MANN] merely made that statement without recognition on the part of anybody.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. I rose and addressed the Speaker, and the Speaker recognized the "gentleman from Illinois."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The RECORD is the best evidence.

Mr. MANN. The RECORD never shows that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The record kept by the reporters shows what is done on the floor and is the best evidence of what occurred.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that the record of the reporter does not show the fact that the Chair says, "The gentleman from Illinois" in recognition. It never shows that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the Chair will permit me further, I want to call attention to this fact: The gentleman from South Carolina made a motion originally that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment. Thereupon the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] moved to recede and concur, which was a preferential motion. Upon that motion the previous question was demanded by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], and debate was closed. Now, I insist, Mr. Speaker, that after the preferential motion was rejected the question, of course, recurred upon the motion made by the gentleman from South Carolina, and debate has been closed upon the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the previous question as ordered applied only to the preferential motion made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], and that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has the floor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take the control of the time from the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], who inadvertently lost the floor in the effort to cut off debate. I am perfectly willing to yield the time to the gentleman if he will yield me some time.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MANN. I would like 5 or 10 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the floor to the gentleman from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois yields his time to the gentleman from South Carolina, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Carolina. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. A moment ago we had a roll call on the motion. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] came out in front and qualified to vote, and his name was called, and he voted "aye." I asked for a recapitulation of the vote, and the Speaker pro tempore ordered a recapitulation of the vote, and the names of those voting "aye" were read. The gentleman from Wisconsin called the attention of the Speaker pro tempore and of the House to the fact that he had voted "aye"; that he had not heard his name read among those voting "aye"; that he was informed by the Clerk that his name was recorded as voting "aye." I now find by an examination of the roll call that his name is not recorded at all.

It seems to me, when we have a roll call, and then a recapitulation of the vote, and then have the Clerk's attention called by the gentlemen who have responded to the fact that their names were not called, that among those three processes we ought to be able to have a correct roll call. In this particular case it would have made the vote 129 to 130, and I was told a while ago, while the roll call was in progress, that one gentleman was willing to change his vote from "no" to "aye" if that would carry the result. I think the clerks ought to be more careful in keeping these roll calls. I ask that the gentleman's name be recorded as he voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER Mr. Speaker, is the statement of the gentleman from Illinois verified by the clerks who kept the tally?

Mr. MANN. I leave it to the Clerk. I have seen the original roll call. It is verified, unless they have monkeyed with it since.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The statement made by the gentleman from Illinois is correct.

Mr. FOSTER. The name of the gentleman from Wisconsin is not recorded on the original list?

Mr. MANN. It is not recorded at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If no objection is heard, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] will be recorded as voting "aye."

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not want any time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate amendment, relating to the convenience of the President of the Senate. It is a matter which relates to the Senate. The House now, by a narrow vote, which would have been reversed if the Clerk had kept the correct tally, according to my advices, has refused to concur in the Senate amendment, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], withdrawing the ordinary motion that the House further insist to its disagreement and thereby send the amendment back to conference, now moves that the House adhere to its disagreement to the Senate amendment. It does not go back to conference. That is the result of it. The House, if it moves to adhere, says that it will under no circumstances allow this amendment. It will rather let the bill fail of becoming a law.

That is not courtesy. It would be an act of gross discourtesy to the Senate of the United States. I do not often rise on the floor of this House for the purpose of defending the Senate. I am much more apt to criticize the Senate. But in the ordinary course of business between two equal parliamentary bodies, each of which must act upon a measure before it can become a law, it would be an act of gross discourtesy for the House to refuse a further conference upon a Senate amendment which related to the conveniences of officers of the Senate.

I hope the House will not be put in that attitude, because if it does, and I were a Senator, I would resent the discourtesy and let the bill go to hades before I would let the House run over the Senate in that way. [Applause.]

I do not believe that the Senate is made of such cowardly men that they will not defend their rights in the matter. If it were an ordinary matter that had been in conference several times, which did not relate to the convenience of the Senate, it is occasionally the custom to adhere. I doubt whether there are a dozen gentlemen in this House who can remember any occasion when the House has adhered to an amendment or to a disagreement to an amendment. That means the end of negotiations. That means the end of consideration. I hope the House will not be put in the attitude which it will occupy if it adopts this discourteous motion.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. One minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of confirming the statements of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in reference to my vote on the last record vote. I took the pains of going to the well to have my vote recorded in the affirmative, and I also rose at the completion of the recapitulation of the affirmative vote for the purpose of asking if my name appeared in the recapitulation list, and I was informed that it did so appear. Now, I am informed that my name at the time of the announcement of the vote was not recorded at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recalls quite distinctly the appearance of the gentleman from Wisconsin before the Clerk's desk to ask the question which he did ask, and the answer that was given him.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I think I can obviate the main difficulty. My original motion was to further insist upon the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment numbered 20. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the last motion and let the vote be taken on my motion that was made in the beginning.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman's motion, however, does make this difference, does it not: The motion that he has just made to further insist means that this transaction is still open? To adhere means to close the transaction?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I understand that that is the parliamentary condition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The House could still recede.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We could still recede.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Would a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That would depend on who made the motion.

Mr. MURDOCK. There has been intervening business since then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think that makes any difference. The rules provide that a motion to reconsider may be made on the same day or the following day.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my last motion to adhere be withdrawn, and that the vote be taken upon the original motion that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The previous question has already been ordered on that, half an hour ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, is the previous question on the first motion of the gentleman from South Carolina now operative, after there has been discussion on a second motion which he made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If we return to that motion, the Chair is inclined to the opinion that the previous question applies. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. MANN. What is that motion?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In order that it may be before the House the gentleman will state it or the Clerk will read it.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the motion is that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 20.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is my motion.

Mr. MANN. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from South Carolina. On that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask that the motion be stated.

Mr. MANN. A vote "aye" is against automobiles and a vote "no" is for them.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 20. On that motion the gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted.

Mr. BORCHERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
